What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

A Sane Fourth.

Before this shall be in print, the glorious Fourth will have come and gone. It is to be hoped that it will be really a glorious Fourth. But it can not be made glorious by fire-works alone. In particular, it is to be devoutly hoped that it will be a bloodless Fourth. Not altogether and absolutely bloodless, of course, for that would be too much to expect, but comparatively and reasonably free from painful and fatal miscarriages of the patriotic impulse to celebrate. Last year in Chicago alone there were 26 killed and 670 seriously injured in celebrating the Fourth of July. If such a celebration, though bloody, were in the interest of a true patriotism, one might well conclude that it was worth the price. The killing of a few score people and the wounding of a few hundred is not a matter of so great magnitude, when the welfare of a nation is concerned, but that it may be borne with equanimity. But the case is different when one is forced to believe that our current method of celebration is even more destructive to patriotism than it is to life and limb. The fact is that we habitually mistake noise, and the excitement which accompanies it, for almost any sort of creditable emotion which seems appropriate to the occasion. At any college gathering we call it college spirit. At a revival we call it religion. On the Fourth of July we call it patriotism. In reality, it is none of these high motives, but primarily the same impulse which moves the baby to shake his rattle and crow. But a sane Fourth does not mean a silent Fourth. There is no harm in noise, in reasonable quantities and proper times, and there may be much good in it. But noise has no value on such an occasion unless it is the expression of something deeper than the desire for noise. Perhaps it is too much to ask that there should be a return to the old-fashioned celebration with its reading of the Declaration of Independence, but it ought not to be too much to ask that the day shall be made an occasion for thinking over seriously the history of our country, its past achievements, its present needs, our individual relation to it, and for renewing our devotion to it. One can very easily lapse into the commonplace and platitudinous on this subject, but the risk of it is far less than the risk of falling into a flippant or a cynical attitude toward patriotism.

J. Hudson Taylor.

A great worker has fallen. A few months ago the "Apostle of China," the veteran Hudson Taylor, founder of what is known as "The China Inland Mission" insisted, in spite of the infirmities of advanced age, like that other great modern apostle, John G. Paton, in returning to the land of his adoption. He left for China, accompanied by his son-in-law, and safely reached his destination, but died suddenly at Chang Sha, the capital of the province of Hunan, whose population has so long prevented the entrance of the missionaries into their midst. Apart from the development of his marvelous missionary institution, the personal history of Hudson Taylor was full of extraordinary episodes. His conversion came about under singular circumstances. His parents, devout Christians, had prayed for him from his birth that he might be a godly man, but at the age of 16 he became enmeshed in the snares of skepticism. One evening when his mother was 80 miles from home she spent the time locked in a room alone in prayer for him. The father had always been very definite in his petitions, and, through the influence of a book depicting the awful spiritual darkness of China, had prayed that his infant boy might be used to carry the good news to that benighted land. Sixteen years later came the turning-point. The boy was in his home looking around for something to read. He took up a magazine and his attention was attracted by a story which turned out to be an introduction to a religious appeal. The result was that Hudson Taylor gave himself to Christ, and the impression was stamped on his soul that it was in China that the Lord wanted him. He determined to enter the field as a medical missionary and after graduating he went out in 1854 and worked so hard that in seven years he returned to England, broken in health. Several years, with another missionary, he spent in translating the New Testament into one of the Chinese dialects. During this period he gradually formed the idea of an international and interdenominational mission for those who appeared called of God, and qualified. The China Inland Mission which has employed altogether about 1,000 agents and has formed a network of stations in every one of the provinces of China, is the outcome. In 1866 Mr. Taylor again set out, accompanied by a band of 21 persons with only enough money to land them on the shores of China. No appeal was ever made to the public for funds, yet during the whole history of the mission funds have poured in and the work has been constantly extended. It was under Mr. Taylor that the interest among university men in missionary work was largely fostered. After a visit to England in 1884 he took out a remarkable band of missionaries, students and graduates of Cambridge university, and every man of them a noted athlete. The writer of these lines well remembers the effect upon the great crowd at Lord's cricket ground when C. T. Studd, one of the most famous cricketers in the world, stepped out, as captain of the Cambridge university team against the Oxonians, and those present discussed the decision of this notable athlete to go with Messrs. Stanley Smith, Cecil Polhill-Turner and other prominent university men to convert the "heathen Chinee."

Law Enforcement in Indiana.

Governor Hanly, of Indiana, during the six months since he took office, has gotten his name in that too short list of executives who believe in enforcing the laws. The Sunday closing and Sunday baseball laws gave plenty of opportunities. The resignations of police commissioners here and there have been called for because of failure to enforce the laws. The most recent case was in Michigan City, where one of the police commissioners was recently called upon for his resignation. He sent it, and with it a letter of protest in which the following words occur: "Somehow or somewhere, I conceived the idea that I would be allowed the privilege of doing my own thinking and of using my own judgment as to how police matters should be conducted in Michigan City." He says he had expected the governor to "give me the same privilege I enjoyed under the administration of former governors." The first of these statements was meant to be cutting sarcasm; as though it were the climax of unreasonableness to deprive a police commissioner of the privilege of doing his own thinking and using his own judgment as to whether the law should be enforced. The law says, for example, that saloons shall be closed on Sundays. Here, now, comes a police commissioner who soberly claims, as one of the privileges of his office, the right to say whether the saloons shall be open or closed, and he thinks the governor is most inconsistent when he insists that the legislative department of the government has already determined the matter and has not left either to the governor or the police commissioners the privilege of exercising any discretion in the matter. This sort of failure to discriminate between legislative and executive functions is a far more imminent danger than that of executive encroachment in federal affairs. Governor Hanly, like Governor Folk, thinks that laws are to be enforced, and has committed himself to a program of that sort.

A Defense of King Leopold.

King Leopold of Belgium has at last found a defender. He needed one. Henry W. Wack, F. R. G. S., in a recently published book entitled "The Story of the Congo Free State," takes the part of Leopold, who is absolute monarch of that vast region, in regard to the charges of cruelty and extortion which have been made against him and his agents. Mr. Wack gives great credit to the administration of Leopold for constructing an orderly and well governed empire out of twenty millions of people of many races and languages, all of whom were savage and many of whom were cannibals. He asserts that the Congo Free State was not created by the powers and assigned to Leopold as its ruler, as is usually stated, but was created by the constructive statesmanship of Leopold and afterward recognized by the powers. The accusations which have been made against the administration of the Free State have related chiefly to cruelties alleged to be inflicted upon the natives to extort from them heavy taxes in rubber. The author of this book says that these charges are the invention of the Liverpool rubber merchants who are jealous of Leopold's success in the business and wish to secure the partition of the Congo Free State so that they may extend their profitable trade. Mr. Wack gives his arguments with an air of authority and sincerity, and they may be taken for what they are worth. It is not easy to believe that a small group of Liverpool rubber merchants have been shrewd enough to invent so plausible a set of accusations, support them with such minute and circumstantial details, and get them believed by a vast majority of the people who are in a position to know the true state of affairs. The missionaries, who are in general a pretty sensible set of men, report the atrocities of which the government—that is, Leopold—is the beneficiary and the apparent author, as matters of first-hand knowledge. It is not our business to decide. Certainly we are not in a position to disprove in detail Mr. Wack's statements. But we are tolerably sure, from a multitude of other evidence, that Leopold is an old reprobate and we are not at all ready to accept him as the innocent victim of slanderous reports and the true benefactor of the Congo Free State.

Death of John Hay.

Secretary of State John Hay died at 12:25 o'clock Friday morning, June 30, at Newbury, N. H. Mr. Hay, who has been Secretary of State since 1898, was born at Salem, Ind., October 8,1838. He was one of the private secretaries of President Lincoln, and has been in public service ever since. Among his acts are these: He secured the reluctant consent of Great Britain to the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, making possible the construction of an isthmian canal by the United States; he was conspicuous in the negotiations with Colombia, and was the first to appreciate the master stroke of Panama independence; he threw himself directly across the path of the European powers when they would have partitioned China among themselves after the Boxer troubles, and forced the empire to an open door policy; his ringing note to the powers over the outrages on Roumanian Jews attracted world-wide attention and resulted in great reforms, which other statesmen of more devious methods had long worked for in vain; he negotiated treaties by which claims of American citizens against foreign countries may be settled amicably and speedily by arbitration; his dignified course in the Venezuelan crisis carried this country safely over a dangerous period in its history; he handled more delicate questions requiring the maximum of diplomatic tact than any other Secretary of State since the Civil War, notable among these being the release of Miss Stone, the missionary, after her capture in Turkey; the Moroccan affair, when he issued the famous "Perdicaris alive or Rasuli dead" ultimatum; the Santo Domingo affair, and the developments just prior to the outbreak of the war in the far east. The funeral services were held at Washington and the interment took place in Cleveland.

The Riots at Odessa.

The news that comes from Odessa, Russia, is of a most sensational character, and any hour may bring new and important announcements. It appears that the crew of the Russian battleship, Kniaz Potemkin, mutinied when one of their number was shot for complaining of the quality of soup served to the crew. Nearly all the officers were murdered and their bodies thrown overboard, and the vessel, together with a torpedo boat, also manned by mutineers, came into the port of Odessa, in the Black Sea, flying the red flag of revolt. The city, containing a large Jewish population (150,000 out of a total of 600,000) and other foreign elements, is never altogether at peace—a fact vividly impressed upon the writer by seeing a lively riot there in 1900. At the present time there are many workmen on strike. The presence of the mutinous vessels with guns trained on the town encouraged the strikers to resist the authorities, and rioting began. Many lives were lost, a number of warehouses along the wharf were burned, and it is reported that many of the troops joined the mutineers, only the Cossacks remaining firmly loyal. It is reported that the Georgie Pobiedonosetz has also mutinied and has joined the Potemkin, and that Admiral Kruger, in command of the Black Sea squadron, has ungeared his squadron and abandoned—temporarily, at least—any attempt to capture the two ships, both of which are now lying at Odessa.

It is never too late in life to learn; never too late to realize the fulfillment of one's "dreams of success and happy victory"; never too late to be of service to God and humanity. History teems with illustrations, names of those who have climbed to Alpine heights of wisdom and renown, and who have done their best work after their sun had passed the zenith. All things are possible for the man and the woman of any age, of ambition, self-confidence and will. Moreover, talent flowers anew in the oncoming glow of the sunset lights and the glory from the hills of God beyond. The later productions of poets and authors display genius illumined and vivified by the diviner mysteries of thought that come only to the matured intellect and ripened soul.

Has the Religious College an Assured Future?

The thought is sometimes expressed that the religious or denominational college as it is sometimes called, will not be able to compete with state institutions and that its future is, to say the least, uncertain. To the extent that this idea prevails it will tend to discourage the endowment of such institutions, for why should we invest our money in colleges that will not be able to hold their own in competition with state schools? We do not believe the statement referred to, but hold that the religious college has a definite and vastly important place in our educational work. In this article we offer some reasons for the faith that is in us.

In the first place the limited range of education in the state universities forever prevents them from developing the entire nature of man. By the requirements of law they are prohibited from teaching religion. This is not saying they are "Godless," or that they are given to skepticism. This charge we believe to be generally untrue. On the contrary we believe the influence of most of them, as far as it goes, is in favor of morality and religion. But in the very nature of the case this influence can not go far enough to inculcate Christian doctrine and Christian principles to the extent that is required in order to produce a high type of Christian character. A knowledge of the Bible, and especially a knowledge of Christianity, is essential to the best results in character building. The state schools can do something in this direction, and more than is being done in many of them, but they cannot do all that is required in order to a full-orbed, all around education of the whole man.

This fact leaves a large and important field to be cultivated by Christian institutions of learning. The whole field of education is so wide and so diversified that there is room for the state schools, without which our educational facilities would be sadly inadequate, and also for the universities built on private foundations, and for the smaller colleges established and maintained by the various religious bodies. The need for training in so many lines is so great that there is not the slightest occasion for jealousy or for the opposition of one class of schools to another. The college whose reason for being is, at bottom, Christian faith, and the desire to develop the spiritual as well as the intellectual nature, holds a unique place and fills a vital need of the times. They furnish not only the instruction that is prohibited by public schools and state universities, but they furnish what is even more vital, an atmosphere that is favorable for the highest development of Christian character, and which has in it a molding and determinative force that helps to turn young life into channels of greatest usefulness.

Our highest wish for our own colleges, is that, along with a thorough academic discipline, they may unite, not only Biblical instruction and ministerial training, but a profoundly religious spirit that will lift them entirely out of competition with state schools, because they belong to a different class. To the exact degree that our colleges are permeated with the Christ idea of life and with the Christ spirit, above that of state or other institutions, to that extent do they place themselves out of competition with state schools, and in such relation to the churches as to entitle them to their patronage and support. In so far as our colleges are purely academic and scientific they can be easily duplicated and often excelled by other institutions; but when, in addition to sufficiently liberal courses in these disciplines for ordinary purposes, they offer the supreme advantage of thorough Biblical training and a deeply religious and character-molding atmosphere, they become essential to the life of the churches they represent, and to the highest interests of the kingdom of God. The more religious they are, without being narrow or sectarian, the more essential they will be to the very life of our civilization.

Our colleges are, to a good degree, fulfilling this ideal. They are absolutely essential to the continued successful on-going of our reformatory movement. They deserve and must receive a more liberal support from the churches, if we are to hold a place of commanding influence in the religious thought and life of the times. There is in our judgment, to-day, no better investment, none offering larger returns for the advancement of New Testament Christianity, than the endowment of our colleges, and to this fact we invite the serious attention of our conscientious men of means.

Is There Anything in a Name?

Shakespeare was probably right when he said, "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." But, after all, there is frequently great potency in a name. We are now having an illustration of this in the great Baptist international convention which is assembling in the city of London, England. A large delegation of Baptists from this country will be present at this world's convention, and this is as it should be, for undoubtedly these assemblies are helpful in many ways in developing the union spirit among Christians.

But as there has been some talk about the union of the Disciples of Christ and the Baptists of this country, it is a curious turn of affairs to witness the gathering of the various wings of the Baptist denomination under simply the Baptist name, when there is so much that is not of a common character among the respective organizations represented in the great London convention. The English Baptists are much more widely separated from their American brethren, in almost every point of doctrine, than are the Disciples of Christ, but the Disciples of Christ are not called Baptist, and therefore are not expected to unite in a convention where the name "Baptist" is the password for every one who attends. The English Baptists are not only open communionists, but their churches are for the most part open for membership to Pedobaptists who wish to become identified with Baptist churches and receive into their fellowship those whom the Baptists of this country regard as unbaptized, and yet the Baptists of this country are ready to send an unprecedentedly large delegation to attend the London convention where they will freely affiliate, and even commune, with these heretical Baptist people. Could inconsistency be more forcibly illustrated in any other way? Yet we are ready to believe that the following from The Watchman is true about many churches:

"It is doubtful if there is any Baptist church in the north to-day which would refuse to allow a Christian who wishes to do so to partake of the Lord's supper with it. Some Baptist churches have by vote adopted the open communion position; most of our pastors do not give any invitation at the supper, leaving the matter of partaking to the personal liberty of everyone, and some pastors give a general invitation to all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ."

Now, the Disciples of this country do not admit to membership in their churches those who have not been immersed upon a profession of their faith. They are in almost every respect very similar in their faith and practice to the English Baptists, though they are much less inclined to views which are repudiated by the Baptists of the United States; and yet, notwithstanding this fact, the Disciples will have no part in the London convention, while all kinds of Baptists will fraternize, and even glorify the name Baptist, which with some seems to have more potency than everything else. The same curious fact is illustrated by the two wings of the Baptist denomination which recently met in St. Louis. Many of the southern churches are so strict in their denominational lines as to exclude even Baptists from the fellowship of their churches where these Baptists belong to other churches than the one where they are seeking fellowship. Many of these churches refuse to receive baptized believers of unexceptionable religious character without a rebaptism, when their first baptism was performed by some one who was not a Baptist minister. Nevertheless, these southern Baptist churches united with our northern brethren in glorifying the great Baptist denomination, simply because the word Baptist is supposed, like charity, to cover a multitude of sins

Notes and Comments.

The English people and Colonials are generally considered to be much more conservative and slow in taking up ideas than the Americans, but it seems that in the matter of Christian union the Canadians are moving with more rapidity than the churches on this side of the boundary line. The Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists have appointed five subcommittees to consist of two Methodists, two Presbyterians, and one Congregationalist to investigate the matter of union in five different aspects: doctrines, legal titles, administrative and benevolent societies, ministry and church polity. Upon the question of doctrines there is not a great amount of really vital difference of opinion. All these churches profess to follow Jesus Christ as Lord, and if they would simply take the New Testament as the basis of union, without any particular theological interpretations of it, there would not long be different denominations. The question which will be the most serious one in the way of union, if matters continue to drift, will be the adjustment of the society and church funds.

Some suggestive statistics are furnished by an examination of the reports presented by the Brooklyn presbytery, which show that the eleven largest churches, with a total membership of 10,500, added one new member for twenty-four members, while thirteen churches of less than five hundred members added one new member for thirteen members, and fifteen churches with less than two hundred members received one new member to each seven and a half old members. From which it appears that the additions to the smaller churches are more than three times as much, proportionately, as to the larger churches. It would be an interesting fact if much wider statistics could be obtained, especially for the benefit of the large and wealthy churches. These figures would seem to indicate that the church with a large membership is inclined to be self-satisfied and take its "ease in Zion," probably being content with paying an annual sum for the support of some poorer congregation that is more zealous about soul saving. What might not the stronger churches do if their members were really filled with a passion for souls!

Dr. Henry Guinness, prominent in missionary work, in a recent speech made allusion to the fact that missionary societies are getting behind in their finances. There is, he says, a real crisis in missionary history. Either must there be retrenchment or giving on such a scale as has never been before. It should be pointed out, however, that while nearly all the great societies show need of more money, the deficits in most cases have been occasioned by the greater extension of work—not by a falling off in the donations.

One of the stock arguments for denominationalism is presented in the following:

> "Moreover, the competition of sects is, within limits, a mighty engine for the propagation of religion," says the New York Evening Post. In the Middle Ages we came nearer church unity than at any time before or since. And that was a time of intellectual stagnation and religious barrenness. The lack of mind, energy, heart, is the usual effect of the disappearance of natural rivalry and legitimate competition. There are schisms that are unjustifiable, divisions that are without excuse, rivalries that are wicked. But there are compromises that crush conscience, concessions that surrender truth, combinations that annul first principles and reduce to vacuity the motive of manliness. Freedom, independence, variety, are in religion only other names for vitality.

With the general comment of the Universalist Leader on the Post's contention we agree, but we object to the argument that because things stagnated in the Middle Ages, then Christian union is not now desirable. The argument could easily be made that the stagnation of the Middle Ages was because of the departures from the apostolic church. And what about the stagnation of later times? And how much stagnation is there to-day in the churches that stand for denominational barriers?

Current Religious Thought.

The Bishop of London, who some time ago had a notable encounter with Mrs. Annie Besant on the subject of reincarnation, views with alarm the increasing interest taken by educated and thoughtful people in Christian Science. Its idealization of the healing art, he thinks, is fraught with danger. In the course of a recent lecture he also referred to the position taken by many modern thinkers with regard to the resurrection of Christ—a position which he regards as "one of the most mischievous heresies that they would have to attack—the idea, namely, that our Lord did not rise at all or that it did not matter to Christianity whether his body remained in the grave or not." The Bishop was speaking on behalf of the Christian Evidence Society and he pleaded for more and better lecturers. Mr. Compton Rickett pleaded for a change in the methods of defense and attack, averring that no concession would satisfy opponents who would deify humanity, but he also pleaded that defense should not so much be on historical grounds as on the essential righteousness of the Christian faith.

Canon Driver, the famous Oxford professor, read a paper the other day on the present position of higher criticism. Dr. Driver defined higher criticism as a literary examination into the composition and internal authority of the scriptures as distinct from the lower or merely textual criticism. On the other hand, he said, it was distinct from historical inquiry. He emphasized its value as helping to fix the stages through which the children of Israel passed; as giving a more just conception of prophecy which always spoke first to its own time; as throwing great light on the psalms, and as removing many difficulties attached to the Old Testament. That critics differed in their interpretation of minor points was, he argued, because the formation of many hypotheses is a condition of progress in various branches of study. Dr. Driver was severe on the misrepresentations to which the critics are exposed and he pointed out that in teaching children the lessons of Scripture remain, whatever their historical character. But young men, he said, ought not to be trained in antiquated notions which are the cause of the prevalent infidelity. Times of transition are always anxious, but beginnings must be made tactfully and the courageous will have their reward.

R. J. Campbell has been reading "Sixty Years of Waifdom," the fascinating story of the Ragged School Union, of London. The pioneer of this work, so far as the world considers to-day, was Lord Shaftesbury. Dr. Campbell says:

> "Now here was a great man—greater than England knew at the time—whose life was laid down for the service of the little ones in the true spirit of Christ. He was a strict churchman and I have no doubt that Cardinal Newman would be satisfied as to the validity of his baptism; but behind Lord Shaftesbury there stood another man concerning whose baptism the Cardinal could not be sure, for no one could prove that he ever underwent it. He was a simple cobbler of Portsmouth and his name was John Pounds. This man, out of his weekly pittance, for it was very small, managed to save and train and educate five hundred little savages of the slums before statesmen or ecclesiastics or wealthy philanthropists thought anything about them. He was baptized with something. What was it? It was the spirit which Jesus brought into the world. The most certain fact and certain proof of the reality of redemption is when the redeemed becomes the redeemer, one certain sign that can never be misunderstood of the presence of Christ in any man's soul. The answer to his question, 'Are you saved?' is this, 'Are you a savior?' Here was a man who had actually forgotten all about what might have happened to him in that 'bourn from which no traveler returns,' and I think I read my heavenly Father aright when I say it was from the Eternal he received the impulse which makes us regard him a baptized one indeed. Water or no water, John Pounds was baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

Editor's Easy Chair.

The rays of the morning sun, shining over the wooded heights of Macatawa, have driven away the mists of the night from the lake, which lies quietly there breathing as gently as a sleeping infant. There is just enough air stirring to rustle the leaves, and to partially unfold the starry banner which floats on a neighboring flagstaff. It is just such a morning as wooes the lover of the fine art of angling out on the little lake to the resorts of the bass. But the Easy Chair copy must be written and the bass must wait awhile. The Editor of the Easy Chair, however, is enjoying a change this morning which is quite novel. He is dictating to his wife! It is a delightful sensation! The Easy Chair this morning is of the swinging variety, which enables the occupant to assume any angle he chooses, from the perpendicular to the horizontal. It is one of the few luxuries which Edgewood-on-the-lake indulges in. It sits on the veranda and offers its hospitality to any weary passer-by who may chance to tarry a moment for rest and exchange of greetings. It answers the purpose of an Easy Chair very well when the Editor assumes the role of dictator.

Looking north from our northern veranda to the distant sky-line over the wide stretch of water, one can imagine what a wild scene of fury the winter storms must present as the waves sweep down from the far north along the shore. The end of the pier, immediately in front of us, torn and wrecked and lying half sunken in the water, bears mute witness to the violence of these storms, as do also the wrecked sidewalk and drive-way along the lake front. But the old lake looks as innocent this morning as if it had committed no depredations in all its long history. A child could row a boat on its smooth surface. And yet it has been only two days since the passengers arriving at this port on the Chicago steamers, looking pale and weary, have told stories of a rough voyage, when all on board were victims of mal de mer. The lake would say, if it could speak in its own defense against the charge of fickleness, "I am a passive body, subject to the winds that blow over me. My foam-crested billows which terrify the dwellers on land, are the children of the wind, which bloweth when and where and how it listeth."

It is gratifying, while resting a season here by the lake side, to hear good reports from the Missouri state convention and other gatherings of the brethren in different states. The Editor acknowledges, with a deep sense of gratitude, not only the official greetings sent him by the Missouri convention, through its corresponding secretary, but those contained in numerous personal letters from brethren, who were kind enough to say that "no reply to this is necessary." In this way they will permit us to acknowledge, with sincere thanks, these tokens of their brotherly love and thoughtfulness. It is not presuming too much, perhaps, to assume that our readers are sufficiently interested in the Editor's health as to justify him in reporting a steady improvement and the promise of an early return to a normal condition. The symptoms experienced before leaving the city were only friendly danger-signals to warn against further trespassing, and, having served their purpose, are rapidly subsiding. We now hope to be able to go with the "Christian-Evangelist Special" to the San Francisco convention.

Sitting by a pine-knot fire on a summer evening always produces a pleasant feeling, and we have enjoyed that pleasure several times during the past week. The weather up on the lake side this season has been almost ideal, so far, with just enough of sharpness in the atmosphere to serve as a tonic. The park is steadily filling up, especially that part of the population that lives in cottages. The hotel people come a little later. Religious services were begun at the auditorium on Sunday last, the Sunday-school being held at 3 o'clock as usual and preaching at 4. Bro. T. P. Haley was pressed into service to preach, and his sermon was most appropriate for the opening of the season, and was very helpful. Taking for his text the words of the Psalmist, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go unto the house of the Lord," he discoursed in a most fresh and interesting way on the benefits to be derived from attendance on public worship. It would be worth while for the younger ministers to study the secret of the perpetual freshness and living interest of Brother Haley's sermons. There is no "dead line" for one who keeps his heart young and his mind open for the truth of to-day.

A party of us are going up this afternoon to Pentwater for the purpose of pushing forward some of the improvements which we are making at that place. Many of those who at present are at this place, especially of our own members, expect to establish summer homes at our Pentwater resort by the next season. Some of them will let contracts for cottages this fall. We are not ambitious for a large and populous colony, but we are ambitious to have the forty acre plat of hills and winding ravines, from Lake Michigan to Lake Pentwater, occupied by Christian cottagers, who are seeking rest and recuperation where there is abundance of fresh air, pure water, cool breezes, fishing, boating, bathing, shaded paths through the woods, and last, but not least, congenial associations. This ground is now being platted, and the company will soon be in a condition to allow those who desire to do so to select their lots. When a sufficient number of cottages is located there we expect to establish religious services at an hour that will not interfere with the regular services in the town. It would be well for those desiring to form a part of this summer colony to visit the place this summer or as early as practicable, with a view of selecting their lots. None but those desiring a clean, pure, orderly resort need apply.

The Profession of the Ministry

As Seen by the College Student

By Charles F. Thwing, LL.D.

President of Western Reserve University

The ministry is called a learned profession. It is called a learned profession because only men of learning are generally qualified to enter it. Men of learning are found, in the first instance, in the college. Therefore, the interpretation which men in college give to the profession of the ministry as a calling for themselves becomes of peculiar significance.

As I talk with collegemen and as they write to me regarding the ministry, I find that they have a definite conception of its character, limitations and opportunities. Its worthiness in their thought arises from the worthiness of the Christian religion itself. College men are usually convinced that the Christian religion is of supreme consequence to all peoples. The ministry having to deal with this religion, represents, therefore, a mighty force. The ministry makes a strong appeal to the ethical sense of the college student as this sense interprets life and Christianity. The college student also has a definite interpretation of the type of man who is fitted to enter the calling. A student writes me, saying, "The man who should become a minister should be a man with a keen, broad mind; a deep, logical thinker; a man with a command of language and facts that will make him a ready and interesting speaker."

Another student gives in outline the qualities which he believes should be possessed by a candidate for this profession. "(1) Being a deeply religious man, he has a deep realization of the importance of Christianity upon the civilized world. (2) He is a deep thinker, with an aggressive mind. (3) He has an originality distinctly his own. (4) He has the qualifications of a leader. (5) He is distinctly optimistic. (6) He is without physical deformity, preferably having a strong, aggressive figure. (7) His ideal in life is the good which he can do for his fellow men rather than the money or personal gain which he can get for himself."

Another student points out certain of the positive and more inspiring elements to be possessed. He says: "It is the nobleness of any profession that appeals to men to enter it. Only those who are tremendously sensitive to the cry of the overburdened, especially in our large cities, should enter the ministry. It depends entirely upon the fitness of the man. None but the best; the large-hearted man; the man who can throw aside all selfish motives, should enter it! Any man can minister to those about him to a certain degree, but as to entering the ministry as a profession, it should be out of the question to every one except that one of marked intellectual ability and power to command. If a man has not a strong will and a strong personality, he should not impose upon mankind by trying to attain them through entering the ministry. If he is fitted, by all means enter it, for there is no higher calling."

The reasons, moreover, which urge the student to enter this calling are quite as important as is his interpretation of the calling. One student of an analytical mind specifies certain specific reasons in behalf of this choice.

"1. I am very conscious of my relation, direct relation to God.

"2. The influence, the force, of a genuine appreciation of such a relationship in the direction of open-mindedness, humility, charity and all those qualities, generally recognized as good, is very apparent to me.

"3. I am confident that there is a fundamental agreement, an underlying unity in the thoughts and feelings of all men; that is, the end toward which we seem to be progressing is the recognition of the fact—the essential element of every man's religion, stripped of all dogma and tradition, the essential element, is the same.

"4. Believing in this unity of thoughts and feelings, the universality of this essential element, I feel no hesitancy in urging men to come out of themselves, to open their eyes, to unfold themselves and enjoy that which I have enjoyed, to experience that which I have experienced."

Two other students in their writing, point out advantages of a more material character, and opportunities that are somewhat more definite. One student writes: "To a college man, the life of study and opportunity for further culture and for philosophical research are attractions not found in many occupations. Being the leader, and having the regard of a number of people, is pleasant. A college man may hope to earn, at any rate, a comfortable salary in the ministry. In fact, the material wealth is looked after, and social position is assured. The preacher may even expect his profession to win him a wife, for the minister's wife is always a desirable position." Another says that among the reasons urging a man to enter the calling is the "great opportunity to be a leader in the reforms and social improvements of his own community; a power especially felt in a village or country district. He has the time at his disposal, and is looked to for such work. Charities, investigation of the poor, etc., naturally fall to him; and if he is the proper man he can help everyone, not only in religious matters, but in every-day work. He also gets peculiar opportunities to study human nature, and comes into closer relations with his parishioners than anyone else, on certain subjects. He can give comfort to those in trouble, and encouragement to some that others cannot reach."

But the reasons which urge the student not to enter the ministry are also, possibly, more significant than those which urge him to enter it. One student says: "In order to be effective, confidence, absolute confidence, in what I am doing or saying, is necessary. Lack of confidence in the machine with which I am working, the tools I am handling, the words I am using, is inevitably followed by my failure. I have not yet found in existence the organization in which I have the confidence, the organization which properly represents, as accepted by the majority of its members, the faith that is in me. The field offered by the ministry is limited. Specialization, differentiation of functions, has characterized the development of the church. What were formerly elements or functions of the church have developed into independent institutions, as educational institutions, charities, houses for correction, help for the poor, etc."

Another, in a somewhat more selfward spirit, says: "The ministry has not the allurements or inducements for young men at the present time that it has hitherto possessed. The minister is no longer the leader of the community, or of his congregation, in thought, in culture, or even in spirituality. He is no longer the pattern for his flock in the realistic sense of previous generations. He is not more of a co-worker than a great teacher or leader. A young man who enters the ministry to-day, therefore, can scarcely attain to the eminence or wield the influence he might have done fifty years ago; nor can he expect to reach that degree of eminence or even influence to which he might attain in other lines of activity. The personal incentive to high achievement is consequently lacking. The ministry, in its ideal state, is quite altruistic. The minister must work for his congregation with only secondary regard for his own wants and likes. The degree of religion and morality which he must exercise, many men believe, is too high for a man's greatest degree of efficiency. By devoting more attention to practical, workable problems, instead of specializing, as it were, upon religion, greater results might be secured. Then, from a financial or mercenary standpoint — a standpoint which must always be considered to some extent—the ministry has few allurements. The salary is, and must continue to be, a secondary consideration. Perhaps I might sum up the objections to entering the ministry by saying, in the opinions of many men, that the end does not justify the means, that the extra good they might do mankind, including themselves, by entering the ministry, is not sufficient to justify the sacrifice to themselves in money, pleasure, etc."

Another finds a reason in a more modest or humble condition. He says: "A young man may feel that strong, brilliant men is what the ministry needs, and he does not dare offer his poor talents." Another suggests the lack of a distinct call, or the too great strenuousness of the life, or the lack of agreement with general theological opinion.

The comprehensive reason which turns college men from the ministry to-day lies not in the hardship of the calling, nor in what they would say is the fickleness of the churches, nor in the comparatively brief professional careers with which most ministers must be content. But it does lie in what they conceive to be the lack of leadership of the church in the higher affairs of the community. Whether the leadership be lost or not, the fact is that college men are inclined to believe that the leadership is lost and that it has passed over to educational and other interests. This conception, false or true, diverts men from the ministry quite as completely as if the leadership had been lost.

Under this condition, it is the duty of all college officers to seek to interpret religious and ecclesiastical conditions to their students. It should be easy for college officers to make plain to college students that the church has lost power, if power has been lost, only because the strongest and most aggressive type of character has not found itself attracted by the opportunities of its ministry. If, for a generation, the strongest men graduating from the college could become its priests and its prophets, the leadership of the church, in the highest affairs of the community, would be restored. The restoration of the church would thus result in the elevation of the ministry, and the elevation of the ministry would result in the restoration of the church to its place of light and leading.

Alexander Campbell in the Class Room

By W. T. Moore

Mr. Campbell, as a teacher in the class room, was always a striking figure. His personality was great. In many respects he was a perfect picture of physical proportion and symmetry. No one ever saw him without feeling the impress of a great character; and this fact was perhaps more distinctly realized in the class room than anywhere else. Here his great mind wrought with his body in impressing all who were present at his lectures.

His method of teaching was somewhat peculiar. Apparently he had no special rules by which he was guided in what he said. He was a rule to himself, and he himself made the rule. "Absorption by his theme" is the phrase which probably expresses fairly his method of teaching. In a few moments after taking his seat he seemed to lose all thoughts of everything else outside of the theme he was discussing. This theme seemed to take entire possession of him, and yet it was evident to all who heard him that his personality always mastered his theme. He seemed to have the power to control all resources in order to illustrate and enforce the subject under consideration.

He used very few, if any, of modern pedagogical methods. Indeed, he never seemed to care for his students to simply remember the facts to which their attention was called, it was the lesson of these facts that he wished them to reremember. He referred to the facts only that he might make the lesson more effective. His mind was specially gifted in generalizations. While he was careful about particular facts, he never rested in particulars. Nor did he seem to care very much for the philosophy of things. He was doubtless philosophical in much of his reasoning, but this was always to the end that he might be practical, and practical always in the matter of character-building. This character-building was the main consideration in all his teaching.

He was seldom humorous in the class-room; but when he did allow himself to indulge in a little side-play, it was always the genuine article. He never affected anything. His humor was spontaneous and as truthful as anything else that characterized his teaching.

Sometimes his humor was convulsive in its effect. One morning he was asking some questions about the three sons of Noah. One of the questions was, "From which son are we descended?" This question was put to a young man who was notorious for his failure to give answers correctly. The young man answered at once, "We are descended from Shem." Mr. Campbell said to the young man that he would have to try again. Meantime a mischievous young fellow, who was sitting behind the student who was under examination, leaned over and whispered, "Tell him, Ham." The somewhat embarrassed young man now said: "I beg your pardon, Mr. Campbell, I did not mean Shem, sir, I meant Ham." Mr. Campbell immediatly replied by saying, "One more guess, Mr. D., and I think you will be able to answer my question." The effect of this little incident was such that it was almost impossible for Mr. Campbell to proceed for a considerable length of time, while the blushes of the young student, who had been put to shame, only added to the applause which greeted his discomfiture.

On another occasion the young men had placed a cow in the lecture room during the night, and she was found there at the time the lecture was to begin. After the cow had been removed, Mr. Campbell took his seat as usual, and after the devotional exercises were concluded, he began his lecture in substantially the following words: "I know, young gentlemen, that you are closely allied to the animal kingdom. I have always had considerable patience with you when your animal instincts have become dominant. But I never knew that you would care to associate with yourselves in your morning class devotions one that belonged exclusively to the animal kingdom; and much less did I suppose that any of you would select a cow for his associate." The applause which followed this sally showed conclusively that the young men appreciated a clever joke, even when it was at their own expense.

Mr. Campbell was never pessimistic. If he ever looked on the dark side of things, he did not bring the dark coloring into his lecture. He did not theoretically believe the doctrine of foreordination and election, as it is usually understood by theologians; but having been reared in the atmosphere where that doctrine predominated, and having accepted it in his early life, he was doubtless influenced by it in some respects, during his entire career. This much at least he always accepted cheerfully: First, that God has a plan for managing the universe; this plan embraces what we call Providence, and third, this Providence is constantly tending toward the oversight and development of his children. He, therefore, believed that "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." His sublime faith in the promises of God to be with and sustain his own, gave Mr. Campbell his constant cheerfulness, even under the greatest trials, and enabled him to see a silver lining in every cloud.

I have frequently been asked to state some of the characteristics of Mr. Campbell as a teacher, but I have always felt how inadequate any statement must be which attempts to give an analysis of either his method or manner. I have already indicated all that can be truthfully said. Mr. Campbell himself had to be heard that he might be understood, or that the power of his teaching might be

COMMENCEMENT WISDOM

As Seen from the Dome

F. D. POWER

Every year the drift of things more or less may be determined from the utterances of baccalaureate and closing day addresses. The universal optimism of youth, standing on the threshold of active life with sheepskin in hand, is forever interesting and stimulating. "We are here. Everything will go right now," says the sweet girl graduate. "Brace up. We will take the universe in hand. The best is yet to be," declares the young man in cap and gown. Then the sages and doctors of the law come with their grave counsels, and oracular comments upon the needs of the times and the opportunities of youth, and with a mild dash of cold water upon the exuberance and enthusiasm of fresh young souls, get matters adjusted to the golden mean.

This year the great men have not been as pronounced as usual in their declarations at the giving out of degrees and diplomas. The first gentleman of the land has been talking, but has said nothing startling. Clark and Holy Cross colleges heard him and doctored him, and one of his words to the students seems a center shot. Justice he tells them is the greatest problem.

> "The greatest problem before our people, as before every modern people, is the problem of getting justice as between man and man, and this especially in industrial matters, so that the man who works with his hands and the man who has the capital accumulated by work with head and hands shall get on better together, each giving justice to the other, and each having sympathy and regard for the other, for even justice can be administered in a manner which leaves you with the heartiest dislike for the person who administers it."

This is the core of the difficulty. It covers more than conditions in Chicago. It is the trouble in Russia. It has been the real question in every conflict of sectarianism. It is at the bottom of all our race animosities and our sectional paganism. Then the president is more personal. Our young people are apt to see visions and dream dreams and need to be reminded of the call to do things. Hear him:

> "I have always felt most strongly that it is true of the nation, as of the individual, that the greatest doer must also be a great dreamer. Of course, if the dream is not followed by action, then it is a bubble; it merely has served to divert the man from doing something. But a great action, action that is really great, can not take place if the man hasn't it in his brain to think great thoughts, to dream great dreams."

Secretary Taft deals with the negro and the Chinaman and murder and divorce and the whole range of evils in his talk at Miami. When an orator is hard up he can always find the black man "in the wood pile," and he is truly an "issue." Then the yellow brother has a commercial importance for he is 400,000,000, and no word the secretary says about the Chinese Exclusion Act to please "certain unreasonable and extremely unpopular leaders of California," but meets the approval of all right thinking people. Maladministration of criminal law, and the rolling up of the figures in our divorce courts last year to 512 divorces to every 10,000 marriages, are also points well taken. Concerning his views on "inadequate official salaries" the nation is not so sure.

Princeton's one hundred and fifty-eighth has for the first time a layman to speak the baccalaureate, and his theme is "Health." Dr. Wilson strikes a true chord.

> "The ideal object of education is at once to develop and simplify the mind, simplify it by a perfect adjustment to its uses and to its environment, and such is health. The modern struggle for wealth is more like a consuming fever than a right function of health.
> "There is in many of our material achievements a touch of frenzy and distemper. Our energy is stimulated to the pitch of intoxication, lacks poise, and overleaps the bounds alike of prudence and of pleasure, hurries us panting to beds of exhaustion and of sickness; where the physician's task is to get the heat and turmoil out of our blood.
> "Let this be the clew to the labyrinth of life: Not to search for yourself, but for a way of service which will make you greater than yourself."

At Cornell President Schurman uses Cleveland and Roosevelt as examples of American character, energy, and honesty of purpose. He calls the president's action in bringing Russia and Japan together "the unparalleled thing," and "the president the most beloved and admired of Americans, whose strength lay in the world's confidence in his integrity, his fairness and his devotion to righteous ends." He thinks Cleveland will save the Equitable. "Stronger than all the forces of criticism, of disintegration, of personal rivalries, even of faulty and therefore dangerous organization is the name of that sturdy, honest, tried and tested and absolutely reliable American, Grover Cleveland. Our republic is exalted by high-minded men like Theodore Roosevelt and Grover Cleveland. It is fitting that the republic has exalted them also."

Carl Schurz is out giving advice at the University of Wisconsin and has some good things to say.

> "This republic should stand as the gentleman par excellence among nations; a gentleman scorning the role of the swash-buckler; whose hip pockets bulge with loaded six-shooters, and who flashes big diamonds on his fingers and shirt front; a gentleman modest in the consciousness of strength, and carrying justice, forbearance and conciliation on his tongue and benevolence in his hand, rather than a chip on his shoulder. If this republic is to endure and to be successful in its highest mission, it must put its trust rather in schools than in battle-ships."

At Washington Dr. O'Connor of New York preaches to the Catholic university graduates and graft, divorce, race suicide, socialism, sensationalism, materialism, commercialism, all "damning evils," save the saloon, pass in review. "Morality is no longer the decalogue of Almighty God, but good manners, ethical culture, civil righteousness, external respectability." Modern orthodoxy is "the sheerest veneer of rationalism." "Higher education has robbed the Bible of every vestige of reverence and authority. The divinity of Christ has long since been questioned and denied. There is no tenet of Christian truth that has not been assailed and, in the judgment of many, disproved. The pretense of Christianity is the thinnest sham, the vainest mockery, the most daring imposition."

My, my, what are we coming to! Morality based upon Christian dogma this speaker advocated as the remedy for the degeneracy of the age. However, our Catholic brother is not one whit more pessimistic than Dr. Dalton of Princeton. One thing he says: "The men of the present day seem to be trying to see how near they can come to the prison gates without getting behind them. 'Might is right,' and every one tries to get his fellow on the hip. I hate to see a cold-blooded, right-living rascal who has $40,000,000 teach a Sunday school class and drive the hardest bargain within the range of the law on work days. It has been said, 'the meek shall inherit the earth,' but we all want the earth nowadays."

And now comes Booker Washington, the wholesome apostle of Tuskegee, speaking at the capital of the duty of his people and the salvation through education. What is better than this?

> "Do not be ashamed of your parents. When their life is a lowly one, cast your lot with theirs and show them that you can help them to a higher and more useful life. Be what you are! No one is so unfortunate as the individual who is continuously trying to deceive the world. It is hard work for one to live in hundred-dollar style on a fifty-dollar salary. If you are poor, do not pretend to be rich. All things come to the man who lives a straightforward, honest, simple life."

He raised a great laugh when he told his audience that they now say the Japs are a white race.

felt. His teaching was more than teaching. It was teaching plus a great personality. It was teaching that made one feel he had received an increment of power, though he might not be able to understand the process by which he had come to realize this power. It was teaching which was all light, and the only use he had for material was to focalize this light and give it brilliancy. He burned his facts that the light from the burning might illuminate the world.

France at the Parting of the Ways

By William Durban

In one of the loveliest corners of France, very near the Italian frontier, these lines are being penned. Being on my way home from central Italy, my purpose is to halt at a few spots in France, and to note present conditions in this country also, after a series of explorations in some Italian provinces. Already I am discovering that all is not well with France, as all is not well with Italy, or England, or Germany, or any continental country. The great troubles of Europe may be symbolized in these few significant words—militarism, socialism, priestcraft. Each of these terms is voluminous in its implications.

At the Great Glove City.

Grenoble, where I am at the moment, is one of the delectable spots of the earth's surface. For instance, I am writing on a balcony in full view of glorious Mont Blanc. I constantly note that people generally think that Switzerland owns Europe's highest mountain. But Mont Blanc belongs to France since she annexed Savoy. It is just west of the Swiss boundary. Grenoble is the capital of Dauphiny and is dominated by a noble snow covered range of the Dauphiny Alps which run on to join the Alps of Savoy, Mont Blanc towering to the eastern view as monarch of them all. Grenoble, with its 70,000 people, is chiefly busy making gloves. Beauty of environment and utility here go hand in hand. The people all seem to be prosperous and might be supposed to be all contented. But the satisfaction is only superficial, and everywhere in France, discontent is seething. The famous Disestablishment bill is still being steadily discussed clause by clause in the French parliament. But this process of separation of church and state has been under way for two years. M. Combes, the popular ex-Premier, went out of office in order to be able all the better to promote the movement. The present bill is a modification of his proposal. His was extremely drastic. After Disestablishment the priests were to be allowed to officiate only in their own cantons. But M. Rouvier, the new Premier, is relaxing some of the more stringent propositions.

The Bitter Preliminary.

The part of France, the department of Dauphiny, has been peculiarly affected by that sweeping and salutary clearing away of monastic establishments which created such a commotion three years ago. In a lonely Alpine nook a few miles from Grenoble, just under the snows on the mountain slope, stands the famous convent called La Grande Chartreuse. All the world knows of the cordial named after this monastery. The secret of the manufacture of this liqueur belongs to the monks and their convent had accumulated immense wealth by its sale. Like other monks who would not submit to the new enactments of the Law of Associations, they had to depart, and they emigrated to Tarragona in Spain. Now, I find that Grenoble and Chambery and other towns round here mourn for the monks. But I also find that down at the bottom of their hearts the people cherish purely sordid reasons for their regrets. In a conversation with a very intellectual citizen of Grenoble I was treated to some frank expressions of his ideas on current events. "The action of the government is shameful. In this part of France we execrate it. The monks are good men, and they were generous—bien generaux, bien generaux!" And as he rattled on in his voluble way, he kept emphasizing this special quality of the monkish generosity. The whole estimate was mercenary. This is too typical by far of the French national mind. Much as I admire the French people for their geniality, and hospitality, their chivalry, and patriotism, their artistic taste and their amazing intellectual acumen, I cannot help seeing that, as a people, they seem to have lost all sense of high spiritual motives. They are, in fact, a very unspiritual nation. The destruction of the Huguenot element in the Reformation era was fatal to France. Her future depends on a reaction in the direction of Evangelicalism. Is such a reaction possible? No one can venture to say. If it be impossible, then France will drift into impotence like that of Spain.

What Will "La Grande Nation" Choose?

The hopeful omen is that France has disestablished the monk, and now seems to be about to disestablish the church, or rather churches, for there are several established communions besides the Gallican Catholic. Should the bill go through then France will like Italy have adopted Cavour's maxim—"A free church in a free state, that is liberty." But what then? A stupendous question will then arise for the popular decision. That decision will probably be made at the general election next spring. Will a large number of athiestic socialists be returned to parliament? If so, France will have sealed her fate, for she will have settled the fact that her politics are to be godless. At this moment the omens are mixed. Socialism is rapidly gaining ground in Germany, Italy and France, while in England it is practically inert and impotent. But in France a new split has just divided the parliamentary socialists into two factions, one of these led by Herve, an absolute anarchist, who has largely increased his following of late, owing to his denunciation of conscription, the others by Vaillant, a more moderate champion. Herve violently declaims against socialism as leading to war and calls on all reservist soldiers to refuse to serve. He proclaims a purely international alliance of workers against capitalism, apart from race or country. And he is creating a new sensation and a very lively one, which may create fresh complications.

FROM THE EDITOR.

He Forgot That He Had a Stomach.

Talking of food, there is probably no professional man subjected to a greater, more wearing mental strain than the responsible editor of a modern newspaper.

To keep his mental faculties constantly in good working order, the editor must keep his physical powers up to the highest rate of efficiency. Nothing will so quickly upset the whole system as badly selected food and a disordered stomach. It therefore follows that he should have right food, which can be readily assimilated, and which furnishes true brain nourishment.

"My personal experience in the use of Grape-Nuts and Postum Food Coffee," writes a Philadelphia editor, "so exactly agrees with your advertised claim as to their merits, that any further exposition in that direction would seem to be superfluous. They have benefited me so much, however, during the five years that I have used them, that I do not feel justified in withholding my testimony.

"General 'high living' with all that the expression implies as to a generous table, brought about indigestion, in my case, with restlessness at night, and lassitude in the morning, accompanied by various pains and distressing sensations during working hours. The doctor diagnosed the condition as 'catarrh of the stomach,' and prescribed various medicines, which did me no good. I finally 'threw physics to the dogs,' gave up tea and coffee and heavy meat dishes, and adopted Grape-Nuts and Postum Food Coffee as the chief articles of my diet.

"I can conscientiously say, and I wish to say it with all the emphasis possible to the English language, that they have benefited me as medicines never did, and more than any other food that ever came on my table. My experience is that the Grape-Nuts food has steadied and strengthened both brain and nerves to a most positive degree. How it does it, I cannot say, but I know that after breakfasting on Grape-Nuts food one actually forgets he has a stomach, let alone 'stomach trouble.' It is, in my opinion, the most beneficial as well as the most economical food on the market, and has absolutely no rival." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Education and Our Progress*

By W. A. Parker

Any discussion of our educational problems, looking to any alteration of our educational policies, should begin by according full honor to our colleges as they are, and to the work they have done. The work of our brethren in founding and maintaining colleges, and the sacrifices borne by the splendid men and women who have taught therein, have invested our institutions of learning with a spirit savoring of the holiest devotion. All honor to them! Their best honor is the perfection of a plan to perpetuate the work to which they gave their lives. The need of a more nicely adjusted system of relating the several schools to the churches, both as a means to more liberal support, and as a requisite to the successful equipment of the ministry, argues not against the past value of our colleges, but seeks for them the highest future efficiency.

The rise of our educational institutions has been marked by those features of spontaneous enthusiasm for local enterprises, which have sought the fostering of the cause in a given section, rather than the promotion of the larger ends which have later come into view. The school of any given district has been expected to give visible returns of ecclesiastical supremacy, to the supporting group of neighboring congregations. It is gratifying to note that what is always true of a worthy and spirit-led movement, has been true of our educational institutions, that the secondary results of their efforts have far outrun the primary purposes of their founders. With few exceptions our ministers were trained in our own schools. It has been true, that what was lacking in the way of facilities for advanced instruction was atoned for in the inspiring contact provided with men and women of God. The formation of a balanced and impartial plan for the relation of the colleges to one another, and for the more strict allotment to each of its working territory; the more complete agreement between the churches and the colleges, as to the support to be given, and the training to be offered; together with a central institution of ample endowment and efficient leadership to give the highest grade of theological training, will for the present furnish an adequate working basis for the educational problem, now insistently clamoring for our attention.

The endeavor to so relate our colleges and churches as to establish the mutually helpful relation desired, requires that this last mentioned feature of ministerial training be made the subject of studied adaptation. Our progress as a people has been chiefly due to the popularity of our plea, urged with all the tremendous urgency of an enthusiastic evangelism. At the present time, though no policy is advocated that involves the abandonment of our missionary methods, it has become apparent that the indoctrination of our membership, and their growth in the essentials of Christian culture, requires abilities and training of a different order from these bolder and more aggressive traits so pronounced in the ministry of the past.

The ministerial training offered in the leading theological seminaries of the land has been greatly amplified in recent years. Biblical theology has become a science. Archeology has uncovered the records of the silent centuries, and raised up for the scriptures a great cloud of witnesses. The study of Greek and Hebrew has been supplemented by an acquaintance with their cognate languages; and science in its relation to the facts of religion has found a large place in the curriculum. Not less essential than all these, is the study of the social application of truth, in its relation to economics, civil ethics and moral reform. The contributions of psychology to the subject of religion promise to readjust the methods of culture into harmony with individual development.

The age of our pastoral activity has come. The problem of the Disciples is one of conservation. The cry of our churches is for trained men. The solution of our difficulties is the provision of a school of preachers, whose knowledge of the gospel and how to preach it is supplemented with an adequate knowledge of pastoral and practical theology.

In a larger way, our relations with the surrounding religious bodies involve the requirement of ministerial courtesy. The closer touch into which the spirit of fraternalism has led the various groups is all the more an occasion of testing the spiritual culture of our leaders, and their fitness to propose and foster a more intimate relation.

The need of theological training may be partially supplied to us by the existing institutions whose denominational features are becoming less prominent. It may even be conceded that the breadth of culture necessarily resultant from contact with the standards and methods of a dissenting body will inure to the advantage of the student, and his work. But the stimulus to seek such educational advantages is largely wanting among us. It is contended that the establishment of such an enterprise will both suggest the needs of the ministry, and lead the churches to demand of their teachers the highest possible efficiency.

IN COLONEL'S TOWN
Things Happen.

From the home of the famous "Keyhnel Keeyartah of Cartersville," away down South, comes an enthusiastic letter about Postum.

"I was in very delicate health, suffering from indigestion and a nervous trouble so severe that I could hardly sleep. The doctor ordered me to discontinue the use of the old kind of coffee, which was like poison to me, producing such extreme disturbance that I could not control myself. But such was my love for it, that I could not get my own consent to give it up for some time, and continued to suffer, till my father one day brought home a package of Postum Food Coffee.

"I had the new food drink carefully prepared according to directions, and gave it a fair trial. It proved to have a rich flavor and made a healthy, wholesome and delightful drink. To my taste, the addition of cream greatly improves it.

"My health began to improve as soon as the drug effect of the old coffee was removed, and the Postum Coffee had time to make its influence felt. My nervous troubles were speedily relieved and the sleep which the old coffee drove from my pillow, always came to soothe and strengthen me after I had drunk Postum—in a very short time I began to sleep better than I had for years before. I have now used Postum Coffee for several years and like it better and find it more beneficial than when I first began. It is an unspeakable joy to be relieved of the old distress and sickness." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

"To say we are delighted with 'Gloria in Excelsis' is to put it mildly. I am specially pleased with the arrangement and rich contents of the material for the various responsive services, and Mrs. A. is enthusiastic over the splendid variety and large collection of the world's classic hymns. Pertaining to the Ministry

By W. J. LHAMON

A few weeks ago I sent the following questions to fifty of our best known preachers in Missouri:

1. How many preachers have gone out from your congregation during its history?
2. Has your congregation ever assisted financially any man to prepare for the ministry?
3. What encouragement has your congregation recently given publicly or privately to young men to enter the ministry?
4. Why are young men not entering the ministry in greater numbers?

Some twenty replies are in hand, and I have sought to collate them and give the substance of them with the following results:

Five report no minister sent out during their history. One reports one young man sent forth into the ministry in thirty-six years! One reports two; three report one; two, four; two, five; two, six.

Nine report as never having helped men into the ministry. Others report indefinite help to one or two. Others, as helping indirectly by gifts to colleges. Evidently the direct help has not been great.

Eight pastors report as having given encouragement to men to enter the ministry by exalting in their sermons the calling, and enforcing its claims. Some report a lifelong care in the matter, seeking available young men, and winning them personally if possible. But these are the exceptions. I am led to fear that there is not enough care in this crucial matter on the part of preachers and churches.

If those who replied may be judged as on the average somewhat lax, what must be our conclusion regarding the thirty who make no reply?

One man says he has ceased advising young men to enter the ministry, and that he even discourages them from doing so. In three years he has advised three young men to enter other professions, and they have taken his advice. His reasons do not seem convincing to me. Mainly, they are summed up in the unbecoming conduct of preachers toward preachers, and in the fact that nowadays so much of our church work goes according to various machines. This man has suffered fearfully, or he is sadly mistaken from some other cause. One rejoices in the belief that he stands alone.

The replies to the fourth question are of greatest interest perhaps. I have given more space to them. They are worthy of careful study. They are as follows:

"Poor financial support in contrast with large salaries in other callings. Early deadline. Failure of churches to encourage their best young men to enter the ministry."—R. G. Frank, Liberty, Mo.

"Ministers and churches take no interest in the matter, or a feeble interest at best. Suggestions: 1. Bible college men must arouse the brotherhood. 2. Young men of limited primary education must be admitted to our schools. 3. Funds must be provided to aid them."—G. A. Hoffmann, St. Louis, Mo.

"Perhaps the church is not praying the Lord of the harvest that he shall send forth laborers. I know of no other reason, unless it be the indifference of Christian parents, who ought to urge this high calling on their sons. I do not think the hardships of the ministry deter many."—W. F. Richardson, Kansas City, Mo.

"Asked this question at a county convention. A farmer said, 'Hands are scarce. We need our boys on the farm.' To this I would add: short pastorates; small salaries; decline of the country church and little inspiration where formerly we got many of our preachers. Finally, nobody asks them."—Louis Cupp, Platte City, Mo.

"I have found more shrinking from the spiritual than the financial side."—A. W. Kokendoffer, Mexico, Mo.

"The ideal of success in our time is to make money. Change this ideal."—B. T. Wharton, Marshall, Mo.

"From their parents, from their influential friends, and in some instances from their ministers, they hear more words of praise for money-makers than they hear for preachers."—J. T. McGarvey, Carthage, Mo.

"I asked the officers. The general opinion seemed to be there was not enough money in it."—Geo. L. Peters, Mound City, Mo.

"Neglect of home worship, and a passing of the mothers who prayed for their sons to become preachers."—J. C. Todd, Monroe City.

"The financial problem is the greatest hindrance."—J. D. Greer, Laddonia.

"Coldness of churches, self-willed church boards, meager support, lack of self-confidence, ill behavior of some preachers, lack of prayerful parents, and no feeling of direct responsibility for the great commission."—J. E. Davis, Stanberry.

"Churches don't encourage it. Love of money."—D. W. Moore, Springfield, Mo.

"Churches have not urged it as they should. Expense of getting an education is great for the poor boy. Rich do not have the desire."—Reuben Blunt, Richland, Mo.

"Because the preacher's period of usefulness and fair remuneration is limited to 20 years. In law and medicine at fifty they are at their prime, and age adds to their value. Not all men have sufficient faith for sacrifice of this kind. But Christ will find the right man to do his work".—H. R. Trickett, Macon, Mo.

"The commercial spirit, and the horrors of an old age full of poverty. Sectarianism has reduced the field and the opportunities for ambitious young men. The cure: Supplant the commercial spirit with the spirit of Christ, remove the bugbear of old-age poverty by a longer term of service and better pay, exalt the glory of the ministry by a better and more thorough education, cut out the truck-gardener from the pulpit, call well-equipped men. Then our schools will be filled with pupils and our churches with people."—C. M. Lewellyn, Hamilton, Mo.

The substance of W. G. Surber's answer is meager support. He believes much may be done by the pulpit and by personal solicitation to overcome the unfavorable condition. He declares that the matter is vital, and offers a prayer in behalf of our efforts to prepare men for the work.

C. M. Chilton writes: "This is one with that other and greater question, why are young men not entering the church in greater numbers? It is a question of the spiritual power of the church. When spiritual centers are cultivated, families or churches, there young men begin to think of the ministry, but when worldliness predominates, it is not so. The church has been careless in cultivating its young men. It is not anxious enough for a larger ministry. It seems to be a matter related to the profounder mysteries of the kingdom, therefore we should seek its solution in prayer."

C. E. Hunt thinks that preachers do not properly support one another; that they backbite and are not kind. We feel sure that there is not enough of this to be a deterrent cause.

Of the eighteen answers given above only seven can be construed as expressing the feeling that meager salaries are a deterrent cause. Others name the commercial spirit, the love of money, and the praise of riches. In closing I desire to call special attention to the answers of A. W. Kokendoffer, W. F. Richardson, C. M. Chilton, and C. M. Lewellyn. It is my intention, if the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will permit it, to come back to this matter in a series of brief paragraphs. I wish especially to speak of the financial problem, and the old-age problem, and the spiritual problem, and the prayer problem.

A LETTER TO OUR READERS.

53 COTTAGE ST., MELROSE, MASS.
DEAR SIR: JAN. 11th, 1904.

Ever since I was in the army I had more or less kidney trouble, and within the past year it become so severe and complicated that I suffered everything and was much alarmed—my strength and power was fast leaving me. I saw an advertisement of Swamp-Root and wrote asking for advice. I began the use of the medicine and noted a decided improvement after taking Swamp-Root only a short time.

I continued its use and am thankful to say that I am entirely cured and strong. In order to be very sure about this, I had a doctor examine some of my water to-day and he pronounced it all right and in splendid condition.

I know that your Swamp-Root is purely vegetable and does not contain any harmful drugs. Thanking you for my complete recovery and recommending Swamp-Root to all sufferers, I am Very truly yours,
I. C. RICHARDSON.

You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, sent absolutely free by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root. If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Bethany Assembly.

The annual encampment meeting will be held, beginning on Thursday, July 20, and closing on Monday, August 14, 1905. All the old features that have made the assembly so great a success will be retained, and many new features will be added. The state convention, the convention of the C. W. B. M., and the Y. P. S. C. E., will all be held during the assembly. The Indiana ministerial association will hold its annual convention in connection with the School of pastors and evangelists, and arrangements are being perfected to make it an old time gathering.

The school for preachers will consist not only in Bible lectures, but in regular class study both in evangelistic and pastoral work. A faculty made up of the best pastors and evangelists in the brotherhood will give instruction along the lines indicated.

It is greatly to be hoped that large numbers of our preachers will avail themselves of the opportunity afforded them by this school. No tuition is charged.

Boating, bathing, innocent recreation, great sermons, great lectures, great entertainments, great conventions, sweet fellowships, a great assembly. Information gladly furnished by,

L. L. CARPENTER, president.

The Antioch of the New Mediterranean

Will you be at the great history making missionary convention of the beginning of the twentieth century which will be held at San Francisco this year? When the boys and girls or even the young men and women who attend this convention are old men and women they will look back with unusual pride and say, "I attended that convention," and for this reason: As the geographical, commercial and political position of Antioch, the third city of the empire, the center of trade between the east and the west, compelled it to be the great missionary center of the early church, just as certainly will the geographical, political and commercial position of San Francisco compel her to be the great missionary center of the twentieth century.

The term applied to the Pacific by the great statesman of England, "The New Mediterranean," is a strong statement of a great fact. The Pacific is destined to sustain to the politics and life and commerce of the coming centuries the same relation that the Mediterranean sustained to the ancient world. It is to be hoped that its name is significant of what that relation shall be—peace.

I say that San Francisco is the Antioch of this new Mediterranean.

"Here is a city of destiny. The outlook promises, and facts prove, that here is established one of the cities of the ages that will take its place in the roll call with Carthage, Constantinople, Rome, Venice, London, New York.

"San Francisco is unique among cities, a study among the municipalities of the world. Here are many characters of older places, adjusted to cosmopolitan demands. On this peninsula has grown up a city eighth in size among the cities of the nation. Qualities of west and east, and north and south, are here mingled and developed.

"The harbor of San Francisco is a wonder among harbors, the bay and its connections extending north and south for about forty miles, affording anchorage for the merchant fleets of the world. It is entered through the Golden Gate, a strait five miles long and one mile in width at its narrowest portion."

San Francisco is the bull's eye of the Pacific coast of North America. The winds and tides, the ocean currents and channels, have all conspired to make San Francisco the Antioch of the world's commerce between the needy Orient and the enterprising, productive Occident.

Because of what San Francisco is geographically and politically it must come to be the vantage point from which this nation, to which the world looks for salvation, shall reach out its saving hand. Fitness is the key-word of a divine call to any place or service, and it holds as truly in regard to places as to persons. Fitness made Israel the motherland of the world's religion. Fitness made Antioch the home of the world's first great foreign missionary society. Fitness decrees that San Francisco shall be the great missionary center of the coming centuries. I believe sincerely that as the problem of church organization was worked out by the missionary church while Antioch was the radiating centre of that church, and as the theology of Christianity was developed for all time by the missionary church while centered in Antioch, so shall the great problem of the church for the present and near future—the problem of Christian union—be worked out by the missionary enterprise of the church while centered at San Francisco. By the favor of the Father we, as a people, have been called to be the apostles of Christian union and because of that fact I say that this convention in San Francisco will be an epoch in the history of the kingdom of heaven to which those who attend will look back and say, "I also went out to San Francisco."

"STUART."

Southern California's Glad Hand.

The churches of southern California extend a cordial invitation to all delegates to the international convention to come to San Francisco by way of Los Angeles. It will afford us great pleasure to act as hosts for such a royal company, and we will gladly give every assistance within our power to all who want to see and experience the beauties and glories of this land of sunshine and flowers. History will mention the San Francisco convention as the transfiguration mountain for our brotherhood. It will prove all the more true if the Disciples journey to it through the Palestine of America.

Trips through orange groves, to mountains and through beach towns to the islands are being planned for the entertainment of delegates.

College Work and Plans

Bible College of Missouri.

The Bible college of Missouri has had the best year in its history. Its annual report of the board gives 270 as its total class enrollment, not including the Dean's class on Sunday mornings in the auditorium of the church building, a class numbering from 150 to 250. Many of those enrolled were university students, and many were academy students, all of whom received Biblical work. Twelve were preparing for the ministry or for missions. A number of these are now preaching with great acceptance.

Lowry Hall, the new home of the Bible college, has been completed and is now occupied. It is one of the best buildings in Columbia, and perhaps the best in the brotherhood devoted exclusively to ministerial and Biblical work. It is a stone building throughout, the material being our native limestone trimmed with cut stone from the Bedford quarries in Indiana. The building is Elizabethan in its architecture, and is admirable in architectural effect. It is a productive building and will yield a surplus after all expenses connected with it are defrayed.

J. T. Mitchell, of Centralia, treasurer of the Bible college, reported bills paid and a surplus in the treasury.

The building and grounds are worth $35,000, there is an endowment of $50,000. The Bible college charges no tuitions, and in view of the work that opens before it there will be needed in the near future a much larger endowment.

Butler College.

The fiftieth annual session of Butler college closed with the commencement on Thursday, June 22. The commencement address was delivered by Gov. J. Frank Hanly, of Indiana, before a large audience in the college chapel. The graduates included ten Bachelors of Arts and one Master of Arts. The small number of graduates this year is due to the fact that the entering class of four years ago, owing to external conditions, was exceptionally small, numbering only twenty-nine. The freshman class this year numbered eighty-two.

The year has been a prosperous one. The total enrollment for the year has been about twenty per cent greater than for the preceding year, and the average attendance in the college proper shows an increase of thirty per cent.

During the year the generous offer of Mr. Joseph I. Irwin to the college has been announced. Mr. Irwin proposes to give $100,000 to augment the endowment fund of the college on the condition that the further sum of $150,000 be secured for the same purpose. A start has been made toward the realization of this condition and pledges to the amount of $19,000 have been secured. In addition to these cash pledges, the college has received from Mr. Charles T. Whitsett, of Indianapolis, a gift of improved city real estate valued at $30,000. Other friends of the college, who have not yet put their pledges in such form that they can be reported, have signified their intention of contributing generously to the fund which is being raised in satisfaction of the condition of Mr. Irwin's offer. The enterprise is a large one and, with the best help of all he friends of the college, it will take every effort to bring it to a successful completion. But it must and will be done. No other enterprise now on foot among the Disciples of Christ is more vitally important to the larger interests of the whole brotherhood.

The Butler college summer school opened on June 26 with an enrollment of 113, as against 30 for last year. It will continue six weeks. It offers facilities for regular college students who wish to gain extra credits or to make up back work, but special courses have been arranged to meet the needs of teachers. In addition to the members of the regular faculty who will give courses in the summer school, two distinguished specialists have been engaged who have national reputations as teachers of teachers. Prof. Frank M. McMurry, of Teachers college, Columbia university, New York, widely known as a lecturer and as the author of many textbooks, will give a double course on general and special methods in teaching. Prof. Clifton F. Hodge, of Clark university, Worcester, Mass., who is perhaps the leading spirit in the nature-study movement which has so deeply influenced primary and secondary education during the past decade, will give courses in biology with special reference to the adaptation of the teaching of science to the grammar and high schools.

The faculty for next year will be augmented by the addition of Mr. Richard B. Moore as professor of chemistry. Mr. Moore is a son of Bro. W. T. Moore and, in addition to some years of study in the University of London and the University of Chicago, has been instructor in chemistry for the past eight years in the University of Missouri. Mrs. Moore, who has had educational experience in Christian college, Columbia, Mo., will have charge of the college residence for women. Prof. C. B. Coleman, of the department of history, who has been on leave of absence in Germany during the past year, has returned and will resume his work with the opening of the next session.

On November 1, Butler college will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of its first session. The occasion will be celebrated with suitable exercises The college is renewing its youth and the future is bright with promise.

Christian College.

Christian college closed its 55th year May 23, after a most beautiful commencement week. In many respects the past session has been a remarkable one. A larger number than ever before were received in the boarding department and many who could not be accommodated were put on the waiting list or sent to other schools. The total enrollment of students for the year was 235. Of these 171 were in the boarding department. Of these boarders, 2 were on full scholarships, and 2 on half scholarships. Eighteen made no financial returns whatever, 15 of them working their way by household or clerical duties, and 3 being actual beneficiaries of the college.

The teaching faculty numbers 28 experienced instructors, besides other administrative officers. The course of study was thoroughly examined eight years ago and Christian college given then the right of articulation with the Missouri state university, but since then the work has, year by year, been enlarged and strengthened by important changes, which not only enable the B. L. graduates to enter the university and eastern colleges, but give the B. A. graduates 42 hours of advanced standing in the university.

Many valuable pieces of new apparatus have been added to the laboratory equipment, about 100 volumes to the library, and a second Steinway Grand piano to the music department.

Great material improvements have been made during the past year in the grounds and outside buildings. New fences have been constructed throughout, a new stable built, a large brick addition made to the power house, which supports a water tower above and contains a large room beneath for the new dynamo. An artesian well, 667 feet deep, has been drilled and gives an abundant supply of water. An artificial lake, with graveled bed, has been constructed, containing a beautiful island connected by a bridge with main shore, and the lake stocked by the United States Fish Commission. Boats upon the lake are used for rowing, and an expert teacher instructs in swimming and skating, in season. A sunken garden with large fountain has been built between the buildings, 2,000 square feet of granitoid sidewalks have been constructed, sod laid, and trees set out in the campus until the whole area seems transformed. Tennis, basket ball and rowing are the most popular forms of out-door exercise and the health of the student is almost perfect. A new academic building is contemplated.

A few words, in closing, regarding the religious atmosphere of the school. Each year two young ladies are educated gratuitously for the foreign mission field, and the college has an earnest auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions with 54 active members. This year a systematic study of missions two Sunday evenings each month resulted in the awakening of an earnest desire to "help now" in the great work, and in less than two weeks a voluntary self-denial fund of $52, was handed by the girls to the president for the support of Mohini and Dipiya, two native helpers in India. It is now the earnest desire of the student body to become a living link, and plans are going forward to raise the $600 necessary for the entire support of one of our missionaries next year. Besides this voluntary fund, there has been paid in regular dues to the C. W. B. M. $64.80. A pledge of $50 has been paid for Monterey, and a pledge made of $100 to our girls' college in Japan.

The spirit of the students is one of earnest work and contented harmony. The things that are really "worth while" are being sought after, and that our girls should develop into earnest Christians is our highest ideal. They are being taught that this can be done with no diminution of mental training.

Mrs. W. T. Moore.

Christian University.

It was my pleasure to attend part of the commencement of Christian university. The little city on the banks of the Mississippi, as well as the fine new building, was strange to me. While I had heard much of the fine spirit of the Canton people, and had seen something of the loyalty of the students of C. U., yet the half, I found, had never been told.

There is a genuine college spirit in the city of Canton for the school. All churches give the school and its interests the right of way.

When I come to speak of the student body, I can not be too lavish in my praise. They are the most gentlemanly and ladylike young people to be found in the land. A spirit of real culture pervades the atmosphere.

The site of the new building on the hill overlooking the city and the river is superb. The building is a modern three story structure. It is substantially built. Throughout it is finished, and everywhere one is impressed with the fact that it was built for work more than for any other purpose. We have not in our brotherhood a more modern or commodious building for school purposes. From the first floor, with its fine heating plant, wash rooms, and other fixtures, to the top floor, with its fine society rooms and chapel, there is not a corner that is not utilized. There is a very small debt upon it, and this is held by brethren.

President Johann has wrought wonders in leading this school out of trying times and the people of Canton on every hand told me of his self-sacrificing labors.

Twenty-two were graduated from the institution. Over sixty young preachers go out from Canton to preach to the churches of the surrounding country. It is the second school in our brotherhood in point of ministerial students, being second only to the College of the Bible at Lexington, Ky. While other departments are doing good work, the main work of the school is in the academic and Bible departments. A strong faculty has charge of these departments. In addition to this the department of music is doing fine work.

It is a real pleasure to see such prosperity come to one of our oldest schools. And it can work only good to the cause of education among us in general to see this honored institution taking a leading plabe among our colleges.

Young women and men are admitted upon the same terms, the proportions of attendance being two young women to three young men.

Maryville, Mo. H. A. Denton.

During the year just closed, the attendance was 55 per cent larger than the preceding year and prospects are favorable for a like increase next year. In this school, the degree of B. D. is awarded only to such students as have taken, in the university, three years of Bidle study in addition to that required for an A. B.

During the last year thirteen professors have devoted their entire time to the school and have done all the teaching, for no student-teachers are employed. It is with sadness that we announce the resignation of Dr. D. R. Dungan, who for five years has served as dean of the Bible department. This department has grown so rapidly that the board of trustees have elected two new men for teaching Biblical subjects.

Albert Buxton, A. M., Ph. D., so well known to the brotherhood at large, will be dean of the Bible department. He graduated in Harvard, then spent six years in study and travel in Europe, after which he returned to America to preach and teach. He has been president of Texas Christian university and is now president of Dexter Christian college. Though he will retain the nominal presidency of Dexter college for another year, he will be here in September of this year, to devote his entire time to this school.

Rolla G. Sears, A. M., B. D., is the other new member of the faculty. He graduated from Christian university in 1889, since which time he has spent six full years in the universities of Chicago and of Wisconsin, devoting his time mainly to the study of Greek, Hebrew, Syriac and the Bible. He will receive the degree of Ph. D. this summer from the University of Wisconsin and will begin his work with us at the opening of the next session in September.

These two, with Prof. H. D. Williams, who is already in the faculty, will have charge of the Bible department. Christian university is not a school for ministerial students alone; and we look forward to the time when our college halls will be crowded with young men and women eager for a thorough Christian education.

Carl Johann, President.

Canton, Mo.

Texas Christian University.

Texas Christian university, if it receives the support it ought to receive, will be a tremendous factor in the work of the Disciples of Christ in the United States. It has possibilities for good beyond that of any other institution of our people. All must see this who will take into consideration the strategical importance of this institution. The brotherhood of Texas are beginning to realize the responsibility laid upon them as they have never done, and the indications are that they will rally grandly to the support of the institution that they have planted. The past year has been a phenomenal one in many ways. Our enrollment reached 470. We have had about 30 people connected with the educational and home departments of the school. We have a strong and well equipped faculty. Our literary courses will compare favorably with those of any of our institutions. Our special departments are exceptionally strong. We have five music teachers and we enrolled, in all branches of the subject, fully 150 music pupils. The regular enrollment in the college classes numbers from 20 to 50 in each class and we have a large number of preparatory students. The college of business enrolled about 90 during the year and the school of oratory enrolled 35 pupils. The school of art enrolled 64. This shows that every department of the school is well patronized and all work is growing in strength with every year. Recently the business men of Waco raised $5,000 for finishing off the exterior of the main building. This work is now nearing completion, A few weeks ago Bro. T. W. Phillips, of Newcastle, Pa., gave us $5,000 for a ministerial loan fund and on educational day, during the last state convention in May, $30,000 was pledged on a single day and no one was asked personally for a donation. It was a spontaneous free will offering of the people. The eyes of our Texas brotherhood are turned upon this school and it is getting down deep into their hearts, as it ought to do. During the last commencement our graduates numbered as follows: Preparatory School, 28; College of Business, 13; College of Music, 3; School of Oratory 3; College of Arts and Sciences, 20; A. M. for work done, 1. The enrollment is rapidly increasing and the indications are that the capacity of our buildings will be taxed to the utmost next year. In view of the past progress and present condition of the school the board of trustees and the faculty feel greatly encouraged. I neglected to mention especially our Bible college work. We enrolled 40 Bible students last year. We ought to enroll a hundred Bible students the coming year and the indications are that we will certainly make a large increase over last year's enrollment.

year's business the receipts will be a few dollars more than the expenditures. This is the first time in many years that the university has been able to keep its expenses within its income. Nothing, perhaps, gave more cheer to the board of trustees than this remarkable showing.

The amount of money received as gifts during the year exceeded $30,000. In addition to this a proposition has been received from Andrew Carnegie proposing to erect a $50,000 library building on condition that a like amount be raised for library endowments. The growth of the resources of the university during the last few years is also a matter of encouragement. The net resources of the university in June, 1902, were reported as $346,351.02, and in June, 1905, $581,180.98. The net increase therefore is $234,830.96. Comparatively, this is a splendid showing for the growth of the university. The total resources of the university were $609,792.16 The total amount of money available for current expenses during the year was in round numbers $75,000.00.

Hamilton College.

The thirty-sixth annual session of Hamilton college closed on May 25, having enrolled during the year 251 students from 18 states of the union. This is the largest enrollment during the history of the institution and the area from which the patronage has been drawn is larger than heretofore.

The faculty has consisted of 23 instructors representing such institutions as Yale, Harvard, Wellesley, the University of Michigan and the University of Cincinnati. They have proved to be an able, conscientious, and loyal body of men and women, and, with only four changes, the teaching corps will remain the same next year.

The employment of teachers from the best universities and colleges is showing its results in a higher grade of work than has been done previously at Hamilton. One practical achievement has been the granting of certificate privilege by several eastern colleges, which admits graduates from our junior college course to these institutions without examinations. Students from the class of 1905 will enter both Wellesley and Vassar colleges this September.

Not a single case of contagious disease has occurred during the year and not a case of serious illness. The morale of the institution has been splendid. The general atmosphere of the resident life has been of a refined and uplifting character and the contentment and happiness of the students have been most pronounced.

We believe the religious life among the students has been of inestimable value to them. The Y. W. C. A., which numbers over 60 members, holds weekly meetings, and an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. meets once a month. Besides the payment of dues, both of these organizations have made substantial contributions to good causes—a gift of $50 to the Hazel Green dormitory; a pledge of $100 to the girls' school to be built at Tokyo, Japan, and the sending of two delegates to the southern conference of the Y. W. C. A. at Asheville. Hamilton college also had the opportunity of providing a home for a young woman who came to the Bible college to prepare for missionary service in Japan. She leaves this fall as one of the appointees of the F. C. M. S.

Commencement week was a splendid close of a good year's work The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Dr. W. E. Garrison, president of Butler college, before an immense audience. The splendid music was all by college talent under the able direction of Mrs. Ingalls and Miss Mets of the college faculty.

Commencement was held in historic old Morrison chapel, with an audience present which taxed the auditorium to its capacity. The masterly address was by Dean W. D. McClintock of Chicago university. Twenty-nine young women received diplomas in the academic department and a number of handsome gold medals were awarded. The music of the commencement program was also by college talent and was of a high order.

In a material way the college has only a good report to make. The investment of $25-000 for improvements and additions during the past two years has almost transformed the buildings. Other improvements will be made during this summer. Hamilton college is doing better work than ever before in its history.

Washington Christian College.

This college at Washington, D. C , established January, 1902, has just had its best year. It has enrolled students directly from eleven states—from four states beyond the Mississippi.

This, the only college Christian only in all the middle and northern Atlantic states, is already doing much for the cause of original Christianity.

During the second session the students preparing to declare the gospel preached more or less at a dozen places in the vicinity. About half the places were mission points and two have become permanent churches with a pastor each for all the time. One of the pastors, Claude C. Jones, was a graduate of the college in 1904. The college now has ministers laboring in New England, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and Nebraska. Certainly more than half of our students would never be at a Christian college.

While the institution gives strong courses of instruction in the Christian religion it is by no means solely for preachers. The advantages and facilities of the national capital enable the school to do a comprehensive educational work.

The outlook for the coming session is better than ever before. Two-thirds of the rooms of the young ladies' home are already contracted for. The number of young ladies the college can take is limited. The number of young men is not. The friends and patrons of the institution are steadily increasing. Among those making the largest gifts to the college are Mrs. S. A. Holman, Illinois; Hon. T. W. Phillips, Pennsylvania, and Commissioner O. A. Hawkins, Virginia.

William Woods College.

The joy of achievement now flushes the soul of this institution. Its work has just begun. In every way William Woods college seeks enlargement and perfection. It is not ashamed of the work hitherto accomplished, but it means to press forward to greater and better things.

In equipment it now ranks among the best. The new dormitory furnishes room for at least thirty more boarders. The $22,000 expended in this beautiful building with its equipment creates new obligations and offers better advantages. The generosity of Dr. W. S. Woods and men like R. A. Long, J. Q. Adams, E. L. Edwards and Oscar R. White is a guarantee that nothing will be withheld that will contribute to the prosperity of the school. An enrollment of at least 150 boarders is expected for the beginning of the next session. Last year's enrollment, boarders and all, was 198.

The curriculum has been enlarged. Domestic art, science and manual training have been incorporated within the past year. The departments of music, art, expression, literature

Our Budget

—Our educational problem is one that we ought all to ponder.

—The church needs men thoroughly equipped with the best mental training as well as men of evangelistic fervor and deep spirituality.

—Every year we call special attention, in our first issue in July, to the work of our colleges.

—Minburn, Ia., is still without a preacher.

—Next year will be the twenty-fifth anniversary of Drake university.

—C. E. Dunkleberger has entered upon the pastorate of Flat River, Mo.

—A. L. Crim will retire from the pastorate at Ladoga, Ind., in September.

—W. J. Lhamon has been holding an institute at Joplin and begins to-day in Springfield.

—A. B. Elliott has taken up the work at Vinton vacated recently by James T. Nichols.

—W. N. Briney took charge of the work at the Broadway church, Louisville, last Lord's day.

—E. L. Powell will hold a short meeting at Watsonville, Cal., prior to the international convention.

—Guy B. Williamson has been called to the assistant pastoral work with R. F. Thrapp, Jacksonville, Ill.

—F. T. Ray, late of Drake, has taken up the work at Maxwell, Kan., and Leslie Wolf goes to Elston, Ia.

—Sixteen new missionaries have been appointed by the Foreign Society and will sail to their respective fields in September.

—W. P. Dorsey has declined the call from the Central church, Huntington, W. Va., and will enter upon evangelistic work.

—Thomas H. Bates, who formerly labored in Australia and for some years past in England, has taken charge of the work at Summerside, Prince Edward Island.

—The Bethany Bible-class, at Akron, Ohio, this year made its best children's day offering, the amount being $150. Brother Slater says this is $4.00 more than last year.

—July 30, F. M. Rains will dedicate the new church at Perry, Mo. Some thirteen years ago he dedicated the church building at this place which was recently destroyed by fire.

—The Church Forum is the title of an interesting little paper published at Harrisburg, Pa. The editor is Mr. S. C. Swallow and he has fifteen associate editors representing the different denominations. The Disciples of Christ have a column for which H. O. Pritchard, of Shelbyville, Ind., is responsible.

—The church at Chillicothe, Mo., celebrated the fifth wedding anniversary of their pastor, J. N. Crutcher, and his wife, by presenting them with a handsome roll-top desk and a fine clock.

—Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Cunningham, who are bound for the foreign field, had a reception given to them on the eve of their departure from Findlay, O., by the Central and the First churches.

—Mrs. P. E. Hawkins, one of Missouri's faithful Disciples, has just given our National Benevolent Association $100, and ordered interest to stop on annuity bond No. 22 heretofore issued to her.

—Stephen J. Corey, the new secretary of the Foreign Society, spent Sunday, July 2, with J. H. O. Smith and the church at Valparaiso, Ind. He will be at Turnersville, Ky., July 9, to participate in a farewell reception tendered to Miss Stella W. Lewis who sails for Japan August 6. She is one of the Foreign Society's new missionaries.

—R. L. Wilson, who has for some years been preaching in South Chicago, has come to St. Louis, where he is to take a bank position, but will no doubt preach as opportunity offers, for Brother Wilson has been engaged in business in Chicago as well as in gospel work. Many of his old Missouri friends will welcome him back to the state. He was at the convention.

—The twenty-third Christian workers' conference will be held at East Northfield, Mass., August 4-20.

—The catalogs containing full particulars about our colleges will be sent free to anyone who writes for them.

—J. E. Lynn, pastor of the Central church at Warren, Ohio, is to spend his vacation in attendance at the summer divinity lectureship at Harvard university.

—Chas. Reign Scoville took 1,271 people into the church from January 1, 1905, to June 27, 1905, or in a little less than six months. That, we imagine, is a record.

—M. J. Nicoson, who was elected to take the place of W. A. Moore, who resigned as Missouri Bible-school secretary and treasurer, has decided that he cannot undertake this important work.

—The brethren at Bridgeport, Conn., may ere long have a church building, our Kansas City board having the matter under consideration. At present the brethren are meeting in an old school house at the corner of Maplewood and Iranistan avenues, with M. L. Streator in charge.

—The new building which has just been dedicated at Elbert, Col., is the outcome of a mission established three years ago. Subsequently O. E. Hamilton and J. P. Garmong conducted a meeting and people came from the large ranches for a distance of fifteen miles. Thirty-six were added to the few brethren who had already joined themselves together.

—Brother June writes us that it was the pleasure and privilege of the church at Everett, Mass., to set apart for the gospel ministry Harry H. Cushing of Portland, Maine, formerly a worker in the Hancock street church of Everett. Elders Lewis and Robinson assisted in the ordination service. Brother Cushing has been appointed to the work in New England under the home missionary board.

—One of the features of the Iowa convention was the marriage of Dr. Ada McNeill and Wilfred E. Gordon. Both have been pursuing studies in Chicago, Sister McNeill at one of the medical colleges and Brother Gordon at the Moody institute. Both have been prominent in missionary work and when they return to India in the autumn they will doubtless have a new zest and a new inspiration in their chosen occupation.

—"Our new church by new year's day" is the watchword adopted by the brethren at Central Christian church, Marion, Ohio. B. L. Smith was with them on Lord's day. A great revival will follow this dedication. The church has had a rather remarkable growth, there being a gain of 283 per cent in the membership in three years, 108 per cent in the receipts of the second year over the first, and the missionary offerings increased 305 per cent.

—We regret to record the death of William Wordsdell, who died at Vermont, Ill., whither he had returned some weeks before from Oklahoma, where he had been preaching, having charge of two congregations. Brother Wordsdell united with the Christian church at the age of eighteen years, and, after an educational and business career, some ten years ago took up the work of the Christian ministry. He was a faithful and self-sacrificing man.

—For the first nine months of the missionary year the receipts of the Foreign Society amounted to $181,750. A gain of only $2,601 between this and September 30 insures the $250,000, the watchword for the year. Surely our people will make good the amount, especially when victory is so near. Let us not be defeated by over-confidence nor indifference. Send offerings to F. M. Rains, corresponding secretary, Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—Allan B. Philputt, pastor of the Central church of Indianapolis, will attend the Baltimore Christian Endeavor convention and deliver the closing address at one of the great rallies on Sunday evening which close the convention. From there he goes to Chautauqua, N. Y., where he is to deliver three addresses on evangelism, with the following topics: 1. The Quiet Evangelism; 2. The Place of Evangelism in the New Testament Church; 3. The Ethical Results of Evangelism.

—Beginning July 8, until July 19, will be the summer school of theology under our standing committee on evangelism, at Chautauqua, N. Y. A dozen or more addresses will be delivered by such speakers as F. D. Power, H. O. Breeden, C. S. Medbury, A. B. Philputt. The well known features of the famous Chautauqua ought to prove attractive, with these special conferences, to very many of our brethren who could probably attend this gathering, both from the standpoint of education, inspiration and help.

—H. G. Weaver writes us that the dedication of the auditorium and pipe organ of the First Christian church at Reading, Pa., was a complete success. J. P. Lichtenberger, of New York city, delighted the members with three able discourses, and his brief stay did them much good. During the week services followed the dedication, C. A. Brady, G. B. Rutledge, L. G. Batman, and W. S. McCallum preaching on successive evenings. The report is that the brethren are now in better shape to prosecute the Lord's work in Reading than ever before.

—The churches of Shelby county, Indiana, have just had a delightful and profitable county meeting, the first of rhe kind ever held in that neighborhood. S. R. Van Buskirk, of Greensburg, Ind., gave an address on "The Pre-eminence of Christ" which seems to have been very satisfactory to those who heard it. Judge Marshall Hucker, of Columbus, Ind., describing the work done by county missionary societies, gave a practical and helpful talk. A county organization was effected, with the following officers: H. O. Pritchard, Shelbyville, president; Samuel Tomlinson, Fairland, vice-president; Charles Harrison, secretary, and George McCain, treasurer.

—O. L. Adams reports a fine district convention at Overton, Neb., there being over 73 delegates and visitors present, and a good program presented. A four days' institute under the leadership of Prof. W. H. Waggoner preceded the convention and H. G. Wilkinson, late of Porto Rico, followed the convention and added greatly to the already aroused missionary interest. The church at Overton has this year more than doubled its missionary offerings and the congregation has passed to the systematic basis and plans of contributing to the treasury.

One young man will enter Cotner to prepare himself for the ministry and the church will pay his tuition for three years. All departments of the work show progress.

—"There is always some way for the church to succeed if the brethren will really try." So writes W. A. Webster, pastor of the congregation at Ninth and Shaw, Des Moines, Ia. Two years ago the flood broke up the organization and almost demolished the building. Several months later it was reorganized by Brother Cresmer, who preached until February of this year. Considerable debt was incurred for repairs and this led many to be discouraged. However, Brother Webster and a few others made a determined canvass and in five days all indebtedness was paid off, and a surplus was in the treasury. This is a mission church and will no doubt now go to work with a greater determination than ever to accomplish something for the Master in their locality.

—The gain in receipts from churches for the month of June is $3,759.64. We rejoice in such a splendid report. Doubtless there are many churches that have not taken the offering, but which will hold patriotic services on July 2, and send an offering for this great cause of home missions. Send all remittances to Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec'y, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

Drake's Bible College Assured.

On Tuesday evening, June 27, following Charles S. Medbury's soul stirring educational address, the Iowa Christian convention, in celebration of its jubilee year, proceeded to raise money to complete the subscription necessary to insure the construction of the Bible college building at once; $18,500 were reported on hand and the convention set itself the task of raising $6,000. Before the people went home that night $7,500 were in hand, bringing the subscriptions up to $26,000, and more in sight. It will now be possible to construct a building and equip it at an expense of not less than $30,000.

At 11:45 a. m. Wednesday, June 27, 1905, the great convention adjourned to the beautiful plot of ground just west of the church to break ground for the new building. With Dean A. M. Haggard at the plow handle, and Professor D. R. Dungan and President Hill M. Bell as "wheel horses," and with hundreds of men and women tugging at the rope, three furrows marking the site of the building were made. J. H. Stockham was master of ceremonies. The enthusiasm knew no bounds. After the plowing the rope attached to the plow was cut into small bits which were carried away as mementoes of the occasion. It was an epoch-making event in the history of the university, the influence of which will be far-reaching. It is proposed to construct a building fifty by one hundred feet, three stories high.

An Appeal for the Bureau of Evangelism.

Our numerical growth as a people has been the wonder of the religious world, and the secret of that growth has been the spirit of evangelism.

The organization of the bureau of evangelism was a long delayed step in the right direction, the perfecting of a needed system for enlarged and aggressive work in saving men. It has more than justified its existence before the first year of its operation has passed.

For the first time in our history we have been accorded equal place in the most important union meetings held in large cities. In these union meetings the gospel has been preached without prejudice, without qualification and without reservation.

The results attained in these meetings have been very largely attributed to the methods used by our brethren, and these methods have been copied by pastors of denominational churches. When W. J. Wright, our superintendent of evangelism, gave the gospel invitation, rightly, in his section of the union meetings held at Louisville, Ky., the preachers without exception called it "something new in evangelism" and said they meant to adopt it in their churches. One Presbyterian preacher afterwards met Brother Wright upon the streets of Louisville and told him he had been having a "perpetual revival ever since the union meetings, just from giving people a chance to make the good confession."

Our standing committee of evangelism has provided for two great summer schools of evangelism, one to be held at Chautauqua, N. Y., July 9-19, the other at Bethany assembly, Ind., from July 31 to Aug. 10. Simultaneous meetings are planned for in Cleveland, Pittsburg and Cincinnati during the autumn months.

Over 100 congregations upon the coast are to begin meetings upon the same day, immediately following the national convention at San Francisco.

Churches have been aroused, evangelists have been placed in the field, campaigns in large and small communities planned and as rapidly as possible put into execution.

The work is growing. It is enlisting men and churches and communities. Its influence is telling upon the life of the brotherhood already and must tell with even greater force in coming years.

It is not only a stupendous work but it is also a work which is vital to our life. To prosecute it upon adequate lines requires both men and money. The $5,000 appropriation from the treasury of the home board in order to inaugurate the work will not suffice for more than a meagre beginning. Funds are needed in large sums. The great Presbyterian board is supported altogether by personal gifts, one man giving $10,000 every year. The Baptist board receives from one man $5,000 a year, and from one woman $500 a year. It is not the purpose of the bureau of evangelism or of its superintendent or of the American Christian Missionary Society to ask for offerings from churches as such. But it is our belief that there are individual members who can well afford to make liberal gifts to a great enterprise like this, in sums of $50, $100, $250 or $500. We appeal to the many who are thus able to be among the first to help in making this the great department of our home work.

Gifts in any amount will be cheerfully receipted for and any one who feels interested should send an offering. Our people are liberal givers as they see their opportunity and duty. We are growing in liberality. We are a people who do things. Here is an opportunity. Here is duty. Let us do this thing with our whole hearts.

If you desire to know more of the bureau and its work, one of the secretaries will gladly visit you. Above everything send your offering in without delay. He gives twice who gives quickly.

Benjamin L. Smith,
Geo. B. Ranshaw.

From Dr. Rijnhart.

The following are some extracts from a private letter just received from Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart: "A week's illness for Mrs. Shelton and immediately afterwards the same for me, with the Chinese New Year at the same time, has kept me very busy. Then we decided to spend a while in a lower altitude, and came down here to Wa-si-keo, twenty miles from home and nearly 4,000 feet lower down. Since coming here Mrs. Shelton and baby are much better, but it has been of no service to me, for I have had a bad cold, as has had Manyen, my Chinese girl, who, of course, is with me. We study Thibetan every morning, just as we did at home. I enclose a piece of our writing, with the teacher's. We are not perfect, but it has taken much pains to get to write even this well, and we do it with a piece of bamboo whittled to a point for a pen, and hold the paper in the left hand, with the fingers to support it underneath.

I am so glad you went to St. Louis. I am sure it was a most profitable time.* Thank you for the paper. I am glad, too, that you are interested now in the Christian Endeavor. Ask them to pray for me, our work, and for my boy and girl, whom I support myself. The girl is now fifteen, and is a great help. She is the one whose writing I send you. She plays the organ in our meetings, and helps me in all our women's meetings. The boy is six, and very bright. Her name is Manyen; surname is Chew. Li Lho Tsang is the boy's name, Li being the surname, which they always put first. I hope he may grow up to be an evangelist. Just now he is full of fun, and very diligent. His mother was married a second time, and the stepfather was going to sell this boy. She smokes opium. The boy wanted to come to me, and his mother wanted me to have him, so I took him and had the mother give me a deed to him, so to speak. She and her relatives have no claim on him now, or when he grows up. Some time I will adopt a girl and make a good wife of her for him, for a man must have a Christian wife, if he is to be of any use in a heathen land.

"The Holy Spirit."

"The Holy Spirit." Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo. $1.00.

A valuable contribution to the literature of the Disciples of Christ is the recent book on "The Holy Spirit: His Personality, Mission and Modes of Activity," by Dr. J. H. Garrison, editor of the Christian-Evangelist, one of our best and strongest religious weeklies. Brother Garrison's powers as a writer are well known, as he is the author of several books which have had a wide circulation and he has for many years been the senior editor of the Christian - Evangelist. But in none of his writings has he handled his subject more ably than in this, his most recent work. There are twelve chapters as follows: The Tri-Personality of God, Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, The Holy Spirit in Conversion, Relation of the Holy Spirit to Christians, Blessings from the Holy Spirit, Jesus and the Holy Spirit, Significance of Pentecost, Symbols and Metaphors of the Holy Spirit, Spiritual Gifts, Perfecting Holiness, Christian Union and the Holy Spirit, Perpetuity of the Spirit's Guidance. These are all on timely subjects and these chapters will prove interesting and helpful to every reader. The book is elegantly bound in cloth, stamped in gold and has 211 pages.—*Our Work, Bethany, W. Ohio Letter.

Hiram! Dear, beautiful, historical, religious Hiram! What college is more delightfully located? Where is there a more inspiring environment and history? Where is a religious atmosphere more wholesome?

The annual commencement week was June 18-22. Nature did her best for the occasion. The people came in goodly numbers. Everything was pervaded with hope. Old Hiram bestowed her choicest benedictions.

It seemed good to see J. Z. Tyler so far from home again. His son Garnett was a graduate.

President Rowlison and J. E. Lynn will attend the summer school of theology at Harvard university.

Pres. E. V. Zollars and wife are visiting a few weeks at his old home at Lowell, O., and their daughter, Mrs. Dr. Page, of Warren.

Owen Livengood has resigned at Marshfield and will become agent for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in Ohio. He ought to put the paper in every home in our Ohio churches. Give him a welcome when he comes, he will do you good.

H. A. Blake recently lost his wife at Rutland. He has resigned and will visit his home in Baltimore. W. R. Moffett held a good meeting at Rutland with 15 additions.

A. P. Frost and wife will go to California soon to live. Brother Frost has been visiting in southern Ohio and speaking to the delight of the people at Athens, Glouster and Trimble.

W. A. Guy, one of our young preachers, has been elected secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at the University at Athens and will assume his duties Sept. 1.

The Athens Sunday-school has outgrown the present building and a wall will be knocked out this summer and an addition to meet the condition put on.

J. F. Ryan is now bishop at Quaker City. G. F. Crites has been looking up the possibilities at Waverly. He has also revived the church at Mt. Ephraim and remodeled the house and rededicated it.

The Cleveland preachers with their better-halves picnicked at Edgewater Park June 26. This is an annual affair.

C. M. Watson will succeed H. H. Moninger at Steubenville. We welcome him back to Buckeyedom.

S. H. Forrer will go to Princeton, Sept. 15, to take a year of post graduate work.

If you want your name in print tell what you have done and address the postal card to—

Painesville, Ohio. C. A. FREER.

From Colorado Springs.

I am spending a most delightful month in this city. No attempt will be made here to describe the magnificence of the city and its romantic surroundings. Its broad streets, fine public buildings, palatial houses and beautiful parks must be seen to be appreciated. As for the canons, mountain torrents, majestic rocks, roaring waterfalls, mineral springs, awesome caves and snow-capped peaks—well, they are indescribable.

The preachers at Colorado City and Colorado Springs arranged for me to preach every Lord's day during my month here. I have also addressed the C. W. B. M. twice, the W. C. T. U. once, and I delivered a patriotic address for the Endeavorers on flag day.

Bro. Robert W. Moore is doing a good work in Colorado City. They still have only a basement in which to meet; but they hope to build soon.

Bro. Creighton S. Brooks has his work well in hand in this city. He is a recognized factor in every movement of public good.

The brethren at Palmyra, Mo., will be interested to know that I united their former pastor, Bro. Henry Jones, to a St. Louis woman in marriage.

I am engaged to assist Bro. J. P. Adcock in a meeting at Pilot Point, Tex., beginning the first Lord's day in July.

We hope soon to return to Joplin, Mo., to buy property and make our home for years to come.

I deeply regret that I could not be at the Missouri convention. SIMPSON ELY.

There are thousands of brethren and sisters who have read and enjoyed the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for years. These good men and women would not do without the paper for many times its price. You have received many times the value you have paid. Now, would it not be a nice thing for you to place this good paper into some other homes? Send us at least one new subscriber as an appreciation of your good will. If you can, kindly commend the paper to others, and through your efforts we may receive a score of new subscribers.

Financial Opportunity

"Fortune knocks but once at every man's door" is a familiar quotation. Ten years ago I started in business on $50.00 capital. To-day I am incorporated under a special act of Legislature for $150,000, and some of my friends tell me my business ought to be capitalized for a million. I am a successful business man. My ten years' record shows that. If you want to make money, join me in my enterprise. A small amount of stock in my company is at your disposal. Write for my book, "Ten Years." It tells the story of my success. You can be successful too. Address The Mac Levy Company, Dept. 86, 63 Clark St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE KOLA PLANT.

HAY-FEVER
AND
CAN BE CURED.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific. Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Classen, 126 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Watt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905. I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. and science are equipped with the best teachers that money can supply.

The soul of the school is "to do good and to communicate." It does not forget that education means the instruction, development and training of the whole being. Adjustment to the social and political fabric directed by union first with God is the goal sought. The supreme aim is character.

With an endowment of $500,000, which it has the right to pray for and expect, this institution will not only help forty girls, as it now does, but it will make glad a hundred homes where aspiring girls are now looking with longing eyes to the mountain tops of consecration and devotion to duty. The rich and the poor are alike welcome.

Within the next year William Woods college expects to realize its ardent desire to aid the daughters of foreign missionaries. We are praying for a special endowment for this purpose, thus adding to the scholarships already secured and ready for use. J. B. Jones.

Hiram College.

The commencement week this year was full of interest, and some things unusual transpired. In the senior preparatory class 1909, and the commercial department, 25 young men and women received diplomas.

The baccalaureate sermon was preached by President C. C. Rowlison and the annual address to the Christian Association of the college by J. E. Lynn, of Warren, Ohio. Each of these efforts was worthy of the occasion. Much is anticipated for Hiram under the administration of President Rowlison, whose views seem to be in entire harmony with the traditions and spirit of the college. He comes to his place with the united support and sympathy of the board of trustees, the faculty, the student body, and the constituency of the college generally.

Monday, June 19, the anniversaries of the five literary societies of the college presented programs of great interest to all concerned, On June 21, there were ordained, at the request of the church in Hiram, fourteen young men to the work of the gospel ministry. They were: J. C. Archer, H. A. Carpenter, H. E. Beckler, E. G. Campbell, U. C. James, M. O. Carter, J. I. Carter, Alexander Paul, M. S. Peckham, H. F. Reed, J. W. Reynolds, C. O. Reynard, P. A. Sherman, C. R. Wolford. It was a most impressive service.

At the annual meeting of the trustees, of the 24 members of the board, twenty were present. The affairs of the college were found to be in good condition and the outlook better than for several years past.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders on Thursday the following persons were elected to the board of trustees: Miner Lee Bates, William G. Dietz, Francis M. Green, Albert R. Teachout, Robert Miller, Lathrop Cooley, Thomas W. Phillips and H. D. Messick. All were re-elections except Albert R. Teachout and H. D. Messick. Hon. C. B. Lockwood was chosen president of the board of trustees; Francis M. Green, vice-president; Lewis J. Wood, secretary, and Warren S. Hayden, auditor. Alexander Wilcox was elected an honorary member of the board. Hiram has now 23 professors and teachers in its faculty, and one or two new ones will be added during the present year.

The graduating class numbered 41 in the regular course, and four who received the degree of A. M. The following are the names of the young people who received degrees: Degree of A. B.: Carrie C. Alford, J. C. Archer, Josephine C. Brock, C. W. Bruninghaus, E. G. Campbell, M. O. Carter, J. I. Carter, H. A. Carpenter, G. R. Clements, Anna L. Gates, W. A. Grieves, Ulysses C. James, E. P. Kemper, F. E. Lumley, R. A. McCorkle, C. L. Miller, A. Paul, H. F. Reed, T. J. Reed, A. F. Reiter, C. O. Reynard, A. P. Regal, P. A. Sherman, H. E. Stefford, C. R. Wolford, Rachel E. Workman; Degree of Ph. B.: W. P. Allyn, H. E. Beckler, Ethel Bosworth, Grace L. Dudley, S. L. Lyon, H. G. Martin, R. W. Robinson, Jr., Clemie M. Rogers, S. M. Sigfricd, A. Taylor, J. G. Tyler, C. J. Winter; Degree of S. B.: Harriet E. Carroll, H. P. Ober, O. A. Turney; Degree of A. M.: F. W. Brown, S. Y. Hughes, J. W. Reynolds, A. C. Workman.

On Thursday afternoon President Rowlison was inaugurated formally as president. This service was led by acting president E. B. Wakefield who for two years has proven to be a most capable and popular presiding officer. No one holds a higher place in the affections of the brotherhood, the faculty and the student body than he does. He retires with the high praise of all.

All of the addresses were of a high order, brief in statement and fervent in spirit. To summarize all that was said as to the scope and purpose of the college as detailed by the speakers, it may be said: The college seeks to make a four-sided symmetrical person. To do this it trains the student to think, it trains him to do things, it trains him in habits of righteousness, it trains him in great-heartedness, and the trinity which the college must always have faith in is God—man—duty.

Its motto should be the motto of the great apostle: "But one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal, unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," or to put it in the form in which a successful business man advised a young man who asked his advice, "Young man, consider the postage stamp, its usefulness lies in its ability to stick to one thing until it gets there."

Hiram has had its past, which is fragrant with blessed memories, rugged with its strenuous contests for success, and strong to carry out the purpose of its founders, which was "the instruction of youth of both sexes in the various branches of literature and science, especially of moral science, as based on the facts and precepts of the Holy Scriptures or, to provide a sound scientific and literary education; to temper and sweeten such education with moral and scriptural knowledge; to educate young men for the ministry." There are no clouds in the sky over Hiram to day.

Exercises at Gratz Park, at the recent Kentucky University Reunion.

The College of the Bible.

The college of the Bible of Kentucky university has had a fine year. The attendance has increased 50 per cent since last year. For the first time in the history of the institution, young ladies were admitted as full matriculates last fall. Several are preparing for work on the foreign field. With their admission into the college of the Bible there has come a deepening of the spiritual life of the college. Especially has there been aroused a greater interest in missions. Through the efforts of N. L. Sims, J. R. Farris, V. C. Carpenter, Miss Pearl Forsythe and others, Kentucky university has become a "living link." The $600 have been raised and the missionary has been selected.

Miss Stella Walker Lewis, from near Stanford, Ky., will be Kentucky university's representative on the foreign field for the present. She will go to Japan and sails in September. Miss Lewis has been one of the young lady matriculates during the past year.

The movement as a consequence of which Kentucky university became a 'living link" was not an exclusively college of the Bible movement. The movement began in the college of the Bible but was taken into the college of Liberal Arts. The individual students, the faculty and the literary societies of the college of Liberal Arts entered enthusiastically into the work and gave liberally to it. The question of making Kentucky university a "living link" on the home field is also being agitated.

In addition to this work which has been undertaken by the university as such, three students from the college of the Bible, besides Miss Lewis, will sail for foreign lands this fall to do missionary work. They are J. C. Ogden and wife and A. F. Hensey.

The finances of the college of the Bible are in good shape. W. T. Donaldson, the financial agent, has been trying to add $100,000 to the endowment this year. At commencement he reported $93,000 of the proposed $100,000 pledged. Before this is printed the remainder will doubtless have been raised.

The funds for use in assisting students who need assistance were never so large as now. The Kentucky Christian Education Society has $35,000, the interest of which is used in this way. By agreement with Mrs. Garth, $95,000 of the estate of her deceased husband becomes immediately available. The total amount, the interest on which will be used to assist worthy ministerial students, is $150,000.

There were 12 graduates this year. All except three took the classical course, or had done a similar amount of work in other institutions, representing six years of work.

Prof. H. L. Calhoun, who entered the faculty last year, has proved himself a very fine teacher. Next year he and Professor Deweese will do, in addition to their regular work, the work of Prof. I. B. Grubbs, who has been under the surgeon's knife four times this year and has been given the year's leave of absence with full pay. President McGarvey retains his usual vigor and good health.

Kentucky University.

Kentucky university, the successor of old Transylvania university, which was the first college established west of the Alleghany mountains, is holding well the lofty place which it has taken among the colleges that are under the control of the Disciples of Christ.

The past year has been a very successful one. There has been a very perceptible increase in the attendance and the work done has been of a very high class, as has the moral tone of the college life been high. The honor system has been in operation over a year and it is working admirably.

The commercial college is prospering, and the medical college at Louisville is fast assuming large proportions. And this fall the law college will be re-established. Judge Lyman J. Chalkley, of Virginia, will be dean. He reports a very flattering outlook for the first year. It will be at Lexington and recitation rooms will be provided in Morrison building. A faculty composed of the best legal talent in central Kentucky has been selected and a strong two years' course has been arranged.

Basket Ball Team of WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE.

The finances of the university are in good condition. There are evidences of an increase in the endowment and the scholarship funds are becoming larger. A new science hall has been or will be provided for in a short while, it is believed. Andrew Carnegie has promised $25,000 on the condition that another $25,000 be raised. Work on the building will probably be begun this fall.

One regret of the year in connection with the faculty of the university is the leaving of Prof. Clarence G. Freeman, who has occupied the Morrison chair of English for several years. He will take a similar position this fall with Georgetown college.

Professor Freeman's place will be taken by Dr. H. G. Shearing, who is a Kentuckian by birth, has a Ph. D. from Yale and has studied abroad. He has been teaching English in Ripon college.

The reunion of alumni which was held at the close of this scholastic year will doubtless prove to be a great benefit to the university. President Jenkins is enamored of the work he has in hand. He delights in the history of old Kentucky university and is proud of the traditions clinging to it. He points to the location of the university, to the healthfulness of this part of Kentucky, to the high ideals of the old institution, to the high positions occupied today by so many of K. U.'s alumni, to the brightness of present prospects, and says he believes that for Kentucky university—

> The year's at the spring,
> The day's at the dawn;
> God's in his heaven—
> All's right with the world!

The School of the Evangelists.

On Dec. 1, 1905, our main building was totally destroyed by fire and one hundred and seventeen students, the majority of them working their way, were turned out on a cold world.

We immediately laid plans for a larger and better building, and made an appeal to the brethren everywhere for aid. We have raised within $3,500 (for labor) of the required amount. The need is great and pressing even now. We have on file nearly 200 applications received since school opened last September.

We have nearly 25 young men with us now who are working for their schooling. We need six carpenters—strong young men who want to preach. Good wages in schooling.

Ashley S. Johnson.

Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

Berkeley Bible Seminary.

Berkeley Bible seminary has had its usual year. Our relation with the university and the other seminaries at Berkeley has been uniformly pleasant. The number of regular seminary students enrolled was 11, all preparing for the ministry but one. In addition six students of Pacific theological seminary (Congregational) availed themselves of our class, while in the university 50 students pursued the courses in Jewish and early Christian history taught by myself. The outlook for the coming year is encouraging.

Pres. H. D. McAneney has spent his full time in the field, and his efforts at raising endowment have been more than usually successful. His reports are not in, as the year does not close until at the state meeting in August, so that I can not give the definite amount.

We expect considerable uplift from the coming national convention, and hope to go on meeting the educational needs of our state as fully and as rapidly as means and men can be supplied.

Hiram Van Kirk, Dean.

The Disciples' Divinity House.

During the year ending July 1, 1905, there have been 40 different Disciples in attendance in the Chicago university divinity school, three of whom graduated with the B. D. degree. Courses of lectures were given during the autumn quarter by Prof. Willett on the "History of Christian Worship," and during the winter quarter by Dr. Gates on the "History of the Disciples." In addition to regular courses, assemblies and "Open Lectures" were held by Professor Willett, the most notable of which was the course on his trip to Palestine, listened to by scores of persons outside of the membership of the house. They were given Wednesday evenings in lecture halls of the university and were the means of acquainting the hundreds of students in attendance not only with the lecturer but with the religious body with which he is identified.

A plan to raise $30,000 of endowment was undertaken, on which $21,000 were subscribed. It is the hope of the officers to complete the sum this fall.

The value and need of the work of the divinity house to the young men among the Disciples who are fitting themselves for the ministry, are demonstrated continuously by the letters of inquiry and applications for scholarships coming to the officers.

The inability of the house to respond to appeals in all cases impresses the officers with the greatness of the work that could be done, if they commanded sufficient resources. A score of young men in addition to the number who came entirely at their own charges, could be added to the list of students every year with the outlay of a hundred dollars of help in each case. During the last year six students were aided in this way.

Errett Gates, Secretary.

Bethany College.

In the sixty-four years of Bethany's history she reached the high water mark in her commencement exercises June 11-15. Col. Alexander Campbell, a trustee of the college for many years, and a son of the founder of Bethany, said: "I have attended every meeting of the board of trustees for just fifty years, except three during the war, and never before have I seen so harmonious, happy and hopeful a meeting as this year. I am sure the thing for which we have been praying has come, the permanent establishment of Bethany college."

There were 246 students enrolled this year, 67 of whom were in the ministerial department.

The baccalaureate sermon by Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, on the subject of Immortality, was a masterpiece.

The field day exercises were good and the president's reception at Pendleton Heights was indeed a great social event. Among the noted guests present were Congressman W. H. Graham and wife, of Allegheny, Mr. Frank Main and wife, of Detroit, Oliver C. Vodrey, East Liverpool, O., Mr. E. T. Norton and wife, of Connellsville, Pa., Hons. George H. Anderson, Pittsburg, Pa., and J. W. Mulholland, of Philadelphia. These gentlemen are numbered among the trustees of Bethany college, than whom there is no stronger, more aggressive board in any of our colleges.

The graduation class consisted of twenty-seven young men and women and every one of those preaching have been located. The orations were of an unusually high order. The commencement day address was given by W. B. Taylor, of Ionia, Mich., the dean-elect of the Biblical department. As an introductory to his address he spoke of Bethany's having the distinction, through its illustrious founder, of being the first school of modern times to introduce the Bible as a part of the regular college course, placing the greatest of all classics even above the classics of Greece and Rome. He also spoke of the purpose of the ministerial department to introduce a thorough course in the theory and practice of the ministry, doing for the young preacher what the training school does for the teacher. He also announced elective courses in the history of the restoration and a course in Christology.

President Cramblet announced the gifts. Besides paying all outstanding debts and making improvements, which the native Bethanyite designates as "marvelous," over $100,000 have been added to the permanent endowment of the college since T. E. Cramblet became president of this historic institution.

The list of graduates is as follows—B. A. Classical: H. F. Brown, Toronto, O.; G. Hess, Morristown, Pa.; J. Munro, Wheeling, W. Va.; Ethel Gaylor, Rudolph, O ; S. S. Williams, Howard, Pa.; R. H. Wynne, Jr., Bethany, W. Va. The B. A. Ministerial are: H. G. Connelly, Baltimore, Md.; G. H. Culberson, Atlanta, Ga.; M. S. Decker, Jenison, Mich.; H. F. Keltch, Dayton, O.; G. H. Steed, Norfolk, Va.; B. Mus.—Anna M. Kemp and Katherine E. Miller. B. Ped. Jennie McGowan, Wheeling, W. Va.; E. A. Stickle, Newark, O.; A. H. Smith, Mt. Pleasant, Ia. The Master's degree, in course, was bestowed on W. H. Oldham, Ebensburg, Pa., and F. M. Pitman, E. Liverpool, O. Honorary—J. G. Slayter, Akron, O.; F. T. McAvoy, Bethany, W. Va.; G. G. Cole, Lynchburg, Va. The Degree of B. S. was given to W. B. Hendershot, Parkersburg, W. Va. B. Ltd.—Katherine V. Scott, Bethany, W. Va., and Sarah M. Scott, Charleroi, Pa. The honorary degree of LL.D. was bestowed on J. W. Holland, chancellor of the Carnegie institute of Pittsburg, Pa. To share the honors with this gifted man was our own G. P. Coler of Ann Arbor Bible chair renown.

General View of Butler College Campus—Rear View.

The exercises closed with the oratorical contest between the local societies. This account would be far from complete without mentioning the splendid musical program of Wednesday evening under the direction of Professor Moos.

From every standpoint the institution has made substantial progress. The attendance for the session was the largest in the sixty-four years of Bethany's history. The income from endowment and other sources was also larger than ever before. All current bills of the session were paid, and some troublesome floating indebtedness cleared away. The faculty is to be strengthened for the coming session by the addition of two new professorships, W. B. Taylor, of Ionia, Mich., becomes vice-president and dean of the Bible department, and Philip Johnson takes the chair of Greek exegesis and philosophy. These two men bring with them unusual equipment for their work and the friends of Bethany feel that this marks a new era in ministerial preparation in Bethany.

During the past session $25,000 have been secured for our permanent endowment fund. In addition to this, Mr. Carnegie has offered to give $20,000 for the construction of a library building, on condition that the friends of the college add $20,000 more to the permanent endowment fund. Such progress has been made in this as to insure Mr. Carnegie that the college will meet the condition and he has placed the $20,000 at our disposal. The work of constructing the library building will be begun as soon as suitable plans are agreed upon. During the past session a modern and well-equipped gymnasium was completed. The college now has two rooming halls of 40 rooms each. One of these halls is devoted to the young ladies and the other to young men. Mrs. Susan B. Cochran, of Dawson, Pa., has just given another $5,000 to our endowment fund. This makes $25,000 given to this fund by this generous woman. In consideration of this gift, the board of trustees unanimously voted to name the chair of philosophy the Susan B. Cochran chair of philosophy.

Many friends of the college are making bequests in their wills in favor of Bethany. Within the past three years, to our certain knowledge, eleven different wills have been made in favor of Bethany. This evidences the growing confidence of the brotherhood in the future of Bethany college. Brother and Sister John C. Israel, of Egypt, Ohio, have given $1,100 to establish a scholarship in honor of their son, Albert G. Israel, who died before completing his course in the college. This scholarship is to be used in preparing worthy young men to preach the gospel.

The friends of Bethany feel that not only is the outlook for the institution full of promise, but that the present conditions are most gratifying. It is confidently believed that the next session will show an increase in attendance, and that Bethany has now entered upon an era of largely increased usefulness.

T. E. Cramblet.

New Church at Forrest, Illinois.

We have just dedicated our new church building with Chas. R. Scoville. There was a full house in attendance, and, after a masterly sermon by Brother Scoville from the first line of the Bible—in fact, from the first word—to the surprise of many the amount of the indebtedness was provided for.

It was with palpitating but exultant hearts, that the consecrated men and women who had sacrificed and labored long in order to have a tabernacle in which they might worship God, witnessed the fulfillment of their hopes and prayers.

The church of Christ is now an established institution in Forrest, and has, we trust and pray, a bright future before it.

The plea of the Disciples of Christ was first proclaimed here about twenty-five years ago, through the instrumentality of the state board of missions of Illinois; but the work up to the present time has been fitful and uncertain. So hard was the field considered to be, and so many the obstacles which had to be overcome, that several previous attempts to build resulted in discouragement.

But, undaunted by past failure, and believing that where two or three Disciples shall agree as touching anything, it shall be done, a few firm believers who refused to be assimilated in other churches began the work once more; others became interested—and it is a success to-day. When we consider the difficulties that stood in the way—disaffection and poverty—we are led to exclaim, "What hath God wrought!"

The writer, who has acted as pastor here, preaching in the afternoon of each Lord's day, in company with his wife, who is also an ordained minister of the gospel, began a special series of meetings a few days prior to dedication, and continued them afterwards; so far, ten sermons have been preached, and seventeen accessions have resulted. In view of the fact that a month's meeting by the combined churches of the city last winter resulted, so far as we knew, in no conversions, this result is indeed gratifying.
Rochester Irwin.

The Bible-school sessions were, on the whole, the most interesting of the convention.

The address of G. A. Hoffmann, the president, began with a few historical allusions and then offered some practical suggestions. From it we gather that the first convention was held in Mexico in 1876, and that eighteen men have served the board during these twenty-nine years, only four of whom left the state, while all are still active in the work of training the young for the Master's service. John Burns was the pioneer of the work, which during the past fifteen years has taken on more of the evangelistic type. With a commendation of the self-sacrifice of the evangelists, the president went on to state that there had been a great demand for the preaching of the gospel in destitute places this year, but he believed the time had arrived when some modification would be profitable to all our missionary work in the state. He thought it was agreed that a strong, capable Bible-school evangelist is still needed—one who should bring order, system and organization to the school that has not this. With this work in hand, at least $3,000 could be employed for other work, and this money might be appropriated for evangelistic work in ten different districts. A district properly organized, he contended, would easily raise one-third of its evangelist's salary, while the man in the field could, himself, raise a third, so that the amount needed from the board would not be so very much. Such a plan would give the state Bible-school work eleven instead of three or four men, and there would be the benefit of having a specialist for the special organizing and teaching work, while the two state boards could cover the entire field with evangelists. The effect of such an onward movement would be incalculable. The speaker went on to point out that fifty years ago the farm prepared far more ministers of the gospel than the college, but conditions have changed, and if each of our eighteen districts out of the cities, had an evangelist, there would be an average of nearly seventy of these country churches to the district, in addition to the twenty-five town churches.

T. J. Legg, state evangelist of Indiana, made an evening address that delighted many, though some thought it would have been better if he had delivered the one he had prepared.

"Little things have wondrous power," was a song of the children who composed the primary class of the Marshall Bible-school. Mrs. J. H. Fisher, their teacher, gave a very delightful practical lesson of the wondrous power that an efficient teacher can have over her little pupils. It was worth going to Marshall just to see these little tots' eager faces and to hear their admirable answers to the questions on biblical subjects. Mrs. J. H. King, of St. Louis, is state superintendent of primary work and she made an address, in the course of which she remarked that her office had been a kind of figurehead during the past year and she seemed to be eager to make it more than that during the coming year. Her message was an encouragement towards growth. As a practical thought she commended a separate room for the primary class, and strongly urged the use of the blackboard. The great aim of the teacher, she said, must be soul-winning for Christ. There followed a conference on primary work, in which Mrs. Duckworth, of St. Louis, spoke on the cradle roll; Mrs. A. B. Buxton, of Kansas City, on subdivided classes; and Miss Nannie Hopper, of St. Louis, on teachers' training courses. All of these papers were very admirable, and we hope to give some outline of them in subsequent issues of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. An address upon the same subject followed, John L. Brandt, of St. Louis, being the speaker. He emphasized the importance of the work, and, after speaking of the contrast between the treatment of the child by the ancients and by Christ, he mentioned some qualifications that should belong to a teacher: (1) A childlike heart; (2) conception or apprehension of the capabilities of the child; (3) tact to understand children; (4) earnestness. Brother Brandt concluded with a powerful plea for the bringing of the children to Christ, and the saving of them for him, and showed what this would mean to the church and to the state.

The last day of the convention opened with a devotional service followed by the report of the board, the treasurer and field men. W. A. Moore, who appeared before the convention as the resigning secretary, stated that on the basis of pledges made at Carrollton, T. J. Head and R. B. Havener had been asked to continue their work for the board, together with the corresponding secretary. On surveying the field it was seen that one-third of the state lies north of the Missouri river. Here the Disciples have 648 Bible-schools and 51,000 enrollment, or one in 19 of the population, but in the southwestern third of the state are 98,700 people and the Disciples have 523 Bible-schools, with 40,000 enrollment, or one in 25. In the southeastern third of the state (outside of St. Louis) are 536,000 people. Among them we have 203 Bible schools with 14,000 enrollment, or one in 38. In St. Louis we are teaching one in 192 of the population; in Kansas City, one in 57; in St. Joe, one in 105. Four hundred thousand children in the state, of school age, are outside of any Bible-school.

A summary of the work showed 898 days employed, 225 places visited, 868 addresses given, 35 rallies and conventions, one church organized, two buildings dedicated, 287 baptisms, 272 otherwise; collected for Bible-school work $3,509.50; for local work, $117.93; for preachers' salaries, $1,690; for buildings, $2,675; for other purposes, $71.34, making a total of $8,063.12. The report said the need was, (1) men of information and insight and outlook; (2) trained teachers.

Finally, the resignation of the general secretary, after 27 months of work, was referred to. Brother Moore's comment on his resignation was that he believed his life will not be best spent in raising money and holding meetings. H. F. Davis highly commended the work of Brother Moore, speaking of his difficulties. God and the board had been his two great friends. A committee was appointed to draw up a commendation of Brother Moore and his work for him to take with him to the Pacific coast where he has accepted the pastorate of the church at Tacoma, Wash.

Brother Head, in a few minutes' speech, referred to the tender-hearted and liberal people in south Missouri who support their ministers. He told how he made his way by "pocket-book preaching"—meaning thereby that it was worth while for a preacher to occasionally dip into his own pocket and show himself generous by helping some one in need, or winning the children by small gifts. Brother Head said the Lord always gave back whatever he put out in this work. The special need of the southeast was helpers and a class of evangelists to be permanently located there and be "part of the furnishings." They desire co-operation with the northern part of the state. R. B. Havener, of Windsor, spoke of the many "calls from Macedonia." He did not want to magnify the difficulties. They had made a special effort to revive the work in places where it had been languishing.

A conference on "What work should the Missouri Bible-school co-operation seek to do?" was conducted by J. W. Baker, of Joplin, who emphasized the need of several specialists, and, at the same time, a man who can discover the Bible to the people and inspire them with a love for it and a greater efficiency in its teaching. One delegate suggested making more use of our religious papers. Wherever they are circulated there the most efficient workers are to be found. W. F. Hamann believed in the institutes. S. A. Ennefer said that his experience in Illinois had been that where meetings had not been held, but purely instructional work given, there had been a lack of funds. J. H. Hardin said that we would have to join the procession of those who are going in for up-to-date methods and have specialists in the work. J. D. Greer believed that every superintendent ought to have a school of teachers. Dr. Dungan pleaded for a wiser use of the lesson leaves. Brother Gordon, superintendent of the Marshall Bible-school, said that the best man in the state of Missouri ought to be chosen to lead the work. J. G. M. Luttenberger pleaded for work among the Germans. Mrs. Duckworth cited a case of one primary teacher who had taught that the Eunuch baptized Philip. "What," she asked, "will you do with such a teacher?" Mrs. J. L. Moore, of Palmyra, told of a class who asked for a teacher who did not dance. Another delegate said that under-officers were needed, and that those should be the pastors, among whom there was too much tendency to preach two sermons every Lord's day and let the Bible-school alone. On behalf of the board, A. W. Kokendoffer said it sought to do the wish of the convention. The demand had been for meetings, and the board had tried to answer that demand. W. A. Moore pointed out that the cry last September had been, "We want you to baptize some people." He said he was delighted at what seemed a change of sentiment in this conference. At this point, O. S. Russell, the Baptist minister of Marshall, was introduced.

L. J. Marshall, who occupies the pulpit at Independence, made famous by Alexander Procter, made a very thoughtful address seeking to answer the question, "What it means to know God," his text being taken from John 17:3. It was possible, he said, to have a speaking acquaintance with or to have heard of God, to have believed in him, but the text spoke of a continual unfolding of God and examination into his nature. We realize more and more the reality of the battle of life and that the knowing of God is that which prepares for battle. It is not in the material sphere of life that the final victory is to be won, but in the spiritual world, and men are beginning to realize this. Believing this we are giving our attention more carefully to that side of man's nature. We see the imperative need of beginning with life when it is young. Men lead circumscribed lives because they do not understand God or themselves. We now have the promise of the finest type of manhood that the world had ever seen, because young life has the best possibilities for development. On this depends the future of heaven, and yet there are people who do not appreciate the privilege of imparting this germ of eternal life to the young. It is our privilege to convert this material means that God has given us into eternal life. That 400,000 children in this state have no knowledge of God ought to inspire every man to be up and doing. God told the Christian church a long time ago to take these children eternal life, but we have forgotten. Such, in outline, was the thought, and the address made a deep impression on the convention.

All those who were on the program for the symposium, "The Bible-school Problem," were not present. Dr. Buxton led the study. Not the teacher, but the pupil, he urged, is the center of Bible-school teaching, and the pupil's curiosity should be aroused and maintained, the child's soul should be studied, the wholes, not parts, should be taken, and concrete things, not abstract ideas, used, while the vocabulary of childhood should always be employed. J. H. Wright considered "The Church, its Pastor and Church Board." There were three possible attitudes: (1) antagonism; (2) indifference; (3) responsibility. J. C. Todd, in discussing parents, said these failed to appreciate: (1) the value of the Bible-school; (2) that the boys and girls have spiritual bodies; (3) the efforts of the superintendent and teachers. Parents themselves ought to be in the Bible-school, and he believed that there was an awakening parental co-operation whose effect would be: specialists would be brought into Bible-school work and children would come, and all facilities needed would be brought into play. R. B. Helser, speaking on "Equipments," said the first essential was that the officers and teachers should be equipped, while the next chief essential was a suitable place of meeting, with a separate department for the primary class.

The report of the committee on the report of the board commended the activity of the men in the field; rejoiced at their successes; realized their difficulties; said that the demand for evangelistic meetings had never been so great; regretted the retirement of W. A. Moore, and heartily commended him; further, it recommended that one man should be selected to devote his attention to the training of teachers, and that evangelists be sent out to do the work of building up the cause. There was some discussion on the question as to whether evangelistic meetings or the training school idea should be predominant in the work. Finally the report was adopted unanimously.

The officers elected were: A. W. Kokendoffer, president of the board; C. H. Winders, vice-president; E. M. Smith, recording secretary; J. T. Mitchell, auditor. Officers of the convention: J. B. Corwine, president; E. B. Widger, vice-president; J. T. McGarvey, recording secretary; J. R. Blunt, assistant recording secretary; J. E. Davis, enrollment clerk; H. F. Davis, railroad secretary; Mrs. J. H. King, superintendent primary department; M. J. Nicoson, corresponding secretary and treasurer. Brother Nicoson would not give his decision to take up the work until he had consulted his wife and thought over the matter, and has since declined. The time and place of the convention will, of course, be Hannibal, June 15-20, 1906.

A. W. Kokendoffer led a profitable round table on Bible-school specialties. The following were the speakers and their subjects: Luther McKay, Palmyra, "Attendance"; Dr. W. F. Traughber, Mexico, "Teaching"; F. Waller Allen, Odessa, "The Goal of Teaching"; J. A. Gordon, Marshall, "The Bible Reading Habit."

Some fifty-nine schools subscribed $1,483 toward next year's work. A solemn period followed when the memory of workers who had died during the past year was recalled.

W. A. Moore, who had been announced on the program to give his lecture on the "Boy Problem" at the evening session, delivered this address immediately after the luncheon hour and left at its close to catch his train for the west. In the evening M. A. Hart, of Fulton, made a talk on "How I Would Teach Next Sunday's Bible-school Class," and a very interesting question box was led by H. A. Denton.

Some Things That Ought to be Said.

Before the echoes of our recent state meeting have died away, it may be well to say a few things about our work in Missouri that ought to be said, and that ought to be said with emphasis, if we are to hope for anything better than we have been having for the past few years.

It was hoped by many that a new order of things would be inaugurated at our Marshall convention. But nothing of the kind happened. Everything passed off precisely as had been planned. The election of officers took place just as has been the habit. The committee on nominations reported just as they were expected to report, except perhaps in the case of the president. The election of Brother Udell was a distinct departure from the usual custom, and so far as his election is concerned, this was a step in the right direction.

It needs now to be said that the nominating committee should be entirely dispensed with and all our elections should henceforth be by ballot. No other plan is likely to succeed in breaking up the uniformity of action which has come to be practically stereotyped.

Another thing needs to be said: we have too many special addresses at our convention, while there is no time for discussing important reports of committees, and for the transaction of such miscellaneous business as is essential to the success of our cause. All special addresses should be omitted from the programs, except perhaps one for each evening, and these addresses should be by the ablest men whose service can be obtained. Two or three of these will be quite sufficient, and certainly there need be no occasion for using the same man for two addresses, however acceptable he may be as a speaker. This does great injustice to the speaker himself, as it places him in an unenviable position.

It needs to be said that this great state of Missouri, claiming 180,000 Disciples of Christ, should report more than the paltry sum of $4,000 or $5,000 a year for state work. Indeed, it needs to be said that a sum under $25,000 for this work is wholly unworthy of the great brotherhood, who claim to lead all other religious bodies in the state.

It needs to be said also that the paltry sum reported year after year is not altogether chargeable to the want of interest by the brethren in missionary work.

These are some of the things that need be said, and lest some one may think that the writer is personally interested, he will regard himself for the present as having no name and sign SUCCESS.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Eureka Springs, June 26.—One confession and baptism last Sunday. Just closed a splendid short meeting. Randolph Cook, of Vinita, I. T., did the preaching. Several added and the church greatly strengthened. Three additions just before the meeting.—J. L. Smith, minister.

Rogers, June 28.—We are holding a few days' meeting with this church. Sixteen added since I came here the last of April. The work is in but fairly good condition, owing to the hot weather and sickness. We dedicated the new church building at Cainesville, Mo., in April, with all indebtedness provided for.—M. L. Anthony, pastor and evangelist.

GEORGIA.

Griffin, June 28.—Evangelist Richard S. Martin and family closed a very successful meeting June 25. There were about twenty additions to the church and much good accomplished. A new modern church will be erected at once.—G. F. Cuthell.

ILLINOIS.

Quincy, June 26.—The First church has had 10 additions at the regular services in June, eight by confession and baptism and two by statement, making 50 additions since January 1. George Carley, our Bible-school superintendent, has announced that the average attendance for the past quarter was the largest in the history of the school. Our Christian Endeavor society will be represented in Baltimore by Tom Johnson, Gerald A. Tipton and Julius Williams.—Walter M. Jordan.

Mechanicsburg, June 30.—One confession and two baptisms Wednesday evening at prayer-meeting. One added by statement two weeks ago. Two added at Buffalo by letter on last Lord's day.—L. A. Chapman.

Carbondale.—One confession on June 25, three accessions all through the month. Two took membership last night.—A. M. Growden.

Ludlow, June 25.—Two additions by letter yesterday. Our work continues to grow.—Lew D. Hill, minister.

Litchfield, June 26.—Children's day exercises yesterday morning; collection $30. Anniversary exercises yesterday evening; reports from all departments, interspersed with hymns and special music. Accessions to the church from all sources, 47. Moneys raised for all purposes, $2,000. Missionary collections $188 All departments of work are in healthy, growing condition. The present pastor was called for another year —M. S. Johnson.

INDIANA.

Wolcott, June 26.—The church here closed a meeting of three weeks, James Bennett, evangelist, on June 11, with 11 baptisms. Children's day deferred until yesterday, offering $20; a gain of $11 over last year. The school rejoices.—R. H. Lampkin, minister.

Kendallville, June 26.—Two additions since last report; $60 for home missions and $35 children's day offering.

Kentland, June 26.—Thirty-four added here in one week, 60 others added to the saved since my last report.—J. Bennett, evangelist.

JAPAN.

Tokyo, June 5 —Baptized a school teacher, a university student and a woman yesterday; thirty-five since Jan. 1. Work growing finely. —W. D. Cunningham.

IOWA.

Leon, June 30.—H. H. Hubbell held a closing service at Leon on last Thursday evening. He has been three years with the church there. One man made the good confession and was immediately baptized. Leon is looking for Brother Hubbell's successor.

Braddyville, June 26.—The church is prospering under the leadership of W. L. Dunlavy, pastor. June 11, two were added by letter; June 25, one by letter, two by statement and two by confession and baptism—all heads of families.—Lois M. Lawrence, clerk.

Albion.—A practical and enjoyable C. W. B. M. institute was held at Albion, June 14. The attendance was good and included many from other churches in the town besides four of our own county preachers. Miss Lura V. Thompson, our state secretary, conducted the institute. She was assisted by Mrs. Minnie Daily, our district secretary, and by Bro. C. C. Smith. A number of our Albion churches dismissed their prayer-meetings to be with us at the evening session. One of the most delightful featutes of the institute was the lawn dinner at the parsonage where the institute workers and our preaching brethren, Bros. Bristow, Edwards, Ford and Tate, were guests of our C. W. B. M. auxiliary. There have been two additions since my last report—one by letter and one by primary obedience.—Caspar C. Garrigues.

KANSAS.

Hoisington, June 18 —Two added by letter. —F. M. McHale, minister.

KENTUCKY.

Beard, June 28 —June has been to us a "season of refreshing." Apportionments for foreign and home missions raised; church debt liquidated; six accessions—five by confession and one by statement.—Roger T. Moore.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Everett, June 27.—Two baptisms and one confession.—A. S. Jones.

MINNESOTA.

Lewisville, July 1.—Twenty-five confessions in 12 days at Willow Creek (Amboy), J. C. Harris preaching, Miss Bessie Ziesinger singing. Children's day offering $15.—Claris Yeuell, minister.

MISSOURI.

Bogard, June 27.—Two additions Sunday, both by letter —C. C Taylor

Ridgeway, June 27.—Just closed a short meeting, 14 additions.—Popplewell and Easton.

Higginsville, June 29.—Our meeting here starts off nicely. Ten additions to date.—H. A. Northcutt, evangelist; J. H. Coil, pastor.

Bowling Green, June 29 —Three added by statement to the church in Troy this month.—E. J. Lampton.

Higginsville, June 27.—Our meeting has been in progress a week; had one confession, two by letter and one restored last night, making 10 in all.—Mrs. J. L. Warren

NEW MEXICO.

Folsom, June 26.—Our meeting clos with 20 added—15 by confession and baptism. A church was organized, Sunday-school, ladies' aid society, Y. P. S. C. E. The brethren will buy lots and build a house of worship at once. I am to return in a year. I go now to Union City, O. T., where a large tabernacle and a consecrated minister and church are ready to co-operate.—D. D. Boyle, evangelist.

OHIO.

Cleveland, June 27.—There have been 26 additions to the Franklin Circle church since our annual meeting in April. Our offering for home missions is $400; for children's day, $211; for national benevolent work, $100. During the vacation season repairs to cost about $2,000 will be made on our building.—Edgar D. Jones.

TEXAS.

Paris, June 24 —We closed, yesterday, a 12 days' meeting, with 12 additions, We had no outside help All departments in church work prospering.—J. T. Ogle.

THE SUFFERING SAVIOR.—Isaiah 53:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.—Isaiah 53:6.

Memory Verses 4-6.

The lesson of to-day introduces us to one of the sublimest passages in the scriptures, and to some of the most intricate problems in Bible study. Hallowed by reverent reading for many generations and by association with the most sacred thoughts in the minds of all Christian people, it is difficult to make the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah really an object of study.

The passage (which properly begins with 52:13 and continues to the end of the fifty-third chapter) is one of a group of passages dealing with a "servant of Jehovah." The determination of just what the prophet meant by this "servant" is no easy question. In the course of Israel's history, the nation had fallen into sin, had departed from Jehovah, had unfitted itself as a whole for the performance of its mission, and had therefore been punished to the verge of destruction. The earlier chapters of Isaiah are full of warnings and threats that this would happen. The latter chapters represent it as having already happened. The limit of punishment and shame had been reached. It is time for the voice of encouragement. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned, that she hath received of Jehovah's hand double for all her sins" (40:1,2). The theme is now the redeeming power of Jehovah. But it is impossible for the prophet any longer to consider the nation as a whole as Jehovah's agent and instrument. So the "servant of Jehovah" is introduced as God's instrument for the accomplishment of his beneficent purposes toward men.

Who or what is this "servant"? Is it the nation as an historical and concrete body of people? Isaiah 41:8, 9 might seem to support this view. So also 44:1, 2 and 21. Or is the "servant" a part of the nation, the faithful who are to be used in saving the others? This doctrine of the "remnant," the Israel within Israel, is familiar in the prophetic writings. Or is it a personification of the ideal Israel, or even of the real Isreal which has been purged of sin by suffering? Is it some martyr, or some prophet (like himself), or the whole order of prophets personified? Is it Cyrus, who delivered Israel from bondage? Is it the Messiah who was to come?

Doubtless many, or all, of these answers might be adopted for different parts of the "servant" discourses, but the requirements of this passage regarding the "suffering servant" (52:13; 53:12) are not met by anything less than a real person suffering for others' sins. It is not necessary to suppose that the prophet foresaw in detail the coming of Christ, but this seems evident: that as a result of the evil days into which Israel had fallen in her captivity, he saw the need of a personal redeemer, who should be an innocent sufferer, and in whom should be concentrated the spiritual value which had hitherto been conceived as inhering in the nation as a whole.

A LARGE LIFE IN A SMALL PLACE.

"And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene."—Matthew 2:23.

Despised Nazareth. The Messiah was expected to be born in Bethlehem, the city of David; and in this respect Jesus fulfilled the anticipations of his nation. (Matt 2:1-6.) But it was naturally supposed that he would make his home in one of the honored centers of Jewish religious life, perhaps the great capital of the nation, Jerusalem. Least of all would he be expected to manifest himself as a dweller in such a small, despised community as Nazareth, whose population was so mixed in blood, so mongrel in religion, as to be scorned by the orthodox children of Abraham. "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" was the incredulous response of Nathanael to his friend Philip, when he announced that they had found in Jesus of Nazareth the long expected Messiah. (John 1:45, 46.) Men are prone to forget that character is largely independent of geography. The little island of Corsica gave to Europe her greatest general and emperor; from the quiet shades of Mount Vernon the glory of Washington shone out upon the pathway of human progress; and the humble town of Stratford on Avon became immortal as the home of Shakespeare.

The Divine Dweller. Life cannot be confined within bounds of place or time. A vast desert may manifest little life, while a small garden teems with its rich fruit. It seems to us to day as if the very stones of the street would have cried out as Jesus trod them, Behold our Maker and Master! Yet even the human inhabitants of the city knew not him whose wonderful life was lived in their daily presence. Like the unconscious rock that Moses smote in the wilderness, from which flowed water for man and beast, so Nazareth felt no thrill of consciousness of the divine life being lived in her midst, which, smitten by the hand of hate, should gush forth in streams of everlasting life. (Exod. 17:1-6; John 7:37-39.) Men are seeking large places in which to lead their small lives, instead of trying to enlarge their lives to fill the places they already occupy. Dr. John Hall was once asked by a young minister how he could secure a larger place for himself. He answered, Make yourself too large for the place you are now in. The world will not for long confine the great man in the little corner. Nor will it long tolerate the small man in the broad place which only inflation enables him to occupy.

Large and Small Lives. Jesus declared it as the purpose of his advent into the world that those who believed in him might have life, and have it more abundantly. (John 10:10.) The peasant in the field and the prince upon the throne have equal opportunity to enjoy this fuller life. It depends not upon length of days or extent of worldly prosperity. Millais took a square yard of canvas and some pigments, and made of them his immortal "Angelus." It was better than a square mile of painting done by the hand of a dauber. So is many a life, short in time and meager in opportunity, nobler than others of fourscore years, because it has been lived from highest motive, and in largest fidelity to righteousness. The owner of the narrow city lot builds his structure the higher, story on story, thus compensating for his lack of ground by larger occupancy. The narrowest life may be so fully occupied with elevated purposes and holy endeavor as to make the brief and simple life most effectual and worthy. The fact that our Lord was content to live the life of heaven in the despised Nazareth ought to encourage us who must live our lives where providence has placed us, but where the world cannot prevent our using life so that it shall be forever sacred and beautiful.

For the Leader.

Our topic to-night, The Message of the Flowers, is really, when we consider the scripture given for reference, the message of Jesus concerning the flowers. So the significance is in the message of Jesus. The flowers had budded and blossomed for ages before he set foot on the earth as the Son of Man, but no one had ever been able to interpret them as he did. All life is interpreted by Jesus. It is only in the light of his explanation that we really understand nature. How simple and how easy seem his interpretations after they are received! But why were they so long in receiving an interpretation? He who holds all secrets in his own grasp had not come to let the secret out. That is why. Nature has within her a full message concerning man and his place, but it awaits the master interpreter to bring out the message. Without Christ we are not only without hope, but we are in the dark as to the great messages of nature to us. Let us see, then, what he gives us as the message of the flowers.

For the Members.

1. The first message is that the flowers are from God. God clothes the lily. He clothes the grass. Not only is the flower from God, but all nature is from God. Man, as both a part of nature and as a part of the spiritual world, is from God. If in source we are of so high origin, how careful should we be in life! Nothing from God can have an inferior mission. It may be prostituted; it may be turned out of its course; it may be thus brought to naught, but it is not of right and of divine intention so. We are made for the high, the beautiful, the true, the lofty, the abiding.

2. The second message of the flowers is that they are beautiful, fragrant, and clothed finer than kings in their raiment, and all without thought or worry upon their part. We are much better than the flowers. We must not conclude that no beautiful thing, that no good thing, that no worthy thing in soul will come to us unless we worry. The flowers do not worry, yet they are clothed. God is not going to let all his great work come to naught if we fail to worry. After careful and thoughtful pains have been taken in the common affairs of life, the desired results will come to us as does the raiment to the grass—without worry.

3. The third lesson of the flowers is the beauty of composure of soul. How composed, how quiet, how stately, how pleasant to behold—the lily, the rose, the blooming bowers! These souls that fuss and stew and run riot in worry—how they belittle themselves and their Creator! Is the world a piece of work about which one must forever fret and worry, and ever be watching lest a tap get loose, a joint spring, an axle break? Is the upholding power of the Infinite no greater than this? We must be sensible and thoughtful. We must be brought to see what ruin in our appearance this short-faithed, and short-sighted view of God and of life and of the creature in God's hands is. And we must covet the happiness and beauty of composure.

4. The last lesson of the flowers is the frailty of life. The flower, the grass, though clothed ever so fair, must fade. So must we all in the flesh come to the sere and withered leaf. How vain to cling to beauty in the physical alone! The fairest cheek will all too soon fade. The strong man will grow tired and lie down in the grave to rest. "As a flower of the field" man flourisheth, and as the same he "withereth and is dried up." How soon? Who knows? Sooner than we care. Sooner than most of us think. When they say, "peace and safety, then cometh sudden destruction." Let us bloom, for so we come to the honored fading. Let us put on beauty of soul, for so we are in travail for that life that is still beautiful. Let us be clothed like the kings of earth, not in earthly raiment, but in that which covers and adorns the soul. The last of earth draweth near. Let us seek a refuge in him who abideth all the changes of time.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Am I willing to learn this lesson from the flowers?

His Picture.

By Maurice Paul.

"Were I ten years younger I would talk to you differently, Miss Ruth, but a fellow who has been father-confessor to many sweet sixteeners must have a regard for the fitness of things when he is thrown into the society of a pretty girl of nineteen."

"There you go again. You are only thirty, and I don't believe a word you say about all those girls calling you 'Grandpa.' It is just one of your newspaper yarns, Mr. Morton."

THE PRACTICAL SIDE—A COOKING-CLASS AT CHRISTIAN COLLEGE, COLUMBIA, MO.

"Now you are hard on me. There are newspapers yarners, I must admit, but I have never found the world so dry and uninteresting that I could not—"

"Make it a little more interesting by the arts of the newspaper man?"

"The journalist ought to be an artist. To be successful—I don't mean dollars and cents success—he must not only be able to see things in their true proportion, but he must be able to make others see them in that very proportion."

"Then you are not a successful journalist, for you do not seem to have accurately judged me, and your picture of yourself is hardly true to nature. Men are not usually fond of using too few strokes in drawing their own portraits. Why is it you will tell us so little about yourself, and why do you try to make me believe you are older and more serious than you are?"

"My child—"

"Excuse me! I am not your child!"

The words were spoken sharply, but the big blue eyes into which Phil Morton's laughing brown ones looked suddenly lost their fire, and Ruth Cranford continued,

"Really, Mr. Morton, you must forgive me. You told me the other day that I had some of the Big Imp in me—you expressed it more politely, although I was playing the villain's part—when you saw me stamp my foot and get vexed at that rehearsal. There was, perhaps, some excuse for you, but it was a bold thing for a man to do who had been introduced to me only four days before. Do you talk to all women as you talk to me?"

"When I am enough interested in a woman to talk to her I try to be sincere."

"Your high and mighty Bachelorship does then condescend to talk sometimes to one of the opposite sex. Why even now you are—"

"Affording gossip for some of your fellow students, possibly?"

"I think it is despicable for a lot of girls to chatter—"

"About—No, I will not say what was on my tongue. But I agree with you, Miss Ruth; that many women make men doubt their superior intuitionary powers by the remarkable absence of veracity in their gossip."

"You know what the girls think of you?"

"When I went from the university into a big newspaper office I was told to 'find out things,' and ten years' experience all over the world has developed a pretty good 'nose for news.'"

"Yes, we all know you are a good journalist."

"You would make a bad one."

"Complimentary, are you not?"

"Well, you have just made a statement which you denied a little while ago."

"That is not the same as denying a statement I made a little time ago—a characteristic, I believe, of the 'up-to-date' journalist."

But the journalist merely replied that there were "great differences in newspapers and their makers."

"Well, tell me about yourself, so I can judge how correctly the girls have drawn your character."

"The younger ladies here are not seriously interested in me. There are many younger men, both in and out of this town, about whose characters it would be better for them to concern themselves."

"Of course. We are only interested in you as a rare specimen to whom the college authorities have given privileges denied to our sweethearts, aye, even our brothers. Is it true that your editor sent you here—to get a photograph of the prettiest girl you could find?"

"I was perfectly sincere with you when I asked you for your photograph. If Jack Lagrange—I had a letter from Jack this morning—wrote that to his cousin—I did not know he had a cousin here, but that explains some of the gossip on the campus—he told what was but half a truth."

"If it is only a half-truth there is too much of truth in it to please me. I took you to be a gentleman."

"No man has ever questioned my integrity. No woman has ever before doubted my honorable intentions. I asked you for your photograph because I valued it."

"Yes, for public purposes. You would put it in a 'beauty competition' with other women—I know not whom. And you dare not ask it for that purpose. You—but you speak me soft; you tell me you would like to ask a favor, yet you do not know that you ought to. You go on to ask me whether I would be very angry with you if you did. You arouse my—my woman's curiosity. And I, silly girl, tell you I cannot say whether I will be angry, seeing that I do not know what you want. And all the time I want to know what you want, and want you to want it. And you see my weakness and ask me if I would not be willing to make an exchange. Exchange what? Some snap-shot class pictures—something you know I desire—for that which you were afraid to ask for in open and manly fashion!"

"Were the gallows made for the unlucky?"

"Am I not just? You showed me a great deal of attention, and then you made me feel how much of a country girl I am after all. You, with your cosmopolitan manners, your knowledge of the world, knew how to flatter. You called me a 'child of art,' because I could play a little on your favorite instrument, and had some dramatic talent. You desired a photograph of me. Yet you did not know exactly why you wanted it, perhaps it was my hair, perhaps my eyes! And you had not asked many women—and you had known many—for their photographs. Little fool that I was to fall so easily into the trap of a smart journalist! Fortunately the photograph has yet to be taken.''

''But you will give me one!''

''Will give it to you?''

''When a woman like you makes a promise, she keeps it, unless there is good reason for her not to do so. If you were sincere in making that promise to me, I have done nothing to cause you to break it. I came here under no false colors. I had been engaged upon some very difficult and wearying work. My editor sent me here more as a rest for myself than with any special object. My instructions were to 'cover the commencement week exercises,' and get the views of some of the college girls upon two or three subjects that seem to be agitating the female mind at the present time. He sent me, rather than Jack Lagrange, who would have given his month's salary for the assignment, because, I suppose, he regarded me as beyond the danger of flirtations, and thus acceptable to the college authorities. He did say something about getting a photograph, but I never thought again of it until you charged it against me just now. I wanted your photograph because—well, you have exerted a strange influence on me in the few days I have known you. Your radiant face and your happy disposition have been a blessing to me. If I were a younger man—well, I just wanted to keep that face with me, that is all.''

. . . .

Commencement day came, with all its interests and excitements. Morton had given an order for the finest American beauties obtainable to be sent to Miss Cranford. He had sent her flowers on two previous days, and although no indication was given of the sender, she had worn them. This time he had sent with the roses a poetic quotation which gave expression to a kindly wish for the fair graduate's future, and he signed his initials.

He had no opportunity to speak to Miss Cranford until after the ivy-planting. Then he congratulated her upon what he regarded as a very admirable essay which, as one of the most intellectual girls, it had fallen to her lot to write and read on this occasion. She listened to his words of praise with apparent delight and without a trace in her eyes of the yesterday's anger. Morton dared to revert to the subject.

''And what about that photograph?'' he asked.

''You shall have it, Mr. Morton, if you really want it. I'll have one taken for you just as soon as I get home.''

. . . . . .

That afternoon Morton met Ethel Davidson, an old friend, and asked to have the privilege of sitting with her in the big auditorium on commencement. But he caught himself constantly looking at Ruth Cranford. One thing he noticed quickly; she did not carry his flowers. His first thought was that they had not reached her. Then he noticed that none of the other girls were carrying their roses, though he knew that many had been sent to them. They were all carrying their class flowers. So to that extent his mind was easy. But he noticed that whenever his eyes happened to meet Ruth Cranford's, she averted hers quickly. And when the diplomas and the prizes had been given, and the members of the graduating class were surrounded by their friends, she gave him no encouragement to approach her. Morton was a man deeply considerate of the rights and feelings of other people. He felt that on this occasion he must not intrude upon the circle of her intimate friends. But a moving stream gradually brought them close together, and it was when he was immediately facing her that another graduate standing by them tendered her most cordial thanks to an admiring youth for the ''exquisite flowers'' he had so thoughtfully sent her. Miss Cranford turned her head away from Morton and he passed on, reflecting upon what creatures of moods some women are. For he could not bring himself to believe that Miss Cranford intended deliberately to snub him. He could not picture her guilty of such injustice. It was altogether so foreign to the character he imagined her to be.

But the next day settled it in his mind. He had gone up to the college to take leave of its president. As he entered the grounds, Miss Cranford was on the steps of the college and must have seen him. Entering the building, she came out a few moments later. She was prepared for a journey, and bore in her arms her class flowers and a large bunch of white roses. Morton had sent her American Beauties. Here was the snub direct. Or was it possible his flowers had failed to reach her?

It was the nature of the man to ''know why,'' but the girl gave him no time either for seeking or giving explanations.

''Are you going?'' he said.

''Yes.''

''I wish I could have a few words with you.''

''I am to catch the next train, and have to make a call in town.''

''Well''—he would put that one test—''how about the picture?''

There was a shade of annoyance on her face.

''Why, I am going to send it to you—if you still want it,'' she replied.

Morton's ''good-bye'' was a rather spiritless one. He was puzzled. He at once took steps to learn if Miss Cranford had really received his flowers. Satisfied of this, he went to his hotel and wrote a brief note:

ONE HUNDRED

copies of a letter, piece of music, drawing or any writing can be easily made on a

Lawton Simplex Printer.

No washing. No wetting paper. Send for circulars and samples of work. Agents wanted.

LAWTON & CO., 30 Vesey Street, New York. 59 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

Dear Miss Cranford:—I thought I had been so fortunate as to win your friendship. I realize that a man of my age could hope to win nothing more from you. But I did not believe you capable of treating friendship with a deliberate snub. By your last words to me you were willing to give me your photograph. Yet you were not only unwilling to wear, but in any way to acknowledge, the flowers I sent you, though you had previously worn mine when you were ignorant of the sender. I simply do not understand. What is my offense? Sincerely yours,

Philip Morton.

When he returned to his home Morton took his negatives to a photographer and gave an order for the pictures he had promised Ruth to be sent to her. He had no thought of failing to fulfill his part of the agreement. So when two weeks passed and no kind of response came he dismissed Ruth Cranford from his mind. For once he had been mistaken in his judgment of a woman. After all she was not the real gold. He could have tolerated some of her provincialism; he did not value her the less because she was not a member of a fashionable set. But to find her lacking in the common courtesy of life was a real shock to him.

Six weeks after the eventful commencement day Morton received a note. It read:

Dear Mr. Morton:—If you possess that quality of mercy that will permit you to forgive conduct for which I have no excuse, it is my desire to ask your pardon with my own lips.

And it will be my pleasure to put into your hand the photograph which I so foolishly withheld.

Yours in repentance,

am glad!" was Morton's fervent exclamation. But it was a week before he took her hand.

"Had you not come you would have been treating me as I deserve," she said. "You know how sorry I am for my boorish behavior?"

"And you know I have forgiven anything that you may think was amiss. Yet I confess I still wonder why you treated me as you did."

"I can't understand myself. I was just jealous—that's the only explanation."

"Jealous?"

"Yes. My mind had been poisoned about that photograph. I liked you and was glad when you seemed to like me. Then the idea got into my head that you were just playing with me, and when I saw you with Ethel Davidson I—I acted the fool. Of course I did not really care. You were not in love with me, and I was not in love, of course, with you. But it was nice to be singled out among so many girls by a man so well thought of even though he had the reputation of a woman-hater. And just when I thought I was the 'only girl' on this occasion you gave all your attention to another. I was a little fool, for your flowers were silent testimony that I was the one you had singled out."

"Oh, it was just the excitement of the graduation! Jealous?

'O, what damned minutes tells he o'er
Who dotes, yet doubts, suspects, yet strongly loves!'

Jealous? Oh, no; for jealousy is the offspring of love. And you were not in love, of course—that is, with an old 'Grandpa' like me."

"Oh, you will treat serious things lightly."

"Such as—photographs?"

"Mr. Morton, I don't know what you will think of me. I can't give you that photograph."

"Can't give me the photograph! Why, you wrote—"

"Yes, I had a sitting, and the photographer said the negatives were good. But before he could send me proofs that horrible flood came, and his studio was wrecked and many of his negatives utterly ruined—those of me among them."

"Well, after all, I believe I would rather have you in colors."

"You mean a painting? Oh, there is no artist here. Let me see, I have read something about the 'three color process.' But I doubt whether our village photographer knows anything about it. But I'll ask him."

"I'm afraid he is not equal to that kind of work. But if you and I could just agree, we could make that picture ourselves."

"We? I don't see how!"

"You have a knowledge of painting and I of photography, and we ought to know something about mounting and framing. Now we must have a frame. Here; we'll remove this piece in oils from its frame. We can put it back later. That's just about the size. Now, what next? O yes, a mirror. But that is here. Give me the frame. You stand right there. Now 'look pleasant and watch the birdie.' I'll just put the frame in front of you so as to—— That is the picture I want to take away with me, Ruth, only I want it full length; and not just the head and shoulders."

"You mean——"

"Yes, I mean you, Ruth. I want you, dearie—that is, if I really am not too old and serious for you to give me your love."

"I am so happy, grandpa! But you need not think your age and gravity—ha! ha!—will give you the privilege of always having your own way. One thing I will insist upon, you must take no more pictures in natural colors."

"I shall have a new hobby, now, sweetheart, and I'm going to study it—not photographs."

. . . . .

But the association of ideas is not always easily avoided, for late that night the editorial staff of Morton's paper was thrown into a state of wonderment by a telegram marked "Urgent," which read:

"Have secured the picture that will take the prize.—Morton."

"What can Phil mean?" asked the managing editor.

"He must be in love at last," suggested the art editor. "Surely he knew we closed that competition two weeks ago, and the prize picture appeared in our last magazine section."

But all his brother journalists agreed with Phil that his "picture" was the prizewinner when they had the opportunity to inspect it.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE FOURTH DAY, STILL.

When Arthur Lowell, seated upon the chair in Mr. Woodney's grassless lot for the purpose of getting himself dried, saw Jennie Woodney come around the house, he had looked upon her as upon a vision. Her dainty little silk parasol, all blue and useless, had struck a responsive chord, or to speak technically, had found a complementary color, in his heart. She was so elegant in her dress, so refined in her manners, she walked with such ease and grace—it reminded him of his violin. He did not consciously draw a comparison between her and her cousin Mace. Of course, Mace was neither so pretty nor so well dressed. Mace wore old clothes and aprons and sun-bonnets, and, even when she arrayed herself for the street, her garments were sober, though respectable. Jennie Woodney was a spirit from a different world—oh, an altogether different world!—the world in which the little musician built his dreams. Somehow, Mace was so very useful—Arthur did not know how to describe his feelings, even to himself. Jennie did not appear at all useful. She was simply beautiful and delicate and fragrant and all-satisfying. She was like one of those great pictures, always in gold frames, which you may look upon, and the next day find as fresh and full of interest as at the first burst of recognition of a master's hand. Some pictures Arthur felt he could never grow tired of gazing upon; Jennie Woodney was one of them. Mace had been kind—she had helped arrange his room in the barn—she had coaxed him back to a protecting home. He liked her with a grateful affection. He wondered why it was that seeing her sweep and brush down cobwebs—and go about the kitchen with her sleeves rolled above her elbows, seeing her eat three meals a day with evident appetite—he wondered why all this seemed to weigh against her. Jennie with a broom in her hand? He shuddered. Never!

To-morrow all the family would eat dinner (that is to say, supper) at G. C. D. Woodney's. Arthur—where would he eat? He would not eat; there would be no craving for food. He was not in the least envious of his kind protectors; he did not begrudge them their grand dinner. He understood that he, a homeless orphan, had no rights in the matter. But—and he wondered if Jennie would ever know him—would ever call him by name. That would be a bright moment! As to ever entering the home of G. C. D. Woodney, there was no future far enough ahead to awaken such a hope. When Mace led her father upon his church-building expedition, Arthur saw them leave the yard with something like remorse. He felt that he ought to honor Mace all the more for being so useful, and while he could not do so, being of such a sadly poetic temperament, he was resolved to atone for his feelings by useful deeds. What could he do in the way of manual toil to please old Mrs. Woodney and the other Woodneys? But especially, old Mrs. Woodney? He was now dried, and having espied a wheelbarrow in the Misses Day's back lot, he had a useful thought. He hurried to the house and obtained permission to develop it. Then with the zeal he always exhibited upon his undertakings, he hurried next door and found Miss Susie Day working among her flowers.

"Miss Susie, will you lend me your wheelbarrow? and can you tell me where I can find some grass? I want to sod Mr. Woodney's yard—I just thought of it, and Mrs. Woodney said I might ask you for the wheelbarrow."

Miss Susie looked at him sharply. "You are very small for such work," she said, "and the wheelbarrow is heavy. Sodding that yard would be a matter of weeks under such conditions. How old are you? Thirteen?"

"I am sixteen," said Arthur, drawing himself as straight as possible, "and even if I can't sod all of it, I'd like to have a little green in front, and there's nothing but a spear or two that Mrs. Woodney has set up some rocks around."

"That wheelbarrow," said Miss Susie, "would become very dirty. Would you clean it up, good? And don't you think you'll ruin your clothes?"

"I'll put on my old blue shirt," said Arthur, who was wearing one of Mr. Woodney's, "and being bare-footed—for I haven't any shoes—I can do fine."

"Very well. Get that spade and put it in the wheelbarrow, then trundle it across the street, and go down the alley between the ice-house and Wr. Wren's store. When you pass Mr. Wren's back garden you'll come to a gate on your right and one on your left. That one on your right goes into Mr. G. C. D. Woodney's pasture. Don't go in that one."

"I thought he lived on the other side of the street," exclaimed the youth in surprise.

"So he does, but his land is everywhere. The gate on your left goes into the woods, and right near the gate is Coon Fork with lots of grass growing along the banks, and you're welcome to all you can find."

Arthur changed to his blue shirt and set forth in high spirits. It was like a holiday to go to the woods, and going after grass to make the Woodney place green appealed to his fancy. He entered the left hand gate and came almost at once to the creek, which made a loop at this place, to run up to the back of the ice-house. There was a drain from the ice-house which emptied into the creek. The wheelbarrow was heavy and so was the spade. Arthur rested a little, then began to dig. The spade hurt his bare foot, and it was hard to cut the sod into squares without cutting too shallow or too deep. The earth was damp and the dirt stayed together splendidly close to the water, but there it was so steep he could hardly maintain his balance. Higher up, the earth was as hard as if it knew nothing of the stream rippling just below. But the sun was delightful as it fell, all broken up into pretty little triangles, through tangled boughs upon the soft moss and grass. There were strange birds giving peculiar calls, and the sudden leap of squirrels and green promises from great close-coated walnuts spoke of wildness and romance. When the wheelbarrow was as full as he could manage, Arthur set forth, bending his frail body to the load. It was no distance to the big gate, but it seemed very far to where the alley opened into Main street. He had to wheel as far west as Horseshoe house in order to get on the sidewalk, because it was so high where the road dipped. As he passed the Misses Day, he was breathing pretty hard, and when he bumped the barrow into the Woodney yard he was panting. He sat on one of the handles and mopped his brow and regained his breath. Anyway, he was there, and so was the grass. He called out old Mrs. Woodney to advise him as to the most advantageous place to set it. Mrs. Geraldine was interested, too, and discussed the matter with animation. "It should be around at the back door," she said, "right in front of our front porch."

"Mr. Tumbleton would trample it to death, her mother-in-law objected. "Besides, I think it ought to be in the front yard, kitchen or no kitchen, so it can be seen from the road."

"Mr. Tumbleton," said Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, "won't be back for two weeks, and by that time it ought to take root. And if there is to be grass, it ought to be under the parlor window and not at the kitchen door."

"I'm going to sod the whole place, anyway," remarked Arthur, "it is just a question of where to begin."

Old Mrs. Woodney gave him a keen look. I don't think we'll end very far away from wherever that is," she remarked. "And I say put the grass where it can be seen from the road. You have a nice lot there and after so much trouble, and after being so willing to do something nice for us, I don't want your trouble thrown away."

This unexpected praise from the old lady caused Arthur's breast to swell with pride. "I'll put some of it in front, and some back," he said.

"Then none of it will be seen," old Mrs. Woodney declared.

"Well," said Mrs. Geraldine, turning toward the house, "all I said was merely a suggestion." She waved her arm to include the yard and house, then toward the whole village and added, "All this is just temporary, anyhow!"

She went back to her book. "Then you put it right where I have those stones set up about that sprig," said the old lady triumphantly. "All you've got there will make a very good nestegg, and I'm sure we are all grateful to you." When the grass was in place, and old Mrs. Woodney had spread a quilt over it, stretched upon two chairs, to ward off the sun, Arthur started for the woods again; but he was not nearly so interested in the birds and squirrels and walnuts as he had been on his first trip.

Bob Enderthorpe had been at home when he saw Mace and her father enter the yard. He felt a sudden irresistible desire to flee, he could not have told why. Perhaps it was because he had longed so ardently for Mace to come to see them. Now that his wish was about to be fulfilled, he slipped from the yard, ran behind the Woodney place as if he were going for a doctor, made a circle of the Days', and ran across to the store. From the store-porch he watched Arthur at work, and when the little musician started for his second load, Bob went to meet him. "Let me help with that job," he said. "I have on shoes and can handle your spade to a nicety."

"Thank you," said Arthur gratefully. "A little help is a mighty nice thing, and it will please the family all the more, I expect, if two people are doing something nice for them."

"Wait, boys," called Mrs. Wren, who had come to the door with a customer, "it's no use going all the way to the woods. Stop here in my back yard; there's a patch of blue grass where we are going to set up a honeysuckle frame, and if you'll take it, you'll be helping us at the same time."

"Is it grass they want?" spoke up the customer. "Boys, come to our yard and I'll show you a spot where we can spare the grass fine—I am Mrs. Hoogan. Bob knows me," and she smiled upon Arthur. She was a low, fleshy woman with a broad, red face which had a friendly appearance.

Arthur thanked her, but Bob, who had no intention of getting "saloon grass" as he afterwards termed it, merely remarked that he thought his mother had some grass in the garden corners she would be glad to have taken away. Bob was clumsy when in the house, or when walking for pleasure, but at his work, he was all graceful energy and effectiveness. He could do a great deal more than Arthur, but Arthur breathed harder, and felt the labor more keenly. They got the grass from Mrs. Wren's place, and as Bob believed that by that time Mace must have left his house, he went to his garden and found clumps of bluegrass in the corners where vegetables were never planted. Miss Susie Day, who had sent Arthur to the woods to test his resolution, now called them to her garden, to clean out the corners in the same manner, and Worth Acre, learning what was going on, gave them a strip of grass down the side of his shop. By this time, Peter Wren was helping, for being only twelve, he had not yet learned to draw a strict dividing line between work and play. Old Mrs. Woodney was delighted and showed such admiration over each fresh wheelbarrow of sod, that the boys strained every nerve to keep her admiration warm. Mr. Woodney, too, who had come back from his church-building pilgrimage, showed the greatest delight. Bob thought perhaps Mace would assist them with her presence, but she decided to begin work upon her dress that she might be certain of her readiness for the greatest event since coming to the village—the dinner at G. C. D. Woodneys. It was supper-time, but nobody thought of supper—there was no time for it. Just before sunset, Mrs. Hoogan, having given up the boys, sent a handcart full of sod, cut with her own hands, and drawn to the Woodney's by her two sons. Bob received it doubtfully, but when Mr. Woodney learned whence it had come, he declared it should be put with the rest. Having heard the Hoogan boys draw their empty cart away, he said, "There is not so much unselfish kindness in the world that we can refuse the least, though offered by hands less clean than ours. I fear Mrs. Hoogan feels deeply how we have taken grass from the Wrens, Enderthorpes, Days and Mr. Acre, but would not from her. Yet she sends some, cut with her own hands. And though her husband runs a saloon, who knows but he may be open to persuasion, and may really dislike his business? Give me the wheelbarrow—lead me to where it stands. Now," he added, seizing the handles, "I will myself trundle it to the Hoogans, and we will get a barrow full. Arthur, walk beside me, your hand on my arm, and press in the direction I should take." It was a pleasant sight to see Mr. Woodney, his face shining with kindness for all the world, push the wheelbarrow along the rattling walk, guided by Arthur and preceded by Peter Wren and Bob Enderthorpe, the latter shouldering the spade, and all, except Mr. Woodney, as dirty as possible. And it was pleasant to see the neighbors looking from window and door, proud that they had contributed some of their own grass to brighten the blind man's yard. What if he could never see it? Did he not have one of the boys, after each new load was set, lead him around the sodded square to measure the increase of greenness? When it was dark, and Bob and Peter had gone home, and the wheelbarrow, carefully cleaned, had been returned to its owners, Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, looking at the bright island of grass surrounded by a sea of baldness, murmured, "Still, I am sorry, as Bob says, that we have any 'saloon grass.' "

"My dear," rejoined her husband, "whenever you look out the door, you will see grass from so many different yards, all given in love, from the high and low, from the pure and sordid, from the home of those pure beings, the Misses Day, to the wicked haunt of the saloon. Though so very different, these people were all prompted by the same feeling—that which urged Arthur to work beyond his strength. We dare not repulse such unselfish interest; for whenever a loving impulse is slain, some unholy weed springs up from its grave."

"I take notice, "observed old Mrs. Woodney, "that high and low as they were who gave us grass, none are high enough to be of the rich families in town, the Winterfields, or my nephew, G. C. D. Woodney! But it's time for that kitchen fire to be started, or it'll be bedtime before we can have supper. And supper Arthur surely needs, and you, too, Benjamin. Do you think you can ever get yourselves clean."

"Am I soiled?" asked Mr. Woodney in mild surprise.

"Almost as much so, thanks to your trip to the saloon, Benjamin," remarked his wife, "as the grass you brought from there."

"Fortunately," moralized Mr. Woodney, his thoughts all intent upon the reformation of the saloon keeper, and happily unconscious of the grimy streaks athwart his face, "stains like these can be readily removed, leaving no scar."

"It will take a great deal of soap," returned his mother drily.

Business Notes.

The calls for "The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, are continuing right along, but we are so supplied that all are filled promptly. Price, $1.

Wagner's "Simple Life" at 35 cents is in good demand, while the "Letters of a Self-made Man to His Son" are indeed bargains at 60 cents, postpaid.

Our friends must not forget that personal cheques cost us 15 cents for collection, while a draft or money order will only cost you from 3 to 10 cents. Ought you to ask us to be the loser?

All ministers in good standing are privileged to take advantage of our "installment plan" offer, by which you buy any of our books, paying one-fourth or one-fifth down, the other payments in order. Write us.

We have had to make another shipment of "The Christian Worker's Bible and Christian Worker's Testament," but will be well stocked before these notes are read, and we can fill your order or give you any information.

But there are many who prefer the "Old Version," so that we have also received from the Oxford University Press more than $400 worth of the Oxford edition of the Bible, and we have it in all styles and at every price.

Another fortunate stroke for our schools and smaller churches is the "Dime Album," by which the Juniors are raising offerings for the many good purposes they have in hand. These are sold at 5 cents each, postpaid.

We must order another edition of "The Gospel of Matthew," by that prince of commentators, Peloubet, and are going to sell them at 50 cents each, postpaid, though the book was put out to sell at $1.25; another bargain for you.

The Bagster Bibles are in the market to stay. The "Red Letter" Bibles and Testaments are in good demand, hence our stocking up on all such books, making it possible for our friends to get anything in the Bible line right at "headquarters," and "right" in price.

We have just received from Thomas Nelson & Sons over $500 worth of the "American Standard Revised" Bibles and Testaments, such is the demand for this most up-to-date translation of the word of God. We can now fill any orders sent us without any delay. Prices, from 35 cents to $18.

For older folks: "If I Were King" and "The Resurrection," also "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Virginians," also "Gordon Keith" and "In the Palace of the King," also "The Right of Way" and "Captain Ravenshaw." All of the above are $1.50 books, selling at 60 cents, postpaid. Our stock is complete.

The Glass Birthday Globes are having a great sale, the schools, classes and individuals using them with pleasure and interest. The No. 1 sells at 35 cents, the No. 2 at 50 cents, the No. 3 at $1.35, all postpaid. No. 3 is one of the handsomest globes on the market and any of them will increase the birthday offerings of your school, or the class offerings.

The force in the book-room does not aim to be partial, giving some ministers the 25 per cent off, charging others full price; but we do not know all our "brethren of the cloth," so if you will just deduct the 25 per cent, then add 10 per cent of the list price of any of our own publications, save "net" books, we are sure to give you the discount. This applies to all ministers.

Our Cradle Roll stock is complete; so that we can furnish any and all our schools with everything needed for this happy phase of interest. "Gloria in Excelsis," in silk cloth is just from the bindery. It is the best church hymnal on the market and sel s at $1 postpaid; $9 50 per dozen, $75 per 100, not prepaid. It has 600 pages and ought to last a lifetime Write us for further information or "sample copy."

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

New Secretary of State.

Elihu Root, who left President Roosevelt's cabinet a year and a half ago to resume his legal practice, has accepted the position of Secretary of State which was left vacant by the death of John Hay. The President has given it as his opinion more than once that Mr. Root is the ablest lawyer and the greatest man in the country at the present time. While the general public perhaps lacks data upon which confidently to base so sweeping a superlative, there is no doubt as to the general concurrence in a very high estimate of Mr. Root's ability and character. The whole country has been realizing more and more every month up to the very end, that John Hay was one of the greatest diplomats that ever served this country, and it will not be easy to fill his place. It seems a little unfortunate that, in connection with the discussion of Mr. Root's accession to the secretaryship, so much emphasis has been laid upon his private financial affairs. He has been said to be the most highly paid lawyer in America, and his annual income from his practice has been stated all the way from $150,000 to three or four times that amount. This being the case, it is not unnatural that he should think twice before accepting an office which pays a salary of $8,000 a year. Mr. Root did hesitate, and it is reported that he finally accepted only on the strength of Mr. Roosevelt's representation that such an action on his part would virtually assure him of the Republican nomination for the presidency in 1908. This may or may not be the case. It is pretty generally understood that Mr. Root has an honorable ambition to attain the presidency. But the office into which he is now about to enter is one of the greatest usefulness and dignity, and we confess that we do not like the idea of begging any man to accept it as a stepping-stone to higher things. At the same time, we are willing to give the praise which is due to one who is willing to serve his country at a financial sacrifice. Whether this turn of events will actually secure for the new secretary the Republican nomination in 1908 is another question. It is only a few weeks since we were being told with all confidence that Secretary Taft was the administration candidate and was practically certain of the nomination, unless the convention should seize Mr. Roosevelt by force and arms and compel him to submit to a third term.

Panama Affairs.

The sudden resignation of Mr. Wallace as chief engineer of the Panama Canal and the consequent falling out between him and Secretary Taft, have been fully aired in the newspapers. It appears that Mr. Wallace, who was receiving a salary of $25,000 as a member of the canal commission and chief engineer for it, received a highly advantageous offer from a corporation in New York which would more than double his income and would give him an opportunity to live in New York instead of on the Isthmus of Panama. So he resigned, and Secretary Taft, with the approval of the President, accepted the resignation to take effect at once, and frankly and forcibly expressed his opinion of a man who would drop a public work in a critical place for the sake of a raise in salary. Mr. Wallace professes his utter inability to see the point of the secretary's criticism of his course. It was a plain business proposition and "justice to his family" required that he accept the offer. (Why is it that a man always talks about justice to his family when he is justifying himself for laying hold of a good thing?) The point involved is rather a delicate one. When is a man justified in resigning a position in the public service for his own financial betterment? Shall one say always? That would be absurd. No one would feel anything but contempt for an army officer who would resign in time of war to accept a better salary than his commission brought him. A president who should resign to accept higher pay at other work would be considered to have disgraced the office. Shall one say then that a public official is never justified in resigning to better himself financially? No, anyone would admit that a postmaster or customs officer might under ordinary circumstances properly resign if it were to his interest to do so. The most obvious rule, if one must have a rule, seems to be that it is dishonorable to leave a public office for private gain if the place cannot be filled in such a way that public interests will not be jeopardized. No one need hold an office from sense of duty when a hundred men who could fill it just as well are waiting for a chance. It is doubtful whether a change in engineers can be effected just now without endangering the enterprise to some considerable degree, but it is a point upon which we do not feel prepared to pass an expert opinion. The place has been filled by the appointment of John F. Stevens as chief engineer.

Mr. Shonts, chairman of the Canal Commission, says that the policy will be adopted of looking after the health and comfort of the employes in the canal zone before any effort is made to push the work of actually digging the canal. So much has been said about the unsanitary conditions and the dissatisfaction of the men, that he is anxious to show that affairs are not nearly so bad as they have been represented and to remove any actual grounds for criticism which may exist.

The policy of buying in the cheapest market, whether that happens to be at home or abroad, is being carried out. A representative has been in England and on the continent during the past two months investigating the prices of various articles, especially steel rails and ships. He has gotten options on both commodities from a number of English and German firms.

The Voice of the Rabbis.

The Central Conference of American Rabbis, recently in session in Cleveland, took a stand in opposition to the reading of the Bible in public schools. The committee on sectarianism presented a report embodying the following, which was approved: "The place of the Bible is in the home, the church and the church school. To force it into the public educational institutions is not merely to suggest that these three agencies are powerless to effect the desired results, but it is likewise to interfere with the growth of a finer and larger human brotherhood. It has created ill-feeling between Catholic and Protestant, and has caused both to look down upon the Jew." The theory that the contempt for the Jew, which has been a sad fact in a large part of the Christian world for many centuries, is due to the reading of the Bible in the public schools, is a distinctly novel contribution to the argument upon this well-worn question. As a matter of fact, it might be very plausibly maintained that the current estimate of the Jew would be very materially raised—and thereby brought more nearly to the point which justice to that race demands—if, to the common acquaintance with the Jews of to-day, were added a degree of familiarity with the Jews of antiquity whose exploits are recorded only in the Bible. It will probably have to be accepted as a fact that we can neither ask nor trust our public schools to teach religion, much as we may wish that religious training might be a part of every child's education. But the fact that the origin of our religion is more or less involved in Hebrew history is no sufficient reason why we should shut our eyes, so far as public school teaching is concerned, to the whole body of Hebrew history and literature.

National Education Association.

The forty-fourth annual session of the National Education Association met at Asbury Park, N. J., July 3-7. The meeting of the N. E. A. brings together every year a great many thousand teachers of all grades, from the kindergarten to the university, from all parts of the country, including a very distinguished group of those who stand forth by common consent as the leaders of the teaching profession. It is not too much to say that, under ordinary circumstances, any resolution passed by the N. E. A.—and it does not hesitate to express itself by resolution, though it does so as a rule only after prolonged and careful investigation—represents the preponderance of sound educational opinion in this country at the present time. The chief work of the association is carried on through its seventeen departments (e. g., elementary education, secondary education, higher education, normal schools, etc.), each of which is fully organized for the consideration of topics within its own special sphere. Since many of these departmental meetings are held simultaneously, it was impossible for the representative of the Christian Evangelist to attend them all, and the subjects considered were too numerous to permit an enumeration of them. It was particularly noticeable that the well-worn phrase "the three R's" was brought into play with great frequency, and that the speakers who referred to the subject usually characterized, more or less emphatically, the insistence upon the three R's to the exclusion of the so-called "fads and frills" of modern education, as a narrow and unintelligent attitude toward the real problems of education. Whatever we outsiders may think about it—we have nothing to do with the schools except to pay for them and send our children to them—it is tolerably obvious that the pedagogues are pretty firmly convinced that nature-study and drawing and music and the like are as fundamental and essential as the time-honored reading, writing and arithmetic, and that the matter will not be helped at all by scornfully denominating everything except the venerable triad as "fads and frills." Mayor George B. McClelland, of New York, gave an address on the afternoon of the Fourth of July in which he took occasion to attempt to rally the friends of the three R's. The attempt was scarcely a success. On Friday, the last day of the session, President Roosevelt gave an address.

A Lawyer's Conscience.

James B. Dill, a corporation lawyer who has been noted for handling big cases and getting big fees, has given up his practice and accepted an appointment as judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. If the current statements are true, Mr. Dill is exchanging a practice worth $300,000 a year for an office with a salary of $3,000. It is not, as with Mr. Root, a question of using the office as the stepping-stone to a higher one, but of serving the commonwealth. His opinions upon many points intimately connected with the management of the great corporations which he has been serving have gradually altered until he is in the curious position of an anti-trust agitator who has been instrumental in forming more trusts than any other man in America. It appears that he is quitting his practice simply because he believes that he can serve the public better as a low-salaried judge than as a high-salaried attorney.

Science and Life.

Professor Loeb, now of Berkeley, and Professor Burke, of Cambridge, have been giving forth the results of some very interesting experiments touching the origin of life. Professor Burke, using sterilized bouillon as his medium, has brought into being certain particles of matter which he is inclined to think may possess a sort of life. He is pretty sure that they do not represent the development of any living germ which crept in by reason of imperfect sterilization or other defect in the manipulation of the materials, but he is not quite sure that the result is actually life. If it is, he thinks he has secured spontaneous generation. One observes that there are several ifs. We shall wait with interest their elimination by further experiment. This whole question of the origin of life is very interesting, and these investigations are eminently worth while. But, even at the risk of speaking prematurely when such experiments are in progress, one can but remark that hunting for life—not its forms and manipulations, but the thing itself—with scientific apparatus, bears some resemblance to a search for artistic values by similar processes. Shall one find the qualities which give artistic worth to a great painting by chemical analysis of the paint and canvas or by accurately describing the physical process by which they were combined? Can any statement in terms of material things and processes ever adequately define an artistic product? However keen the research may be, the meshes of the scientific net can never be so fine but that artistic values will pass through them and escape. Perhaps at last we shall find that it is so with vital things, that the quality of life, however closely it may be associated with the material which is vitalized, is in itself too subtle, one may even say too spiritual, to be stated in terms of physical science. The phenomena which life produces will still be worthy of study; but even if a method of spontaneous generation is discovered, life will not be reduced to the plane of a merely physical fact.

Better Bible Study.

The reports that have reached us of the International Sunday-school Convention which has been in session in Toronto, Canada, indicate that the long delayed project of furnishing an optional course of advanced lessons for mature students who have been through the seven years' course offered at present under the international system, has at last been ratified by the convention. At the last triennial session of the convention, held at Denver in June, 1902, the plan was discussed at length and was defeated. The feeling of the majority seemed to be that the present system, while not necessarily perfect, was entirely adequate for all reasonable demands, and that the whole principle of uniformity would be endangered if it were permitted to introduce an independent system of lessons for advanced pupils. There was apparently a degree of apprehension lest the entire edifice should collapse like a house of cards if any part of it were touched. There were others who considered these fears quite groundless, and who thought that, in any case, it was far more important to have everybody in a school learning something than to have part of them, for the sake of uniformity, devoting their time to matter from which they learn nothing. The advance which has been made in Sunday-school work under the international lesson system has been enormous, and the idea itself has contributed much to the religious life of the age. There is no valid reason why it should not continue in service. But it is a truth which has for considerably more than a decade been forcing itself upon the attention of educators who are especially interested in religious education, that improvements of a somewhat radical character were called for. There is no reason why these improvements should not come under the leadership of the same international organization which has so long been in the lead. The action of the Toronto convention indicates that the organization is awakening to the requirements of the situation.

"My Personal Plea."

This is the title of a printed circular which the venerable Dr. George H. Ball of the Free Baptists has issued and sent to a limited number of ministers. It is a tender and forceful plea for union and co-operation between the Free Baptist churches of Christ and the churches of Christ without the Free Baptist prefix but which nevertheless do claim to be both free and baptized.

In the beginning of his "plea" Dr. Ball says:

> "When the Christ-life entered my soul I was amazed and grieved to observe divisions and rivalries in the Christian church. The prayer of Christ, John 17: 21-23, moved me deeply and yet gave me comfort. In my heart of hearts I felt that this prayer must be answered, and began at once to seek the meeting place where all churches are to become one in Christ."

This meeting place he found in "the fellowship of the Free Baptist churches of Christ," which, in his judgment then and now "stand for organized Christianity just as Jesus stands, with nothing added, nothing omitted." Not that they have attained to perfection, but that "the aim we have is perfect, and we press toward the mark, seeking to know Christ fully, attain his thoughts perfectly, and organize his ideas and wishes without default or defect."

What nobler aim could any body of religious people set for itself than to "organize Christ's ideas and wishes without default or defect"? Is not that the identical aim of the churches of this Reformation? Dr. Ball quotes from a statement of one of their conventions in relation to unity, the following: "We regard loyalty to Christ and the Bible, and the independence of the local church, as a basis on which closer relationship with other religious bodies may be attained." After pointing out that they are shut out from union with "one large body of baptized Christians" because "they deny the right of many true disciples of Christ to express their faith in and homage to him in the sacred supper," Dr. Ball offers seven reasons why union between Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ should be effected. These reasons far outweigh any real or imaginary difficulties in the way of such union.

On the question of name Dr. Ball has the following statements which can but appeal to all his brethren:

> It is not demanded that we add to, or take from, our name at all in order to come into working fellowship as proposed. It will however be gratifying and encouraging if we voluntarily write and speak the family name of our churches which we now only imply. They are churches of Christ; that is their family name and precious above every name. Why should we not exalt it, write it and speak it? Do we not dishonor Christ and do ourselves injustice by merely implying it? We should seriously object to having our respective family names merely implied, and to being introduced as merely John, and James, and Peter, and Jacob. But the family name of our churches is infinitely more sacred and dear to us, and certainly should not be ignored or unuttered. We should speak it out, and write it out, irrespective of union. Free Baptist church of Christ has a sweet sound in the believer's ear, and reads beautifully in Christian literature.

The Free Baptist churches of Christ, he argues, need the infusion of the new energy and fresh methods of the Disciples of Christ. "We certainly need evangelistic and growing power," he says; "the Disciples have a superabundance of it, and have consequently increased in the last forty years by the addition of more than a million members. They have hundreds of able, discreet, spiritual evangelists, eager to work with us. By opening our churches to them, and by hearty co-operation with them, and they with us, a great awakening would surely follow."

The aged veteran longs to see this consummation before he goes hence. "My mission on earth will soon end, but if I shall see the great trust committed to us handled, used and conveyed onward bravely, and wisely, and effectively, and made clear as the meeting place of the churches of Christ, it will give me infinite joy."

May he live to see the union he so earnestly desires!

Brother Ely on the Monroe Union.

We freely accord to Brother Ely whose letter appears elsewhere, the purest and sincerest motives in the position he takes as respects this union. We hope he is able to do the same toward his brethren in Monroe, Wis., who have been trying to carry out our Lord's prayer for the unity of his followers.

Brother Ely says he is "in favor of unity; but it must be effected upon a scriptural basis." Is not this exactly what every denomination in Christendom is saying? And by "a scriptural basis" each one means its denominational basis, for of course it believes its own basis to be "scriptural." Now the plan of union proposed by our reformatory movement differs from that of others in that we do not demand that others shall agree with us in all matters of scriptural interpretation. We are willing to leave much for future growth in the knowledge of God's will to accomplish, if only the Lordship of Christ be accepted in the organic constitution of the church, according to the consensus of Christian scholarship. This involves the "one Lord, one faith and one baptism." This accepted, there may be differences of opinion, differences of interpretation and a variety in methods of worship and of Christian work, without disturbing "the unity of the Spirit."

The chief obstacle to Christian unity to day is that denominationalists attach more importance to their denominational opinions and usages than they do to the plainest teaching of Christ and his apostles concerning unity. The latter, they freely admit, ought to be carried out, but the former must be maintained even at the cost of perpetuating our unholy divisions in the church of Christ. They have a denominational conscience, but no conscience for Christian union. What we have to beware of is this same undue attachment to and undue exaltation of our interpretations and practices which we thoroughly believe to be scriptural, but which are not fundamental to Christian life and Christian unity, and concerning which men equally loyal to Christ may differ. Brother Ely, whose fidelity to what he believes to be right, all of us who know him freely acknowledge, will pardon us for saying that his position seems to us to reach this extreme, and therefore to be preventive of unity. To assume, not only that we are infallibly right in the things mentioned, but that others who differ from us are thereby so invalidated in Christian character as to be unworthy of union with us, is to make our inerrancy a test of fellowship.

We are sure that few of our readers will agree with Brother Ely in regarding the name "Union Church of Christ" as equally unscriptural and objectionable as "Presbyterian church." Is the idea of union so foreign to the New Testament as that? If so, what becomes of our plea for Christian union? This is to come into bondage to the letter and to lose the spirit as concerns the matter of name. If Christ be honored in the name of his church, what need we care for innocent prefixes which express a historic fact?

Concerning the weekly observance of the Lord's supper we need only repeat what we have already stated, that there is no prohibition of weekly observance for those who feel it to be a duty, while there is no demand for a weekly observance on the part of those who do not yet feel it to be a duty. This is Christian liberty without which there can be no Christian union among those holding differing views.

As to the division of the offerings, is not that just what existed before the union? Nothing is lost, therefore, on that score, while much has been gained in other respects, with a reasonable probability that in a little while their offerings will flow through the same channel. Meanwhile, if we are willing to receive Baptists into our churches, and to unite with them, is it such an un-Christian use of funds that we should not agree that those who have been Baptists may continue their missionary offerings through their missionary societies, without disturbing their fellowship with us?

Finally, ought we not to remember that we profess to be congregationalists in church government, and that, as such, we can afford to allow a little congregational autonomy in a matter of this kind that in no way commits other congregations to the same policy unless they choose to adopt it? It is entirely proper to discuss, in a fraternal way, the wisdom or propriety of such action, provided we do not assume an ecclesiastical censorship over the case that is foreign to our method of church organization and government. We have consented to the publication of these articles, and have made these editorial strictures, because of the general principles involved, and in the hope that it would in no way embarrass the brethren in Monroe in carrying out their union.

The Abuse of the College Degree.

The story is told of Dr. Johnson, that on visiting the University of St. Andrew, in Scotland, whence academic honors are supposed to have been plentifully obtained, for the purpose of literary as well as medical quackery, without any other proof of ability than that of being able to pay certain fees, he inquired of one of the professors into the state of their funds; and being informed that they were less affluent than many of their neighbors, remarked: "It is no matter; persevere in your present plan, and you will certainly get rich—by degrees."

One would think our American institutions, by this measurement, would soon own the earth. Our five hundred chartered colleges have been showering these honors so lavishly within a few weeks, that the man seems most distinguished among his fellows who is without one. Harvard gave over a thousand, and a single little New England institution conferred fifty-four honorary degrees. Many of these colleges are little more than high schools, but their D. D.'s and LL. D's and Ph. D.'s are authorized by state legislatures and are as unassailable as those of Harvard or Yale. The result is to greatly cheapen the degree. It is no longer a badge of scholarship or distinction. It tends to make the whole business ridiculous. No man is distinguished by an honor which is showered indiscriminately upon a host of mediocrities at every commencement.

What is the remedy? Let the colleges cease to grant these honorary distinctions altogether, or else bestow them only on careful examinations, or on men who will really honor the institution which honors them. The University of Virginia, one of the greatest schools on the continent, never confers an honorary degree. It is a good example to follow. The college degree adds little to the fame of a really great man. Nobody asks whether Washington or Lincoln or Gladstone was ever made an LL. D., or whether Beecher or Spurgeon ever received the Doctor Divinitatis. Our institutions however, in conferring titles, may honor themselves, or dishonor themselves, according to the discrimination shown in the selection of persons thus honored. Honorary titles are not without value if truly honorable. The doctorate ought to mean something and not have the force of the Kentucky colonelcy, but too often this is all it means. It recalls the classical anecdote of a certain pedant who presented himself at Cambridge for a doctor's degree and, as is usual on such occasions, the questioning was in Latin.

"Quid est creare?" What is it to create?

"Ex nihil facere," was the answer. To make out of nothing.

"Ergo, te doctorem creamus!" Therefore, we make you a doctor!

Europeans laugh at our abuse of these college honors, but they are given to humbug titles of a higher sort. A regular dealer in orders and titles was recently exposed in Berlin, a trafficker in honors in many European states, a Tyrolean who issues a regular price list, offering a degree of nobility in certain German states at $30,000; a baronetcy at $50,000; a Spanish title for $4,000; Turkish orders from $2,000 downward, and Persian orders at low prices; Portuguese titles of count and marquis at a bargain, and other distinctions for certain sums to those willing to devote the necessary money to "charitable purposes." Humbuggery is not exclusively an American product.

The fact is, this whole business of titles is opposed both to republican simplicity and to the simplicity that is in Christ. In the state we know Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, Charles Sumner and Wendell Phillips, Henry W. Longfellow and John G. Whittier, Daniel Webester and William McKinley. Loftiest dignities of the schools would mar their beauty. In the church, Martin Luther, John Wesley, John Bunyan, Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott and Isaac Errett, need neither prefix nor suffix. Matthew 23:8 is still in force.

Notes and Comments.

Two thousand is the number of churches that ought to contribute to Church Extension next September. The fact is, there ought to be many more than that, but what we mean is this: Last year, the Church Extension secretary tells us, there were only 1,269 churches which contributed to that splendid fund. We mean that the number of contributing churches to that fund should be swelled to 2,000 this year. That would be an increase of a little more than seven hundred churches. It would be a splendid increase, but why not struggle to reach it?

Brother Muckley is calling on the churches that will agree to make this offering in September next to report to him by July 31, so that he may report to the San Francisco convention how many churches have promised the offering, since he cannot, because of the earlier date of the convention, report the amount contributed, as the other secretaries will be able to do. We hope the preachers and church officials will see to it that their churches notify Brother Muckley that they will be in line when the time comes for this offering. Let us get up a little generous rivalry among the states, to see which has the largest number of churches responding to this request, in proportion to its membership.

In the actual number of churches promised to make this September offering, we see that Ohio is ahead. It is a way she has. Illinois follows, with Indiana holding the third place, and then comes Missouri, with only 37 of her 1,700 churches which have notified the secretary of their purpose to make this offering. Kansas is very close to her with 29, and as soon as her wheat harvest is over, she will probably forge ahead. We see no good reason why any church in the brotherhood should refuse to join in this great enterprise, and notify G. W. Muckley, the secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., that it is going to do so. Let us have a rapid increase all along the line.

A layman says, in the Congregationalist, that there seems to be a growing tendency in these days of increasing business pressure for the men to lose sight of the spiritual life. If such a condition be general all the more need for our Business Men's Association, a call from which appears on another page. Business life is nowhere so strenuous that men cannot get away from its demands for awhile and shifting of responsibility is no excuse for ignoring of duty. The great Lord of the harvest has claims that men cannot afford to ignore.

President Roosevelt preached a sermon for the whole people in his address at Harvard. Here is a ringing sentence: "Every man of great wealth who runs his business with cynical contempt for those provisions of the law which by hired cunning he can escape or evade, is a menace to our community, and the community is not to be excused if it does not develop a spirit which actively frowns on and discountenances him." This is a thought—the obligation of the citizen to be very much better than the law compels him to be—that needs to be constantly emphasized.

Mr. Jerome may know New York, but he had better let Mr. Folk attend to Missouri. It is a fair presumption that the governor of this state knows what its citizens want better than the New York prosecutor does.

Brethren, let us hear from you on the subject of the best time to hold the convention.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Some men are born great, it is said, while others achieve greatness, and others have greatness thrust upon them. The latter fate, it seems, has fallen to the lot of ye Easy Chair Editor. At a meeting of the members of our Pentwater Resort Association held at Pentwater July 4th the members voted to call our new resort located between Lake Michigan and Pentwater lake, "Garrison Park"! Think how much more honorable that is than to have a cigar named after you! The books we have written will, in time, no doubt be forgotten, and disappear entirely even from the shelves of second-hand book stores. The thirty-six volumes of the Christian-Evangelist and its predecessors we have written and edited, will, in time, be interesting only to the antiquarian. The little reputation we may have made as Editor or preacher will fade away largely with the generation that knew us. But "Garrison Park," with its forest-crowned sand-dunes, its deep, shady ravines, its pines, oaks, beech and hemlock, will remain there while time lasts. The forces of nature and the art of man will modify its external features, no doubt, but there it stands, like Lexington and Concord and Bunker Hill, and there it will remain forever! We naturally shrank from such earthly immortality, and suggested other more alluring names, but the majority was stubborn and set in its ideas. So let it be; but we serve notice now that the first Coney Island feature that is introduced in that summer resort will be the signal for a change of name, for the Park; and of summer home for the Editor.

It was a pleasant little expedition that six of us made from Macatawa to Pentwater last week, where we spent the "Glorious Fourth." The town and lake of Pentwater are only 80 miles north of Macatawa and a ride of four hours, with a half-hour rest at Muskegon, over the Pere Marquette R. R., brought us to the scene of our new summer resort. Arriving about 9 o'clock in the evening, two of our party ferried across the channel to the hotel in town while the rest of us walked west through a wooded and romantic ravine, to the Lake Michigan front, where we took quarters at the "Club House," as the cozy little hotel of the Oceana Beach Co. is called, and where we soon fell asleep to the music of the waves. Some of our party had not seen the place before, and were charmed by the beautiful beach, the wooded heights standing guard against the encroachments of the lake, and the quietness and peace that seemed to rest on the hills, the sandy beach and the many-hued inland sea that stretched away to the distant horizon. The new walk along the lake front, which we have just completed, made it easy to pass from the Club House south along the front of Garrison Park, (just as well get used to it!) to where the first cottage on the new resort was going up in the woods. It is to be called "The Pioneer." At least, that is the decision of the wife of the "Easy Chair," and she generally has her way, and it is generally a very good way. There, in a humble pine cottage, surrounded by pines and hemlocks, through which, on the west, the great lake spreads out its glories to the eye and sends up its unceasing anthem to the ear, we shall probably be domiciled by the time this reaches our readers.

One of the advantages of a lake shore residence is the wide range of vision it gives to the eye. It is interesting, and restful too, to sit on the veranda at the evening time and watch the glory with which the setting sun surrounds himself as he completes his circuit and is departing beneath the horizon. While at Pentwater a few evenings since, there was one of those sunset scenes which fires the imagination and impresses itself deeply on the memory. Just beneath the sun there lay an uneven ridge of clouds which was easily converted into a mountain range. In front of this there seemed to flow through the opalescent sky a broad amber-colored river dotted here and there with little islands like "the isles of the blest." Gorgeous castles lined the shores of this wonderful river as it seemed to broaden out into the gulf of the infinities. When the sun had sunk behind this mountain range of clouds a coronal of flame rested along its summit and assumed the appearance of a mighty forest fire. Looking at such scenes one may give the reins to his imagination and find his castles in the air already built, and painted with a glory which even the temple of Solomon could not emulate. One may see cities rise and fall and imagine that the drama of history is being pictured before his eyes. Animals of various kinds, and birds, and the faces and forms of human beings, some grotesque, and others true to life, come into shape and fade away. After all, does not the ephemeral character of these cloud-figures illustrate the transientness of all human glory, and of all those things which most people prize most highly?

> "All flesh is as grass,
> And all the glory thereof as the flower of the grass."

The very clouds teach us the same lesson.

While watching the clouds thus the other evening, shot through as they were with the rays of the evening sun, a small patch of vapor broke up into letters that spelled out clearly before our eyes the word "needs." This was such a striking phenomenon that we called the attention of others to it, but before they could find the word it had passed into another form, though not without starting a train of reflections upon the world's needs. A celestial observer looking down upon the earth and witnessing its sins, its sorrows, its sufferings, would probably find in that one word, "needs," the best epitome of his impressions. There is need of education and enlightenment, of salvation from the power of sin, of comfort in our distresses, of strength for our weaknesses, of guidance in our perplexities. There is need for more unselfishness, more charity, more honesty, more unity, more sincerity, more earnestness, more patience, more perseverance in well-doing. Oh, the manifold needs of our race! Its supreme need, however, is the need of men and women, Christ-filled and Christ-led, to minister to human needs. The word "needs" written in cloud-letters may fade from the sky, but it is engraved too deeply on the human mind and heart, and is written too indelibly on the face of the earth, to ever fade away. There are the fatherless and the widows to be ministered unto; the unfortunate to be cared for; the wayward to be regained; troubled hearts to be comforted; children to be trained; society to be purified; industry to be reorganized; politics to be elevated into ethics; nations to be brought into peaceful co-operation, and the kingdom of God to be made triumphant in all the world. Blessed is the man who has a vision of the world's needs, and dedicates his life to its service.

"Comfort Ye One Another."

By Laurene Highfield.

Comfort ye one another;
This world is o'erborne with care,
With grief, and with cruel heart-aches,
And burdens full hard to bear.
For time hastens on, and daily
Other hearts are bereft and sad,
Other lives are in need of solace
For things that once made them glad.

Comfort ye one another
With words fraught with heaven's peace;
Speak oft of a living Saviour,
Whose love for you ne'er will cease.
Be glad that he heeds your sorrow,
This tender One, wise and true,
Take courage, sad heart, believing
That he loves and cares for you.

Comfort ye one another;
Dwell much in the land afar,
For sighing nor care can enter
Where Christ and the Father are.
Seek peace in that consolation
Which only his servants know,
And doing the tasks he gives you,
Find comfort for all your woe.

Comfort ye one another;
The Saviour knows all your grief,
And counting his mercies over,
In them you may find relief;
Take refuge beneath his pinions,
For healing is in his wings,
And casting your care upon him,
Find comfort in holy things.

Our Early Days in California By R. L. McHatton

J. N. B. Wyatt,
our first convert in California.

who studied law and then crossed the plains to preach the gospel.

J. P. McCorkle,
A great preacher.

Glenn O. Burnett,
Brother of the first governor of California.

In this hurriedly arranged sketch we do not include southern California. Nor can we more than mention important events. The history of the Christian churches of California began in the days of gold. Among the seekers for the precious metal were the adherents of our cause. They brought this glorious plea from Missouri when Pike county was the most known section of that state. If we could turn the pages of their deeds we would read the good with joy and blot the ill with tears.

The first Christian preacher was Thomas Thompson. It is quite certain he preached our first sermon, and we are quite positive that his hands baptized our first convert in California—J. N. B. Wyatt is the man and he resides in Winters and is a very useful member of the church. The beautiful Feather river has the honor of yielding its waters in order that this man might show forth the death, burial and resurrection of his Lord who went into and came out of the real grave for him. In 1858 Father Thompson wrote W. W. Stevenson, editor of The Western Evangelist, that there were only two congregations in California in 1851, "the first at Stockton and the second at Santa Clara, and we two the only public speakers." While not a wealthy man, he was not compelled to depend entirely on ministerial pay. So he was able to render valuable service in the days when money was scarce. A man of untiring energy and strong body, he visited about all of the settled portions of the state. He was the organizer of many of the early churches or was present to assist. He was well taught in the word, having groped his way from denominationalism, and well remembered the road. Thus was he able to help many a soul into the true path. Having the confidence of the brethren his influence was limited only by the people with whom he came in contact.

Thomas Thompson and wife,
the first Christian preacher in California.

In his buggy he rode hundreds of miles to rally the churches for our first state meeting, which we believe was held in Stockton. We have no record of this meeting. The first state meeting of which we have a written account was conducted in our meeting house in Vaca Valley, October, 1856. "State meeting" is the correct term, for these were not conventions, but great gatherings of saints and sinners where the simple gospel was delivered. Beginning at Yountville, in 1858, they were great camp meetings held out-of-doors, because there were no houses to contain the thousands who were present. Here is your outfit: "Bring one empty bed tick; one pillow, for each person; two blankets, one comforter, one pair of sheets; one wash pan, one cake of soap, two towels and an earnest heart and willing hands. Tie up all but hands and heart with a strong rope and check for Woodland." Hundreds came in wagons. All lived in tents or board shacks. Meals were supplied at the free table and restaurant, while families often prepared their own food. With the growth of population and the inability of the churches to entertain the multitudes we were compelled to locate these gatherings. Santa Cruz is now our home, where we have a tabernacle able to seat 2,500, our dining hall, cottages and camping grounds with every convenience of city life. While it was the main purpose of these convocations to convert sinners, there was the business meeting—not always harmonious, but developing into a delegated convention. Our present plan of co-operative work was adopted with the help of L. B. Wilkes and Alexander Procter, who were invited to come all the way from Missouri to advise the brethren. The first year there was not enough money to sustain an evangelist, but the second year the state board, with E. B. Ware, chairman, and J. H. McCollough, secretary, telegraphed the writer at Gallatin, Mo., to become state evangelist. Since that time, January, 1883, we have had the regularly organized work. Space forbids to recount the efforts of the splendid men who went out from the business meetings and the results of the better systematized work.

Father Thompson was joined in his first decade of toil by worthy co laborers and we have in our first records these preachers, Thomas Thompson, Byram Lewis, J. K. Rule, JohnP . McCorkle, J. N. Pendegast, Joshua Lawson, and Wm. T. Brown. John O. White of Missouri and John G. Parish of Ohio were visiting evangelists. John N. Pendegast was born in South Carolina. He was well educated and by profession a lawyer. He taught school in Kentucky where he married one of his pupils, by whose influence he was converted. It was not long until he gave his fine talents to the ministry of Christ. In 1854 he crossed the plains in a wagon. His family was a true wife and seven children. When he arrived in the mines of California he was crippled and his family was destitute. Read these words of his son-in-law and know something of the cost of planting our cause in the golden west. "He went to the store on Saturday evening to buy a few things with his last means. It was noised around that there was a preacher in camp and they appointed a committee to ask him to preach on the morrow. He thought, what do these rough men care for the gospel? But he consented and on Sunday there assembled in the store a good sized audience, and they turned the noisy post into a church and paid the best of attention to the missionary of the cross, while he pleaded with them to live for better things. At the close of the sermon, a miner arose and told the audience about the preacher's misfortunes and asked for a contribution; when they returned him the hat it contained forty dollars. Overcome with emotion, he thanked and blessed them, hastened to his camp and asked his wife to take a walk with him. When they had gone aside he showed her the handful of gold. They both burst into tears of joy and gratitude and poured out their souls to God in thanksgiving and prayer."

Donald Duncan,
the first person baptized in Nevada.

John P. McCorkle was a great preacher, full of zeal for the ancient gospel and he pressed the war to the gates. He knew the Book and preached it. Ever ready to defend the truth, he met all opposers with the two edged sword. His converts were well taught and were able to contend for the faith. He made good preparation for his sermons and by looking at his notebook many of our best university men could get points in arranging a logical discourse. While a positive man he was richly endowed on the spiritual side. The best sermon I ever heard on prayer was delivered by him.

Joshua Lawson preached the first sermon in the Woodland community and was a successful worker in that part of the Sacramento valley. Glenn O. Burnett, brother of our first governor, was in the state in the early fifties, but spent some time in Oregon, but was present at the state meeting in Yountville in 1858. He was a bright man, a beautiful talker, of considerable literary culture and he could preach a sermon that could go to the printer with but little correction. These men stood for Bible revision and colleges as the records indicate. In fact they were all-round men and would be a blessing to any state.

In the second ten years we have such men as A. W. DeWitt, J. P. Rose, A. V. McCarty, the evangelist, James Anderson, S. W. Faudre, E. B. Ware and James Logan. Robert Graham was here during the war and a few years following. He preached in Santa Rosa and San Francisco and was at the head of the public schools in the former city.

In the seventies we call up J. H. McCollough, W. H. Martin, Alexander Johnston, J. Durham, Hiram Connell, J. C. Keith, J. M. Monroe, T. P. Haley. J. W. Craycroft, S. K. Hallam and a host of splendid men who were followed later by A. M. Elston, H. G. Hartley, J. W. Webb, Henry Shadle and then you could run your list into the hundreds. We would require whole articles to tell of our educational work, the Christian women of California and the C. W. B. M. These, with the Sunday-school work, the Endeavorers and our great evangelistic meetings, would be very interesting reading.

The Holiness of Holidays

By James Mudge, D. D.

The unholy holiday—spent in brutish pleasures unrestrained, a carnival of riot, ministering to sin, demoralizing, delirious, degrading—from which one returns jaded, disgusted and less fitted every way for the serious pursuits of life—is perfectly well known, and far too much in evidence all around us. Sometimes an entire vacation, through mismanagement or innate incapacity and ineptitude, will harm instead of help. There is no need of it of course. The holiday, whether brief or prolonged, is one of the divine arrangements, and may be made to minister to the solid good of both soul and body.

Each of these two partners is aided through the other. Not without deep meaning is the close connection in our English speech between holiness and health. Holy, whole, hale are one in structure and spirit. God hath joined them together, though man too often has essayed to put them asunder. There is a similar lesson in the bond of derivation which unites integer and integrity. Man is properly a unit, not (except for temporary convenience of examination) to be split up into separate parts. Fractional treatment of him fails to meet the vital necessities of the case. Each fragment or section of his being is so closely, indissolubly linked with the others that no one can be impaired without impairing all, no one helped without helping the rest. The apparent hiding of God's face has often come from the derangement of bodily functions, and the true prescription for many spiritual maladies would not be more prayer but more air.

Cleanliness is veritably a part of godliness; he who frees himself from all filthiness of the flesh will find his spirit in better condition. Moral and physical purity are closely allied. Holiness is not merely spiritual, it pertains to the entire man. The most subtle and the most transcendent parts of a man's profoundest life are inextricably interwoven with the texture of his muscles, and the very marrow of his bones. He thinks well, loves well, prays well because of the red corpuscles of his blood. If the harp of his nervous system is out of tune how can the psalm of his days be played other than poorly? This has been far too much forgotten. Only when it is duly remembered can it be clearly seen how close is the bearing on holiness of heart held by holidays and vacations.

It is no longer an open question with sensible folks whether ministers and other religious people (in spite of the incessant activity of Satan) have a right to lay aside their work for a season and kick up their heels in glad freedom from toil. They have no right not to do so, provided circumstances at all favor it. The greatest efficiency of their work and the largest outcome of their life imperatively demand it. So much is very certain, that such periods of leisure furnish a keener test of a man's real character than the times when he is busy. In the latter he is so hemmed in and bound about by custom and necessity that he has little opportunity for entire freedom of choice, or for showing what he really is. In the former he has much more initiative, and the way he uses it reveals quite plainly his comparative wisdom or foolishness. Happy is he, and also proved to be well furnished in the upper story, who can plan a vacation so skilfully as to get out of it, with small cost, ample refreshment for body, mind and soul.

That holidays may be so managed as to augment holiness, or in other words tend to the enrichment and strengthening of character, no one can doubt. The possibilities in this line are very great, and hence the responsibilities. For one thing, what a chance they furnish, or should furnish, to study God's works, and so come closer to the Creator. Where the mountains tower grand and grim, where the dark forests stretch their hospitable arms, where the dancing river leaps and laughs, where the daisies and buttercups besprinkle the green fields, where the moonbeams chase each silver wave over the blue bosom of the unresting sea, where the many-twinkling smile of gray old ocean greets the enraptured gazers, let the tired denizen of the fretful city drink a full cup of delight. Let him forget the pell-mell rush of the maddened crowd, abjure newspapers, if not books, and give himself up to the healing balm of trees and flowers and birds. Let him look into the heavens, and meditate on the deep things of God and the soul.

Over against the vast multitude who are so pestiferously busy turning our precious holy days into harmful holidays, promoting Sunday picnics and ball games, would it not be well to have a goodly band of godly people who should determine to make all holidays holy, should so construe their calling as to include in it this lofty and wholesome purpose. There are some things which all such will surely not do as they take their annual vacation. They will not leave behind them their Bible, and its cognate literature. They will rather make careful arrangement to fill up some measure of the arrears in this sort of reading which have too long accumulated, and so lay in a stock of fruitful thought for the more crowded days to come. They will not ignore the little country church or prayer-meeting which they might so brighten by their presence, and in helping be so greatly helped. They will not consider that because they are in loose attire, and have relaxed the strain of the usual pursuits, they can let loose their appetites and passions or forget the power of their influence and example. Many have found, to their bitter chagrin, that in the absence of customary restraint their virtue has proved sadly flabby, and that they have laid the seeds of lasting regret by the follies of their summer indulgence or indiscretion. One may yield what is needful to the physical relaxation made necessary by extreme heat without yielding in the smallest degree to the ever present power of the tempter. As a holiday earned by hard work is doubly delightful, so one which leaves behind it, as it goes, happy memories of good deeds, or ennobling, uplifting thoughts, or timely words spoken for Jesus, is trebly treasured.

Many think they do not need a vacation. In the majority of cases they are mistaken. The quality of their work is of quite as much importance as its quantity. It does not do to hold the axe constantly to the grindstone or keep the bow always bent. Many can not, so they think, take much of a vacation. If it be really so, and not simply a fit of misplaced economy, let them lay hold of the little chances and outings that for a very small sum are spread

WANTED TO SLEEP.

Curious That a Tired Preacher Should Have Such Desire.

A minister speaks of the curious effect of Grape-Nuts food on him and how it has relieved him:

"You will doubtless understand how the suffering with indigestion with which I used to be troubled, made my work an almost unendurable burden, and why it was that after my Sabbath duties had been performed, sleep was a stranger to my pillow till nearly daylight.

"I had to be very careful as to what I ate, and even with all my care I experienced poignant physical distress after meals, and my food never satisfied me.

"Six months have elapsed since I began to use Grape-Nuts food, and the benefits I have derived from it are very definite. I no longer suffer from indigestion, and I began to improve from the time Grape-Nuts appeared on our table. I find that by eating a dish of it after my Sabbath work is done (and I always do so now) my nerves are quieted and rest and refreshing sleep are ensured me. I feel that I could not possibly do without Grape-Nuts food, now that I know its value. It is invariably on our table—we feel that we need it to complete the meal—and our children will eat Grape-Nuts when they cannot be persuaded to touch anything else." around nearly all of us. And let them see if a new apprehension of God's rich, ever-present grace will not yield them so abundant a spiritual refreshment and re-creation that the lack of the other opportunities will scarcely be missed. Even those most closely shut in are not debarred from a cheerful heart, and genuine freedom from care is within the reach of those in extremely straitened circumstances. A prolonged, and even a permanent, holiday from all worry would be in very truth a proof, as well as a means, of holiness; and this is at the command of everyone.

Concerning Baptism

By W. J. BURNER

According to Thayer's New Testament Lexicon, baptism "is a rite of sacred immersion, commanded by Christ, by which men, confessing their sins and professing their faith in Christ, are born again by the Holy Spirit into a new life, come into the fellowship of Christ and the church, and are made partakers of eternal salvation."

If anyone thinks he can improve this definition, he is at liberty to try, but I decline the task.

As baptism is a "rite of sacred immersion," the word "immersion" does not carry the full meaning of "baptism."

At the time of baptism men are repentant. They confess their sins and profess their faith. They approach God through Christ and trust Christ for salvation.

Baptism has authority. It is commanded by Christ. It is fundamentally Christian.

The early apostles and Paul may have interpreted it somewhat differently, as they applied it to different people and set it in relation to different problems, but back of all it belongs to Christ. It is not a mere form. Christ condemns mere forms in religion. It is not a legal condition of salvation. Christ deals with persons, not laws. It is a help to souls which hunger and thirst after righteousness. It is a means by which men approach within forgiving distance of the throne of God. God always forgives a man as soon as the man gets near enough.

Men are born again by the Holy Spirit by baptism. Baptism is an instrument of the Spirit. Being born again is a figure of speech. It has given rise to much theological fiction. It is a pity that Protestants did not reject a literal regeneration along with transubstantiation. As Jesus used the figure, a regenerated man was a disciple; simply that and nothing more. To use another figure, he was a crucified man. If a man was not crucified, he could not enter into the Kingdom of God.

By baptism man entered into a new life. This new life was a fact. It is still a fact. On the divine side of this new life is the forgiveness of sins, the love of God for an obedient son. On the human side there is loving trust, "the fellowship of Christ and the church." The baptized man participated in the thought of Christ, looked at the world from Christ's standpoint, did Christ's work.

By baptism men are made partakers of eternal salvation. Baptism has its place in the process of redemption from the power of sin. How large a place it had in this process depended on the man himself. In the experience of Paul, baptism had a large place. It would not do as much for a smaller soul.

There are many people who have been born into a new life, come into the fellowship of Christ and the church, and have been made partakers of eternal salvation, who have not been baptized. David Livingstone and John G. Paton are examples. That these men came into the fellowship of Christ is a fact. They are made partakers of eternal salvation if eternal salvation can be recognized on earth. They lived the new life that is distinctively Christian. The highest type of the Christian religious character is shown in the lives of both.

From this we conclude that the Holy Spirit is not so poor in resources that it cannot in any case put the Christ-life into men without baptism.

In any case all the good baptism does is done in man's soul. It is not necessary to change God. God is always ready and willing to forgive. The obstacle to forgiveness is in man. If baptism helps one into clean desires and holy thoughts, into renunciation, consecration and devotion, it is unto the remission of sins. Protestants in general have no doctrine of baptism and little use for it. If our doctrine of baptism is cast in a legal mold, they will reject our message. If we can be true to the authority of Christ and to the facts of Christian life, remembering always that baptism is made for man and not man for baptism, we will make our calling and election sure. And let us not think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think. We have many members in our churches who were not baptized for the remission of sins, for their sins cling to them. Perhaps if we could demonstrate that baptism is for the remission of covetousness or uncharitable speaking, our message would be more impressive. Baptism for the remission of indifference to religion would make Presbyterians and Methodists very thoughtful.

serve separate treatment which cannot be given now. We have a rich history in church papers. At this time we are represented in all the important parts of the state and stand as the second Protestant people. This work was accomplished, with God's favor, by our own resources. Until recently we received no help from the east. Now we have the helping hand of the American Christian Missionary Society, the C. W. B. M. and the Extension Fund. There is hardly a church in the northern part of the state that has not had some assistance from our state board.

The church in Nevada was planted by the writer backed by some personal friends and the California state board last October in the city of Reno. It is our only congregation from Salt Lake City to Sacramento. John Young is the minister and is partly sustained by the C. W. B. M. and the Santa Rosa, California, church, of which Peter Colvin is minister.

SIRE TO SON

Boy Can Sometimes Learn From His Father.

When you catch them young enough you can usually make your sons profit by your own experience.

Afterwards, it's different. A lady tells how her son was made to profit by what his father had learned:

"My husband was always fond of coffee, and after his business took him frequently into a German community he drank it more, with the result that his kidneys became affected, and he suffered greatly with pains and despondency, till, as he says, 'coffee nearly killed me!' So he stopped using it, and began to drink Postum Coffee. It cured him; and in a very short time his kidneys resumed their normal functions, his pains were allayed, and the despondency which had nearly driven him crazy ceased to trouble him.

"My little boy, a year old, had suffered ever since he was weaned, from stomach and bowel troubles. He could not properly digest the milk he drank. It passed out of his bowels in hard lumps, sometimes large and again like small pellets, frequently producing diarrhœa, and then we would have to call in the doctor. But the trouble returned, again and again.

"We used to give him a taste of Postum Coffee occasionally, and as I saw that he relished it and realized how much good it had done his father, I began to put a little in his bottle of milk. The effect was so salutary that I gradually increased the quantity, till at last I used only enough milk to give it color. He thrived wonderfully on it. He is over two years old now, and his digestion is all right. Postum has made him uncommonly large and strong and healthy. I give him a bottle full four times a day." Concerning Points of Interest at Colorado Springs.

St. Peter's Dome, on the Short Line to Cripple Creek.

1. The First Christian church: Membership, 750; seating capacity, 1,200; place where your party and the Christians of Colorado Springs, Colorado City and Manitou will hold a mass meeting and general rally Aug. 11; Crayton S. Brooks, minister.

2. The Seven Falls, a reproduction of which forms our frontispiece, is one of the most beautiful spots in all the west. The tourist drives up South Cheyenne Canon over a perfect mountain road, always dustless and as smooth as a city boulevard, past the massive pillars of Hercules, winding around through the deep gorge following a clear mountain stream, until he reaches the Seven Falls. Ascending a long stairway right among the falls one finds the laborious ascent well worth while, for he is rewarded with a picture hardly surpassed in the world. Higher still is the spot where Helen Hunt Jackson's cabin once stood, in which she wrote her poems and stories. Yet higher is the place where once her body was buried.

3. Pike's Peak is the historic landmark of the Rockies and one of its chief attractions. It was the goal of the early travelers entering the west and is still the central object of interest to all approaching this region.

Pike's Peak, Snow Clad.

The ascent is made by the famous "Cog Road," a fine example of modern enterprise and engineering skill. Comfortably seated in an observation car you are pushed slowly but surely up this wonderful stairway of nine miles until you have passed up through the clouds to an altitude of more than 14,000 feet, with no exertion on your part. On the west lie the vast Cordilleras, their snowy outlines fretting the distant horizon. To the east is the limitless plain. On the north you can see Long's Peak, Gray's Peak and the Continental Divide. On the south and southwest appear the sharp points of the Spanish Peaks and the Sangre de Christo Range clothed in dazzling whiteness. The principal cities of the state lie at your feet.

4. St. Peter's Dome is midway between Colorado Springs and the great gold fields of Cripple Creek, on the scenic mountain railroad, the "Short Line." It is the highest mountain in Colorado from which the stars and stripes float continuously.

Undoubtedly the greatest scenic feature of this wonderful region is a trip over this tortuous railway above the clouds. The magnificent panorama of mountain scenery presented, for a distance of forty-five miles, has no equal in the world. The road does not follow the bed of streams, but it goes over the top of mountains and spans mighty canon and tunnels granite walls. The traveler reaches an elevation of 10,000 feet and beholds St. Peter's Dome towering far above, huge and majestic, as if keeping guard over the solemn depths.

5. The Garden of the Gods is an interesting resort, easily accessible. Huge slabs of red sandstone which once lay flat on the earth have been thrown up to a perpendicular position by some volcanic upheaval, probably the same one that created the Rocky mountains. Instead of being a "garden" it rather looks as if his Satanic Majesty once had his headquarters here. It is certain that the Indians once held their councils of war in this weird wilderness. Here also, strange to say, they worshiped. To enjoy the Garden one needs a scarlet imagination and a good guide with an eloquent Irish tongue. Great slabs of red sandstone, over three hundred feet high and fifty feet apart, form the famous "Gateway" through which the tourist enters and "wonderland" is before him.

The Southern Christian Institute

Ripe conditions and taking advantage of them with proper energy are the two elements that make great enterprises. In the missionary work among the negroes we find conditions that are almost overripe and the results all depend on our taking advantage of them. The period when we need to argue the demands of this work has passed by and we need only to know our own opportunities to do a great work.

Boys of Southern Christian Institute in Agricultural Department.

The church of Christ is peculiarly situated to do a work for America by doing missionary work among the negroes. All the other churches are divided into northern and southern sections, or do not have a sympathetic membership in the south. Some of them, like the Presbyterians, are seeking a union on account of this work. They recognize that no lasting work can be accomplished until this is done.

We often hear southern politicians ask that the south be let alone to solve the race problem, but they know not whereof they speak. The circumstances of the south are such that she can not do it. On the other hand, the north can not do it alone. It demands a co-operation of the Christian men and women of both sections, and it is in no sense humiliating for the south to ask the aid of the north in things she can not do.

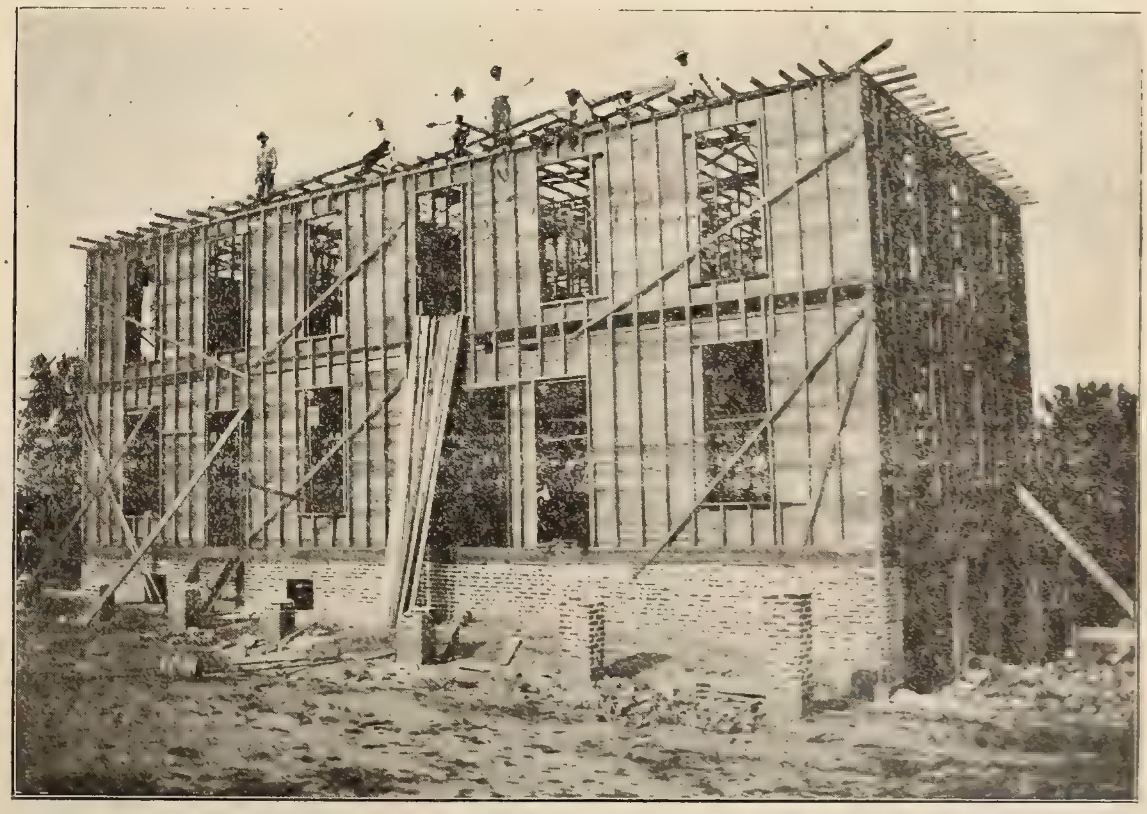
The church of Christ is not only not divided into north and south, but what is better, all the members of the south who are otherwise believers in missionary efforts need not be converted to the principle of educating the negro. Here, then, is a field that seems to be peculiarly laid out for us, and by right of eternal fitness we should move into it.

Our duty and responsibility in this field can be measured only by our opportunity and its needs, but perhaps we can comprehend it more clearly if we make a comparison with the efforts put forth by other churches. The Congregationalists expended last year on the southern field, most of which went to the negro work, $261,000. The Presbyterians raised for negro work $183,000. One branch of the Baptist church raised $125,000. The M. E. church, South, expended last year $34,000, but $25,000 of this was a special gift, which leaves $9,000 as a church contribution. The negro Baptists of Mississippi, Texas, Virginia and Alabama expended last year close on to $40,000. The church of Christ expended last year, including all field work, $15,000. This is entirely out of proportion when we consider our membership and the claims we make. If we would measure our responsibility by the character and number of membership, we would be above the hundred thousand dollar mark. But if we should measure our responsibility by our peculiar adaptation we would most certainly head the list. Until we are willing to recognize these facts we can not claim much part in this great work.

These other missionary schools expend on individual schools from three to twenty times as much as we do at the Southern Christian institute for the same type of work. The negro Baptists of Mississippi raised and expended more to maintain their academy, a literary school, than our great brotherhood has given in the past nine months to the Southern Christian institute, an industrial school of the type of Hampton and Tuskegee.

From the very nature of the circumstances, the mental and industrial drills we could give our students were too superficial to enable them to become leaders as we have desired them to be.

However, in the matter of development of character, we believe our achievements are equal to the best of these other schools. Our young people have won the confidence of the people wherever they have gone. Our urgent need is that we bring our facilities up so the equipment of these young people may be equal to their moral worth.



Class in Carpentry.

The Southern Christian institute is the only school in the gulf states that is manned with white teachers that attempts the kind of industrialism begun by General Armstrong at Hampton institute. This is to build up the school with student labor and mingle with it technical training in the various industries. This necessitates running all the year. The immense advantage in it is that the students stay here all the time until they finish, and their lives are so impressed that their characters are superior. All the other schools, manned by white teachers, close up in the summer time and in these five months the students lose much that they have gained in the session.

This is the ideal way of doing this work, but unless we can greatly increase our resources we can not continue it.

We have an ideal tract of land with the most beautiful spot in Mississippi for a campus. We have a people living about who have learned to appreciate the work and take pleasure in telling of its merits. While our patronage has never been large and cumbersome, it has always been as large as we could properly care for and we now have a student body which in moral worth will measure up to any in the south. Everything is ready and prepared and all we need is to rise to our opportunities.

The owner of a large milling interest near here pays $1.50 a day for as many of our students as he can secure as against 75 cents paid to others, and he cordially commends their character and the value of the school.

Colonel W. A. Montgomery commander of the second Mississippi regiment in the Spanish war, in a recent communication said, "I give my missionary money to other fields and my prayer is that it may do as much good to humanity and our God as the money that is expended at the Southern Christian institute by the people of the church of Christ."

Col. Chas. E. Hooker, who represented this district for over twenty years in congress, recently wrote me a most cordial letter highly commending the work, and others have sent us like letters.

The pioneer work has been done. We know what we can do. If we let this go by again we can scarcely hope ever to accomplish anything in this field. The negro church of Christ will, in its helpless and disorganized state, look us in the face, a condemnation, mutely reminding us that we boast ourselves a great people and cared not for our own.

Edwards, Miss. J. B. LEHMAN.

Report of Iowa's Greatest Convention

That which has just been concluded at Des Moines was called the jubilee convention, but this has been criticised as hardly in accordance with history.

The first attempt to organize in Iowa was at Davenport, in 1848, when three districts were created, hence our state work is really 57 years old.

In 1853 the "Iowa Home Missionary Society" was organized and at Mt. Pleasant, in 1855, this was reorganized under the name of the "Iowa Christian Missionary Society."

At the convention last year it was decided to hold a jubilee convention this year at our Iowa Jerusalem, dating from the Mt. Pleasant organization. Much interest and enthusiasm had been created during the year and the results fully justify the effort and the little strain of history.

It was a great convention in all respects—in numbers, in enthusiasm, in reports of work done, in spirit and especially was it remarkable for the amount of money raised and the ease with which it was done.

As usual, the C. W. B. M. led the van and at such a pace that it was feared the brethren couldn't sustain it. This being the silver anniversary of the Iowa C. W. B. M., in a kind of half jubilee spirit they employed an evangelist at the beginning of the year—J. M. Hoffmann—who did excellent work in the most needy places, helping weak churches and auxiliaries, adding largely to the report for the year, raising funds for two buildings amounting to $2,724.50 and making possible the provision for a C. W. B. M. hospital in India.

The keynote was sounded at a very high pitch the evening before, by the marriage, at the Central church, of their daughter, as stated in the invitations, Dr. Ada McNeill, the Central C. W. B. M. living link in India, to Bro. W. E. Gordon, of India. Like everything the Central does it was in the most complete and admirable form and the excellent work done by both, in their chosen field, will be greatly enhanced by this happy union and the equipment later provided.

The large attendance from the opening session and the presence of Mrs. Helen E. Moses, of the national board, Mrs. C. S. Willard, the Nebraska secretary, H. G. Wilkinson, wife and children and little Consuelo, adopted in Porto Rico, Brother and Sister W. E. Rambo, of India, Mrs. Laura D. Garst, formerly of Japan, and the bride and groom, together with the fine reports of the year's work, conspired to create a growing enthusiasm at each session. The interest culminated at the close of the final address by Dr. McNeill Gordon, in which she touchingly set forth the needs of the field to which she soon returns, in the raising of $2,555 for a hospital for her at Mahoba, India.

The enthusiasm was great, but it was feared that the climax had been reached in the middle and that no further financial efforts could be made.

The C. W. B. M. enrollment stopped at 420, though many more came. The I. C. C. enrolled 610 from out of town and probably 150 to 200 did not enroll.

Most of the city pulpits were filled by our preachers, on Lord's day. I. N. McCash presented his temperance work at the University church in the evening and D. R. Dungan addressed a large audience at the University auditorium, our other city churches adjourning.

The communion service was held at the large auditorium down town, a great gathering around the table of the Lord, served by about 60 elders and deacons, with an excellent sermon by D. R. Dungan. This communion service has been excelled by that at very few of our national conventions.

The Foreign Society was not directly represented. Brothers Ranshaw, Snively and Muckley spoke in the interests of the Home Board, the Benevolent Association and Church Extension. The Bible-school board reported a good year's work by State Superintendent J. H. Bryan and Evangelist W. S. Johnson and outlined a plan for a great year's work to come. The chief interest centered in the change of policy, as suggested by the board—instead of using the protracted meeting as its method of soul-winning, to use its efforts for the conversion of the boys and girls in our schools, setting the standard at 2,500 souls for Christ during the year. As to finances, the boys' and girls' rally day for America would be used and quarterly payments of ten cents asked where this day is not observed. Campaigns for 50 new schools, 50 normal classes and 225 teachers' libraries will be prosecuted. H. F. Davis of the Christian Publishing Company was on for the Bible-school address, but, on account of a misunderstanding, did not arrive in time. However, he enjoyed a day or two of the convention.

There was a lively Y. P. S. C. E. session, indicating that this important interest is not declining. A Missouri man was imported for the Endeavor address also, H. A. Denton of Maryville, and he added materially to the life and interest of the convention.

We suppose that Missouri will also have to have credit for sending us D. R. Dungan, but it must be understood in the sense of returning a large loan, for it has always been felt that Brother Dungan belonged in Iowa and Drake university, where he will, in September, resume his former work, to the great satisfaction of a host that reaches far beyond Iowa's borders. His four addresses and wise counsel were appreciated and his presence was a benediction, heightened by the presence of four of his children, but greatly saddened by the absence of his sainted wife.

Educational interests are always prominent in Iowa conventions, as Drake university is an important factor in everything. It was specially so this year on account of the "Iowa Christian Education Society," organized last fall, with C. S. Medbury, Pres., A. M. Haggard and Mrs. H. O. Breeden, Vice-presidents, and Mrs. Laura D. Garst, Sec. Its object is to enlist the interest and co-operation of every man and woman in our Iowa brotherhood in the work of Drake university. Mrs. Garst is organizing university clubs in our Iowa churches. Fine reports were presented, but all the speeches that had been prepared were spoiled by the great landslide of the night before, mentioned below.

The following financial exhibit includes, in addition to what was on the books before the convention, funds raised by J. M. Hoffmann, the C. W. B. M. evangelist, for two church buildings, not at dedications but by actual personal work, the larger one not yet dedicated, and the Mahoba hospital fund. Also a supplemental I. C. C. report, made up of a $3,500 annuity secured from Mrs. Mary Holbrook, of Onawa, and other convention receipts, and the $560, offering at the communion service; also the Bible building fund, credited to the I. C. C.

C. W. B. M.—Total national, and state funds, $10,747.92, Tidings fund, $739.19, additional silver year offering $2,300. Mahoba hospital fund, $2,555, J. M. Hoffmann church building funds, $7,724.50, grand total $24,066.61.

I. C. C.—General fund, $6,999 59, annuities and other sources, $6,727.37, supplementary report, $4,401.22, Bible building fund, $7,500, making in all $49,694.79. I have not been able to obtain the figures for the Bible-school board, but they would swell the grand total considerably above $50,000.

The I. C. C. reported 10,551 additions, (5,359, of them by confession and baptism), nine evangelists in the field (five of them on full time) 462 churches, 444 church buildings, 327 preachers listed, 280 of whom are in active service. The C. W. B. M. has 159 auxiliaries and 3,020 members.

A little time was devoted to reminiscences, by Allen Hickey, D. R. Dungan, J. Mad Williams and others, that were thoroughly enjoyed.

Among the able addresses, not already mentioned, Prof. Clinton Lockhart spoke twice on "Messianic Prophecy." J. C. Mabry, a Christian attorney and president of the convention, gave an inspiring address on "What the World Owes Christ." Brothers Wilkinson, Rambo and Gordon and their wives spoke most ably of their work in the foreign field. H. O. Breeden, S. H. Zendt, J. Mad Williams, T. R. Hodkinson and others equally well on as many important themes, little Consuelo sang in English and in her own tongue, and Brother Medbury crowned the whole with a masterly educational address, which proved sufficient to encourage Dean Haggard to undertake in a doubtful way to make a raise for the Bible building, not daring to call for the $5,000 wanted. And the pledges came in bewildering profusion in sums of $500 to $1,000, in the names of fathers, mothers, husbands, wives, children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and even mothers-in-law. Mostly they were for Hobbs, Dungan, Van Meter, Mapes, Vawter, McConnell and other memorial rooms. So as the first $10,000 was General Drake's last gift it will doubtless be called Memorial Hall. It was difficult to shut off the giving at midnight and it is still growing, amounting at this writing to $7,500, and the management has enlarged the plans to $30,000. Some one proposed that a plow and a rope be provided and the students would draw the plow and break ground for the building at noon next day. It was done, Dean Haggard holding the plow, President Bell and Professor Dungan acting as wheel horses, and all students present and half the convention at the rope. The building will be commenced at once and is expected to be ready for use for the winter term. This accomplished, the next thing will be the $50,000 to secure the Carnegie library, and the first $1,000 of that was pledged by the class of 1904.

A. M. Haggard insisted on being relieved of the presidency of the I. C. C. and J. Mad Williams was substituted. Mrs. Lou R. Brown was made vice-president of the C. W. B. M. to represent another section of the state, S. H. Zendt, president of the Bible-school board, and D. R. Dungan added to it. These were the only important changes made.

I will send free, with full instructions, some of this simple preparation for the cure of Leucorrhœa, Ulceration, Displacements, Falling of the Womb, Scanty or Painful Periods, Tumors or Growths, Hot Flashes, Desire to Cry, Creeping feeling up the Spine, Pain in the Back and all Female Troubles, to all sending address. To mothers of suffering daughters I will explain a Successful Home Treatment. If you decide to continue it will only cost about 12 cents a week to guarantee a cure. Tell other sufferers of it, that is all I ask. If you are interested write now and tell your suffering friends of it. Address Mrs. M. Summers, Box 183, Notre Dame, Ind.

Our Budget

—We have gone to considerable trouble and expense in presenting to our readers this week some account of our early pioneer work in the west. We made every effort to find the man best acquainted with the conditions and finally hit upon Brother McHatton, for whose help we are grateful.

—Five more weeks until the convention, and only four until the "CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special" starts for the Pacific coast! On other pages will be found some pictures and descriptions of the beautiful scenery that will greet our tourists as they begin their journey across the great mountain ranges of Colorado.

—J. F. Powers spoke at Centropolis, Kan., July 4.

—Grand River district convention is to be held at Pattonsburg, Mo., July 18, 19, 20.

—Cephas Shelburne and family are spending the month of July at Webster Lake, Ind.

—We regret to hear that Brother Helser, of Fayette, Mo., is quite sick with typhoid fever.

—The Bible-school at Troy, N. Y., had 133 pupils giving one dollar each and among these were ten Chinese.

—The Indian Territory convention will be held at Weleetka, July 25, 26, 27, instead of in August as first decided upon.

—Geo. E. Hicks, pastor of the church at LaPorte, Ind., for two and one half years, has resigned, to take effect August 1.

—Persons who desire to visit the Holy Land may hear something to their advantage if they will write B. B. Tyler, Denver, Col.

—Prof. T. M. Burgess and wife have just accepted positions in the Southern Christian Institute at Edwards, Miss., some account of which will be found on another page.

—At Bolivar, Mo., a new $1,500 parsonage has just been completed. The church has given J. H. Jones, the pastor, the privilege of holding meetings during two months, and any church desiring his help may write him.

—Daniel Trundle, who was recently called to the pastorate of the church at Aurora, Mo., has begun work, and both minister and congregation seem to be mutually delighted. There were two added by letter at the first meeting.

—John E. Randall, of Kingston, secretary of the Jamaica Christian Endeavor Union and since April 1 our missionary under the C. W. B. M. on the island, has been in attendance at the Baltimore Christian Endeavor convention.

—A correspondent informs us that the Illinois state permanent fund will soon reach one hundred thousand dollars. Illinois can show us now the real value of the permanent fund. Missouri is making an effort to get a start with twenty thousand dollars.

—The Central church, Indianapolis, Ind., of which A. B. Philputt is pastor, has become a living link in the Foreign Society and will in the future support its own missionary in the regions beyond. This is the fifth church in Indiana to take this advance step.

—Prof. C. T. Paul, of Hiram, O., has been appointed a missionary to Nankin, China, by the Foreign Society. He will give himself to work in Drake Christian college, Nankin, especially preparing young men for the ministry of the word to their own kindred.

—The corner-stone of the new building at Bluemound, Ill., was laid with Masonic ceremonies on July 4, in the presence of a large crowd. Benj. L. Smith was the chief speaker and had a cordial reception. The work of our church in this community gives promise of making rapid progress. W. H. Harding is the minister.

—The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first six days of July amounted to $9,297, an increase over the corresponding time last year of $4,610. The tardy Sunday-schools should make haste to forward the children's day offerings to insure a great gain for the month of July.

—As we go to press comes a telegram sent from Mt. Sterling, Ky., July 10: "My precious wife entered higher life eight o'clock to-night. —W. A. Fite" We regret deeply to hear that Sister Fite has not been spared to her home. She has made a brave struggle and lately spent some time in the southwest hoping to get the benefit of the climate.

A Magnificent Work.

I am much pleased with Gloria in Excelsis. The mechanical work is attractive in every way, while the responsive readings are well chosen, and the songs and music make up the best church hymnal by all odds ever published by the Disciples. Within a few years it will doubtless become widely used.

Yours truly,
N. S. HAYNES.

Sample pages, prices and full information concerning this superb hymnal may be had in response to a postal card request addressed to

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,

—J. D. Hart, pastor at Bakersfield, Cal., has resigned his charge, leaving it free of all indebtedness and in good shape to accomplish much good. He will attend the Summer School of Theology at Berkeley during July and August where he may be addressed care of the "General Delivery." After the national convention he will be open for meetings, or as pastor.

—Dean Lhamon writes us that a number of good men, some of whom have preached acceptably for several years and who have held good meetings, desire to take work in the Bible college and the university. Such men can do good work for churches in the neighborhood of Columbia that are without pastors or preachers. Brother Lhamon would be glad to correspond with such churches with a view to locating these would-be students.

—S. M. Perkins has resigned a five years pastorate at Villisca, Ia., in order to enter the general evangelistic field. Brother Perkins has been in southwest Iowa for ten or twelve years and was for three years at the church at Council Bluffs. He has held some good meetings in the state and will no doubt be very useful in the evangelistic field. He can be addressed at Villisca, Ia.

—In reply to the question of C. A. Calloway printed in our Budget columns asking whether there is any Disciple of Christ older than Sister Rebecca Lowry, of Milton, Ind., we have a note from Sister Hannah Waddell, of Lexington, Mo., who says that she was baptized by Eld. D. S. Burnett, in March, 1831, in the Ohio river, Maysville, Ky., being at the time 14 years of age. Sister Waddell adds, "It rejoices my soul in my old age that I gave my heart to God in my youth. I have ever found him a present help in every time of need." If the dates are correct, Sister Waddell was baptized nearly three years prior to the baptism of Sister Lowry.

—A neat and convenient little chapel has just been dedicated at Lindsay, I. T. It is centrally located in a growing town of some two thousand. Only three hundred dollars were borrowed of the Church Extension Society. A small amount had to be raised to cover debt exclusive of this loan. This was readily done, also partially covering the Church Extension money. L. B. Grogan preaches at Lindsay two Lord's days each month and has done a noble work.

—We regret that some names in our last issue were misplaced. They were those describing men prominently identified with Kentucky university. That which was attributed to Horace Holly should have been J. B. Bowman; that attributed to J. D. Pickett should have been Horace Holly; that attributed to J. B. Bowman should have been J. D. Pickett. Mistakes of this kind will occasionally occur where the final proof is not seen by the editors.

—The church at Albion, Ill., of which C. C. Garrigues is minister, has just held a forefathers' reunion on the spacious lawn of one of its members. Pioneers were present representing the early life of the church at West Village. West Salem, Marion, Ellery, and Albion, Historical sketches and personal reminiscences were given, one of the most interesting being by Benjamin P. Reed, who is now eighty-five years of age.

—A card from Leslie W. Morgan announces the death of his father, W. A. Morgan, Thursday evening, July 6, at the home of Mrs. D. A. Wickizer at Bloomfield, Ia. The funeral was at the University Place church, Des Moines, on the following Saturday. Brother Morgan has just recently returned from his work in England for a short visit. The sympathy of very many friends will go out to him and his family at this time. An obituary notice will appear later.

—A great meeting is in progress at Marion, Ind., where W. S. Buchanan is pastor. He has entered into the evangelistic work with fervor and intelligent zeal. R. H. Fife, T. G. Legg and others are the evangelists and tents are being used. We hope to give more detailed particulars in a subsequent issue. Both the Tabernacle and the Central church are working together in beautiful harmony. The Central now has as pastor Merritt Owen, who has been there over two weeks.

—And now President Roosevelt is turning his attention to the red tape in the government business. He has appointed a committee to thoroughly investigate the methods of doing business in the different departments of the government with a view of cutting off useless custom, no matter how long established, and bringing out the most efficient methods. Of course the "circumlocution office" will protest against these innovations, but vainly, we imagine, as against the determination of the President who believes in "doing things."

—We regret to learn of the death of Caleb Edwards, who preached for the church in Payson, Ill., for sixteen years. Brother Edwards had attended prayer-meeting at the Quincy church last Wednesday evening and had made a good talk and an earnest prayer. On Thursday morning he attended to some business in the town and was walking toward the home of his brother, T. H. Edwards, when he fell dead on the street. Not an hour before his death he remarked to a friend that he felt quite well and strong for a man of seventy-four years of age.

—S. M. Crutcher writes us that Eminence, Ky., where more than twenty years ago he spent six years preaching to the church and fighting the liquor traffic, has "gone dry" and the anti-saloon voters declare that ten thousand dollars will be raised, if necessary, to enforce the law. Brother Crutcher adds, "As for the part I took in it, I feel tempted to say like old Simeon, 'Now, Lord, let thy servant depart in peace, for my eyes have seen thy salvation.'" Eminence was the early home of Dr. W. T. Moore, and the assistant editor of this paper has waded its creeks after craw-fish and shot shite-pokes in the days gone by.

—The fourth anniversary of W. M. Groves of Petersburg, Ill., has just been celebrated with an annual roll call and basket dinner. Of course it was a delightful occasion. G. L. Sniveley was present and preached for the brethren. Brother Groves made a humorous speech in which he told them that his ministry with them had been merely probationary, that probably after four more years of preliminary service he might be ready to settle down and stay. Col. J. W. Judy, who is known all over Illinois, gave a delightful reminiscent talk. It was some 30 years ago that Col. Judy hired a big tent and invited D. R. Lucas to go to Petersburg, out of which meeting has grown the present church, which is the strongest in all that locality.

—Kentucky university is sending out several missionaries to the foreign field. J. C. Ogden and wife, of Carlisle, Ky., will go to Tibet. Brother Ogden has been in the university for several years. He received his A. B. from the College of Arts last year and a classical diploma from the College of the Bible this year. He has been a good student and is well prepared for his work. Mrs. Ogden has studied in the College of the Bible for a year or two in preparation for her missionary labors. Prior to her marriage she was a teacher. A. F. Hensey, who will sail for Africa this fall to join R. R. Eldred, who went to the dark continent three years ago from the College of the Bible, was the first honor student in this year's class. He is a good preacher and a strong man. Besides these there are several volunteers now in the university who will go to the foreign field as soon as they finish their respective courses.

—We have received some details of the loss which C. M. Hughes recently sustained by fire. Brother Hughes is a singing evangelist and assistant pastor, and on the advice of a physician gave up his work about a year ago and moved to the country in order to try and regain his health. He had been looking forward to removing to Lexington so that his children could re enter school and he could again take up evangelistic work. Through the fire he has lost nearly everything he possessed; that which will affect him most, probably, being his entire stereopticon outfit and song books. He asks for the prayers and sympathy of friends. His mother, who is in a very feeble condition, contracted a cold when compelled to go into the night air, by the fire, and is not expected to survive long. Possibly some one who has a stereopticon outfit not at present in use might make a loan of it for a while to Brother Hughes who can be found at Muir, Ky., and other sympathizers will doubtless desire to help our brother in this time of trouble.

—The sympathy of the staff and the readers of the Christian-Evangelist go out to Bro. A. W. Kokendoffer, pastor of the Christian church at Mexico, Mo., on the sudden loss of his wife. Brother and Sister Kokendoffer were to go on the "Christian-Evangelist Special" to California and were looking forward to this visit with the keenest pleasure. Although Mrs. Kokendoffer had been in poor health for the last ten years the illness that carried her off only lasted three days. She was seized with a sudden attack of cholera morbus while at the Ringo hotel in the town where she lived and at no time was she well enough to be moved to her home. She was born in Crittenden, Grant Co., Ky., her father being T. G. Allen, one of the best known of our preachers in that state. Her marriage with Brother Kokendoffer occurred in 1890 and a year later they moved to Missouri, locating in Kansas City. For something over four years they have been at the head of the work in Mexico, Mo., where they are beloved by all. She was a woman who accomplished a great deal and yet always was able to hold herself in reserve. It is thus that she was able to go through the years doing the work committed to her. Funeral services were conducted by A. A. Wallace, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Mexico, assisted by M. A. Hart and E. M. Smith, our preachers at Fulton and Centralia, Mr. Truex, pastor of the Methodist church, and Brother Headington of the Christian church. The interment took place at Jefferson, Ind.

—W. M. Taylor, who has started in work among the Spanish speaking peoples of the southwest, writes that it is a great field, for there are at least one and one-half millions of Mexicans in the United States not being evangelized by us. Our Home Board has been doing some work among them for several years on a small scale, but with some one directly in charge of this particular field it ought to be largely developed and for this purpose native help must be secured to give permanence and character to anything we may achieve; young men must be educated and trained to lead the Mexican churches. Some kind of school or college in the southwest, say in San Antonio. which is the gateway to Mexico, where a corps of workers could be prepared for an invasion of Mexico and South America with the gospel, ought not only to be feasible, but is absolutely desirable. $10,000 for this work is needed now. Brother Taylor can be addresed at San Antonio, Tex., P. O. Box 204.

To the Disciples of Christ in Indian Territory.

At the last meeting of the board the time of the Weleetka convention was very wisely changed to July 25, 26 and 27. By not conflicting with the national convention we are enabled to secure prominent speakers, as well as give our own people a chance to go to San Francisco. Weleetka convention will be the best yet. We are in the midst of the greatest year in the history of our work. The people of the beautiful little city on the Canadian are anxious to entertain you. Drop me a card now and say you are coming.

E. L. Powell on "The Holy Spirit."

I have read with much pleasure and genuine interest the greater portion of Dr. Garrison's book on "The Holy Spirit." The book is thoroughly readable, and this is saying much for a work which deals with a subject confessedly difficult and one so intimately associated with theological speculations. Dr. Garrison, however, makes himself understood and that in very simple and delightful English. The book reveals spiritual insight and the grasp of spiritual principles which when applied to the study of the Holy Spirit make clear and bright many scriptural references that the merely logical understanding cannot explain. His treatment of the great subject is vital. There is no mechanical note in it. The Spirit's work is no arbitrary performance either in inspiration or conversion or in his relation to the Christian, but always in strict accord with the constitution of the spiritual nature of man. These lines are written more in the nature of an appreciation than a review, and my purpose, therefore, is merely to commend the book. It ought to prove a most helpful contribution to the spiritual life of hundreds as well as a fine mental tonic to the student of great Bible questions. If there be any lack of orthodoxy it would seem that this defect is decidedly to the advantage of truth. Some of the old views denominated orthodox are too suggestive of the grammar and dictionary—too wooden or metallic—to be accepted as even remotely connected with so spiritual a theme as the Holy Spirit. I do not believe that Dr. Garrison has done any better work than in this latest book he has given us—interesting, suggestive, helpful, charmingly simple and inspiring.

E. L. Powell.

A Call to Our Men from the Business Men's Association of the Christian Church.

Brethren:—The next national convention of the Disciples of Christ will be held in San Francisco, California, August 14-28, 1905.

We notice from various advertisements, very attractive rates and routes to and from the convention, and it occurs to us that, coming as it does during the dull summer months, our brethren can well afford the time for making this journey across the continent to the Golden Gate. We therefore urge upon our brethren the importance of taking advantage of this most excellent opportunity to visit the western coasts of our beloved land, and at the same time, be in attendance at what promises to be one of our greatest conventions.

Our conventions in years gone by have been attended by large numbers of our preachers and many of our good women, who sought and obtained the inspiration always present at such gatherings; but there has been a lack of interest in these conventions by our business men. We hope to remedy this, and in future years we confidently expect to see larger numbers of our brethren present, many of whom may have never attended one of our conventions before.

The Lord's business is of more importance than any other business on the earth, and he committed it, not only to his devoted women and his faithful ministers, but also to all other men who have enlisted under his banner. We call upon all those who are faithful and true to their Lord, and who can possibly spare the time and bear the expense, to meet with us at our next national convention at the time and place above mentioned.

wa's Greatest Convention.

You will notice that our association has a place on the program Wednesday afternoon and evening, August 23, and we especially desire a large attendance of our business men at these two sessions. W. DAVIESS PITTMAN, Corresponding secretary of the Business Men's Association of the Christian Church.

The Christian-Evangelist Special.

Will leave St. Louis over the Burlington route at 9 P. M., August 9. At Denver we stop four hours and will take breakfast with the ladies' aid of the Central church, after taking a four hours' tallyho ride over the city we go to Colorado Springs where we will spend a day. Here you can visit the Garden of the Gods, the Seven Falls, the top of Pike's Peak or take a trip over to Cripple Creek which is the most wonderful mountain railroad trip in the world. From here we take the Midland and stop four hours at Glenwood Springs, the center of President Roosevelt's recent hunting trip. At Salt Lake City we spend the Lord's day with Brother T. W. Pinkerton and his good people. Then we take the new San Pedro R. R. to San Bernardino, Riverside and Los Angeles, the orange country of southen California. This is one of the most delightful spots of the world. After two days here we take a day train on the Coast line on the Southern Pacific for San Francisco. Here we take in the national convention at the Golden Gate. After this we continue on the Southern Pacific to Portland and east through a most delightful country.

If you have not registered, send your name at once. Buy your ticket at your home office for the round trip and get your sleeping berth and meal tickets by writing to me at once.

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST SPECIAL,

The Campaign for Two Thousand Contributors.

On June 1 the Church Extension Board began a campaign for a list of two thousand churches that would promise to take the annual offering, this list to be reported as a part of the annual report of the board at the San Francisco convention.

On July 5, 387 churches had promised to take the offering. This is only one-fourth of what we hope to get. By the list it will be seen that Ohio leads all the other states with 53 promised churches. Illinois holds second place and Indiana third.

It is hoped that our preachers will secure these promises early because the time is so short. Be sure to put a one cent stamp on the mailing card ordering supplies.

Reno, Nevada.

The combined territory of Kentucky, Ohio, and Indiana, with the sign "rooms to let" could be placed within the borders of Nevada, yet it has less than 100,000 population. Mines of fabulous wealth are being opened up daily, 250,000 acres of land are now being placed under irrigation by the United States government, and people are coming here by the thousands.

How infinite are our opportunities! How small from a human standpoint are our resources to meet these opportunities! Only one small organization of forty-four members, without lot, house and money, is all the leaven, in great Nevada to work for the New Testament church and the creed that needs no revision.

Most wisely this, our first organization in the state, was effected in Reno by Evangelist R. L McHatton of Santa Rosa, Cal. Reno is the only city of any size from Ogden, Utah, to Sacramento, Cal., a distance of 725 miles. It has doubled in population in the last four years, and now numbers 11,000. It is the natural, logical, commercial, educational center, the Denver of Nevada.

We must make Reno Nevada's Jerusalem from which we must go everywhere preaching the word.

Carson City, the capital, Virginia City, Tonopah and Goldfield should be booming not only with material riches but with the true riches in Christ Jesus.

Our national C. W. B. M and the Santa Rosa (Cal.) church make possible my support in Reno. Our crying need is a lot. Real estate like the altitude here, is high. A suitable lot will cost $1,000 plus, and doubtless the greater of these is the plus.

Our Church Extension Board, recognizing the importance of this missionary point, is about to do the unusual, and negotiations are pending looking to the purchase of a central lot.

But we must pay for the lot before we can build. Will not a rich brotherhood come to our assistance and make it possible for us to own our lot soon, so that we can build and move out of our upper room and reach more people with the word of life?

Will you not send me the names and addresses of your friends in Reno so that we may enlist them to escape the fate of Meroz? Will you not lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven by sending to C. G Degman, our treasurer, an offering commensurate with your ability and our need? Will you not do this now, that Nevada's rivers and reservoirs, mines, mills and mountains, her large hearted, prosperous citizenship may no longer pay tribute to the prince of darkness but unto Christ our king?

JOHN YOUNG.

Ministerial Exchange.

The church at Buffalo, Mo., needs a preacher who is a good worker and needs him at once. Address Wm. A. Coy, clerk.

C. R. L. Vawter, 1115 S. West St., Indianapolis, Ind., can be had at once for a meeting on the free will offering plan.

J. K. Ballou, 1202 Jackson St., Sioux City, Ia., knows a preacher of ability and a college man who will supply for the summer.

A preacher who can live on a salary of $800 is wanted by the church at LaPorte, Ind. Write Fred R. Liddell.

G. F. Assiter, Parkersburg, W. Va., will be glad to supply at some good church where he can at the same time enjoy a couple of weeks of change. His vacation can be taken in July or August.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Illinois Notes.

After a busy trip, lasting a month, among the good people of southern Illinois, I returned home to rest a day or two. However hospitable and kind the people, the best of a trip is the homecoming, even if it be only to our two little rooms. The good wife patiently waits with a most royal welcome. Indeed, I think here the larger offering, in this service for the Master.

The teachers and students have finished the work of a most delightful and successful college session. The sixteen young people who completed their classical courses of study constitute a noble band of which any institution might feel justly proud. Indeed it is a choice class of young people who come to Eureka college. There is an exception occasionally, who finds the refining and ennobling influences of our college life not in harmony with his tastes. He soon leaves, or reconstructs his tastes. It is too early to predict much concerning the attendance next fall, but there is certainly a growing interest throughout our state in behalf of true higher Christian education. Particularly does this seem to be true in southern Illinois. The many young men and women, too, who have attended Eureka college from that part of the state have shown what can be done by proper training. The distance amounts to only a very few dollars and at once puts the young people in the best Christian environment, under teachers of large experience and among fellow-students who are to be the leaders of their generation. There are a great many young people in southern Illinois who could become great leaders with the proper training. Doubtless many of them will have the enterprise to make the effort although there be a struggle with poverty.

The church at Hamilton, Ill., is a young church, with a good house and a splendid class of people. This is the home of our venerable J. Carroll Stark and formerly of H. R. Trickett. Brother Stark still lives here, deeply interested in the Lord's work and loyal and helpful to the regular minister. K. C. Ventress closed a useful pastorate here last fall, and this spring H. G. Waggoner returned to Illinois and began preaching for the church. Both he and Ventress are graduates of Eureka college and are devoting useful lives to the kingdom of God. H. G. is my youngest son in whose good work I greatly delight. It is a great mystery to me how parents can dissuade their sons from the ministry, why they should choose for them the service of mammon rather than the service of the most high God. After many years of varied experiences as a minister, in constant touch with business men and preachers, personally, without question, had I a hundred lives to live, they would all be devoted to the ministry of the gospel.

The church at Dallas City is prospering under the devoted ministry of C. L. McKim. A new parsonage was built last summer beside the church, and other signs of prosperity are manifest. I heard only good words about the pastor and his amiable wife.

The third missionary district has just closed its annual convention at Dallas. It was entertained royally. The attendance was good, but considering the great territory covered and the large number of churches, there ought to have been more present. There are 118 churches in the district with 42 preachers giving their entire time to the ministry, exactly half the churches have no regular preaching. If it were not for the untiring loyalty to Christ and to his authority and ordinances we would soon lose many churches because we have so few preachers. If we do not help our colleges to prepare more men, and that soon, we must severely suffer. Our women doubtless have a very large proportion of the piety of the churches, but in this very third district, suffering as it is for more ministers, I heard two mothers, intelligent and active in church work, say they did not want their sons to enter the ministry. I fear that we preachers talk too much about our hardships and too little about the abounding joy and lasting pleasures of the Master's service.

The church at Adrian is 25 years old, has 75 members, and a good Sunday-school of 75. Bro. S. G. Buckner, a most promising young man and son of G. W. Buckner, of Macomb, is pastor. It is a fine field and we expect to hear good results from church and people.

The church at Carthage is one of the strongest of western Illinois. They have recently engaged G. W. Buckner to become their pastor. The splendid house of worship, which the writer had the honor to assist in dedicating some sixteen years ago, is still ample for the use of the large congregation. This is the home of Miss Lura V. Thompson, who ably represents the C. W. B. M. as state organizer and secretary. It is here also that C. J. Scofield, the eminent jurist and author, lives. He is as truly Christian and as able a minister as he is a jurist or author and adds great strength to the church by his service and wisdom.

Girard is one of our strong churches, with all the usual auxiliaries in a prosperous condition. It has an unusual number of men of ability to manage its business and to give tone and character to its work. Its house is modern and elegant. We have had some fine students in Eureka college from Girard—J. P. McKnight among them, who is about to dedicate a new church in Los Angeles, Cal. His wife was also from Girard, the daughter of our good friend of other years, J. D. Metcalf. J. Windbigler is the able minister.

At Virden their new preacher, H. J. Hostetter, is getting a good start in his work. Things always move when he comes. The church has suffered seriously by removals and deaths, but is still strong enough to do fine work for the Master. The unusual number of young people makes the church lively and full of promise.

Eureka, Ill. J. G. Waggoner.

Kansas.

Wheat, wheat everywhere. Kansas wheat is the admiration of the whole country. And Kansas corn is now looming into prominence under these summer suns and refreshing showers.

These lines are penned in McCune, Crawford county, where we are to swelter in the heat while trying to preach to-night. W. C. Wiley has done a splendid work as pastor here. The church now wants him for full instead of for one-half time as formerly.

Neosho county closed a good county meeting last night. The experiment was so satisfactory that it will be repeated next year.

G. W. Kitchen is the new pastor at Chanute. It was our privilege to meet and hear him for the first time at the Neosho meeting. Evidently he is the man for the difficult field where he is now located.

Ernest E. Denney, of Pittsburg, and Brother Orchard, of Ft. Scott, are also new men in Kansas whom we are glad to welcome to the Kansas brotherhood.

It is almost time for our attention to be turned toward Eldorado, which we believe will be a real "Eldorado" to all who are permitted to attend our next annual state convention which meets there Sept. 18-21. S. W. Brown, the pastor, as well as his people, are getting ready to do their part well in caring for the people. Watch for the program.

Every church in Kansas should send word to Brother Muckley at Kansas City that the church extension offering will be taken in September. Many, many homeless churches could build immediately if the Church Extension Board could loan them the money to make the start. This board has put about $65,000 into Kansas, and has gotten about $13,000 in offerings from the state. Send word to-day.

Have you sent in that money for Kansas missions? It is needed. It is not too late for your offering to do good. W. S. Lowe.

Topeka, Kansas.

Lexington Notes.

Two ordination services have recently been held at Central church, both conducted by Prof. C. L. Loos, senior elder of Central. At the first of these impressive services Barclay Meador and at the second T. J. Golightly and L. E. Lakin were ordained to the ministry. The two brethren last named each have diplomas from the College of the Bible and the College of Liberal Arts also. Brother Golightly is to take up his residence at once as minister of the church at Lebanon, Ky. Brother Lakin for the present will continue to minister to several churches near Lexington.

The Broadway Sunday-school children's day exercises at night were in charge of the Hamilton college young ladies. The offering taken in the morning and supplemented at night amounted to $120.

Children's day was a happy day in Central church. Nearly 100 children took part in the exercises and the offering at the Sunday-school hour almost reached the apportionment of $100. It was supplemented by a $25 offering at night when the children rendered the service, "Brightening the World."

Chestnut street church continues to make progress. The proportion of young people here is verv large. The Christian Endeavor Society is active in every good work, including taking part in the services held at the jail on Sunday. The auxiliary of the C. W. B. M. had an Easter offering of $25 in cash and $25 in useful articles for the mountain work. W. H. Allen, minister of the church, held a meeting recently at Madisonville, O.

A new era has been marked in the progress of Southside Christian church. An addition of two rooms and a baptistry has been dedicated. The minister, A. P. Finley, was assisted in the task of raising the money and having the work done by W. E. Hibler, an elder of Central church. The ministers of all the churches of the Disciples in Lexington took part in the dedication exercises. Mrs. Princess Long was present and sang several of her sweetest songs. All departments of the church work are in good condition. Notwithstanding the expenses of its new addition the congregation has made its missionary offerings without exception. The superintendent of the Sunday-school, M. L. Hurst, was the first honor graduate of Kentucky university. The school as well as the church is loath to give him up. He returns to his native state, Texas, to take charge of the public school at Martindale. Brother Finley has in view a series of cottage prayer-meetings for the summer which it is believed will be productive of immediate good and also prepare the way for the protracted meeting which will be held late in the summer,

Both Central and Broadway reached their apportionment for home missions. The living link of the former is James L. Haddock, who is laboring in Louisiana, and of the latter is R. L. Bussabarger, who is in the great northwest at Seattle, Wash.

Bro. I. J. Spencer delivered the baccalaureate address at the Hazel Green academy. He also delivered an address on C. W. B. M. day at the Ohio state convention on the subject, "Not Yours But You." In the latter he struck a chord which, in view of the strenuous efforts of our missionary organizations to raise adequate funds, has been touched only now and then.

On a recent Wednesday night students of Kentucky university had charge of the midweek meeting at Central church. On the following Wednesday students of State college were in charge. Effort is being made to bring this meeting within the atmosphere of the family circle.

C. M. Summers and J. W. Conkling, students of the College of the Bible, have gone out to evangelize in eastern Kentucky. They are the only students sent out this year by the Y.M.C.A. The first is supported by the Kentucky state board and the second by the Delta Endeavor Society of Central church.

At a state rally of Christian Endeavor held here on May 19 it was decided to put a field secretary to work in Kentucky. On the same day the state executive committee elected F. M. Tinder, minister of the Christian church at Lancaster, president of the state union, vice Rev. R. O. Kirkwood, of Lexington, resigned.

Barclay Meador.

Missouri Mission Notes.

The spirit of the state convention from the beginning to the close was most delightful. The program was crowded so full that not a moment was wasted.

The determination of the convention was for larger and better things. While splendid work has been done it was felt that still more ought to be done. The special work of the year is the raising of the permanent fund up to $15,000 by July 1, 1906, so as to secure the $5,000 promised by Bro. R. A. Long. This is one of the things that must be done. Then there must be no let down in regard to other things. The work must increase. This year ought to be and must be the greatest in the history of our people in the state. This, of course, cannot be accomplished without the hearty co-operation of every minister of the gospel. The responsibility for success rests not simply with the state board and the corresponding secretary but with every minister in the state. To them will come the honor of success or the shame of failure. We ask for, and believe that we shall have, the fullest possible co-operation.

We hope that every church in the state and every preacher will give attention to the appeal from the Church Extension board. Every homeless church in Missouri, and there are many, should be an irresistible appeal to all of our churches, to give the closest attention and the greatest support unto this great department of our church life.

"Forgetting the things which are behind and reaching forth unto the things that are before," I am, as ever, T. A. Abbott.

A Reliable Heart Cure.

Indian Territory.

Since our last report the writer has visited Atoka, Durant, Ada, Robb, Purcell, Paul's Valley, Lindsay and Ninnekah.

Brother Lowe is highly esteemed by the brethren at Atoka, nevertheless he has resigned that work. The church at Durant is progressing under the careful leadership of Bro. John A. Overstreet.

Robb is in fine condition. Bro. E. S. Allhands is leading the brethren to victory. Their handsome new church is about ready to dedicate. Brother Crouch, of Tennessee, will hold them a meeting in July. We have recently purchased a good church property at Paul's Valley, and will improve it. We dedicated the new church at Lindsay the fourth Lord's day in June. It is a neat and convenient church, well located, the best church property in Lindsay. Bro. L. B. Grogan and the few that stood so nobly by him in the building of this church have done a grand work and deserve the thanks and material support of our brotherhood.

At this writing we are at Ninnekah in a meeting. We have a neat church here, the only one in Ninnekah, and a small congregation of true good brethren.

Our annual convention will be held at Weleetka, July 25, 26, and 27. Come and be with us in this great meeting. Nothing will help on the cause in the Indian Territory more than a large and enthusiastic convention. Don't forget the date and place. Note the change from August to July. In this territory we are greatly indebted to Church Extension. It has helped to build many of our houses of worship. But for it this would indeed be a difficult work. Hence, it is but just and right that we appreciate as we should Church Extension. Every mission and church among us should not fail to make an annual offering to this noble work. If you can not send a cash offering at once to G. W. Muckley, Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo., at least send in a promise that you intend doing so in the near future.

Camp Meeting at Rockford, Wash.

The annual camp meeting and convention of churches of Christ of the Palouse district has just closed and in some respects it was a most important meeting. This organization has been in existence for 25 years and is the oldest missionary organization of our people in the northwest and has had a splendid record. This year over 700 additions were reported as brought in during the year through its work. The writer has been working as evangelist for this organization for the past five months and has organized three new churches, held seven protracted meetings and received 251 additions.

At the state convention recently held at Pullman, Wash., it was decided to divide the state work and organize a convention in west Washington and one in east Washington, as the state is naturally divided and it has been found impracticable to hold these meetings so as to be well represented from all parts of the state, and thus the work has been hindered. So a committee was sent to confer with this "Whitman county missionary co-operation" and to take steps to organize the work in east Washington. At the camp meeting it was decided to extend the borders of the "Whitman county co-operation" so as to exclude all of east Washington and as much of northeast Oregon and north Idaho as would co-operate, and change the name to "The Inland Empire Christian Missionary Society," by which name it will be known in the future. A new board was elected as follows: President, H. S. McClure, Garfield; first vice-president, J. A. Pine, Dayton; second vice-president, N. M. Roe, Latah; recording secretary, Geo. Jones, Mt. Hope; treasurer, Wm. Bennington, Ritzville; superintendent Sunday-school, Mrs. Simpson, Spokane; superintendent Christian Endeavor, Professor Beatty, Pullman.

Make Your Own Ice Cream.

There has just been placed in all the grocery stores, a new preparation called

which is meeting with great favor, as it enables everyone to make ice cream in their own home with very little trouble. Everything in the package for making two quarts of delicious ice cream. If your grocer can't supply you send 25c. for two pkgs. by mail. Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry and Unflavored. Address, The Genesee Pure Food Co., Le Roy, N.Y.

The newly elected board will meet soon and select a corresponding secretary and put him in the field and will take steps to find a permanent location for the camp meeting.

Among the preachers present were: B. E. Utz, Spokane; W. T. Adams, Waitsburg; A. J. Adams, Waverly; W. M. Roe, Latah; C. L. Kean, Rockford; W. S. Lemmon, Tekoa; E. W. Sewell, Thornton; Brother Flinn, of Coeur d'Alene, the writer and others. Especial mention should be made of the splendid work done in the past by their evangelist, J. N. McConnell, of Palouse, Wash. Morton H. Wood, evangelist.

Waverly, Wash.

Virginia Christian College.

The second year of Virginia Christian college closed June 6. The enrollment was one hundred and eighty, the average age nineteen years. Five young men were in the graduating class. Three will give their lives to preaching, one to teaching and one to the study of law. One young lady received the A. B. degree for post-graduate work.

The situation proves valuable. Lynchburg is in the middle of the state and a railroad center. The college is at the end of the street car line with cars coming every twelve minutes. There are eighty acres in campus grounds. The building cost over fifty thousand dollars, and is admirably suited for school purposes. Ten thousand dollars, with provisions already made, would pay all indebtedness. The trustees have recently secured the services of Prof. G. O. Davis, late of Michigan college, who was graduated in that institution, then spent two years in Virginia university, to take charge of the field work. He, in connection with other co-workers, has planned to raise the entire debt by February 1, 1906. Many brethren and friends are turning their thought and work toward the improvement of this great opportunity for establishing a center of higher and deeper Christian education.

It has been decided that the higher interests of the young people can best be served by refusing to keep in school any student who has the tobacco habit or who will indulge in strong drink or any of those vices so destructive to the student's character. We are not unmindful of how this position may appear to some, nor of the objections likely to be made against it; but we are willing to leave it to the future, feeling assured that the result will be for the greatest good.

A college government association has also been formed through which students will have a part in the discipline of the school. A strong band of young people are enthusiastically representing these ideas and we expect if the Lord so wills to enroll a large number of students the coming year whose work shall count in the upward march of our race.

J. Hopwood.

The Convention of the Fourth District of Illinois.

This district, comprising ten counties lying in the north and east central part of Illinois, met in annual convention at Flanagan, on June 27-29. No richer land lies anywhere in the union, and in this district stand seventy-nine congregations of Disciples. Among these is Eureka with its college, Bloomington with its great churches, Watseka, Normal and Gibson City, strong city churches, and Stanford and Flanagan, great missionary village churches.

The program for this year's convention was a strong one. The sisters of the C. W. B. M. had Miss Lura V. Thompson, W. J. Burner and C. C. Smith on their program. The address of Brother Burner was full of information and highly stimulating to the missionary pride of the people. C. C. Smith held his old-time reputation for wit, pathos, and inspiration. The sisters were exceedingly practical in all of their work. Strong papers were presented by Mrs. R. B. Doan, of Rutland, and Mrs. J. A. Barnett, of Pekin. Miss Thompson was the general of all. Miss Irene Ridgely, of Eureka, presided.

The reports from district work were highly gratifying. Streator, a city of 15,000 population, had been helped to the extent of $300. A new $15,000 house of worship will be built within a year. Pontiac, another important city, was building a church suitable for their needs, while Minonk has come to life after several years of retirement, and is hopefully at work again. It was resolved to continue aid to Streator, Pontiac and Minonk, and place a district evangelist in the field. J. G. Waggoner ably presented the cause of Christian education under the subject of "Men and Money." Eureka college has hosts of warm friends in this district. J. A. Clemens touched all hearts with a desire to do more for Christian Benevolence. Brother Clemens was given a place on the program in the absence of C. A. Young, who did not reach the convention until noon of June 28. John R. Golden, of Gibson City, carried all to a new vision of spiritual life in the convention sermon.

The "Bible-schools and Our Cause" was presented by O. L. Smith, of Flanagan; "Illinois for Christ," by J. Fred Jones, the state secretary. The permanent fund will soon reach $100,000, while numbers of new churches year by year rise up as the fruits of Illinois state work.

The Fourth District: "What Can be Done," by Chas. Hougham, of Streator; "What Must be Done," by R. E. Thomas, of Kankakee; and "What Will be Done," by R. A. Givens, of Hayworth, proved to be practical, suggestive and very interesting. S. P. Telford, of Toluca, discussed the "Problem of Preaching." It is important what you preach and how you preach it. The paper dwelt upon the "how." C. A. Young, fresh from the Iowa jubilee convention, was full of vigor and enthusiasm for his Bible studies, which were confined to two on account of his late arrival. Geo. W. Muckley, the irrepressible Church Extension secretary, never did better than in the evening address of June 28

The Christian Endeavor session on the forenoon of June 29, proved a fitting close to a very high grade of work in the convention. J. A. Barnett, of Pekin, presented "Endeavor Leadership"; Prof. Silas Jones, "Buying the Opportunity"; A. W. Taylor, of Eureka, "Young Men and the Church." Each proved a strong man for his subject. The address of Brother Taylor aroused much enthusiasm. Bro. C. C. Carpenter, of Thomson, brought the claims for Savannah, the special place for Illinois Endeavor missions this year. The attendance was general and large. The spirit was beautiful and helpful.

The C. W. B. M. called Miss Mary Monahan, of Saunemin, to succeed Miss Irene Ridgely as district secretary. Miss Ridgely has done good, but desired to be relieved this year.

Charles Hougham, of Streator, was elected president; H. H. Jenner, of Washburn, vice-president, and John R. Golden, of Gibson City, secretary.

The convention adjourned to meet in Streator in 1906, and see one of the monuments of its own work.

The Triumphs of the Gospel in Beaumont, Texas

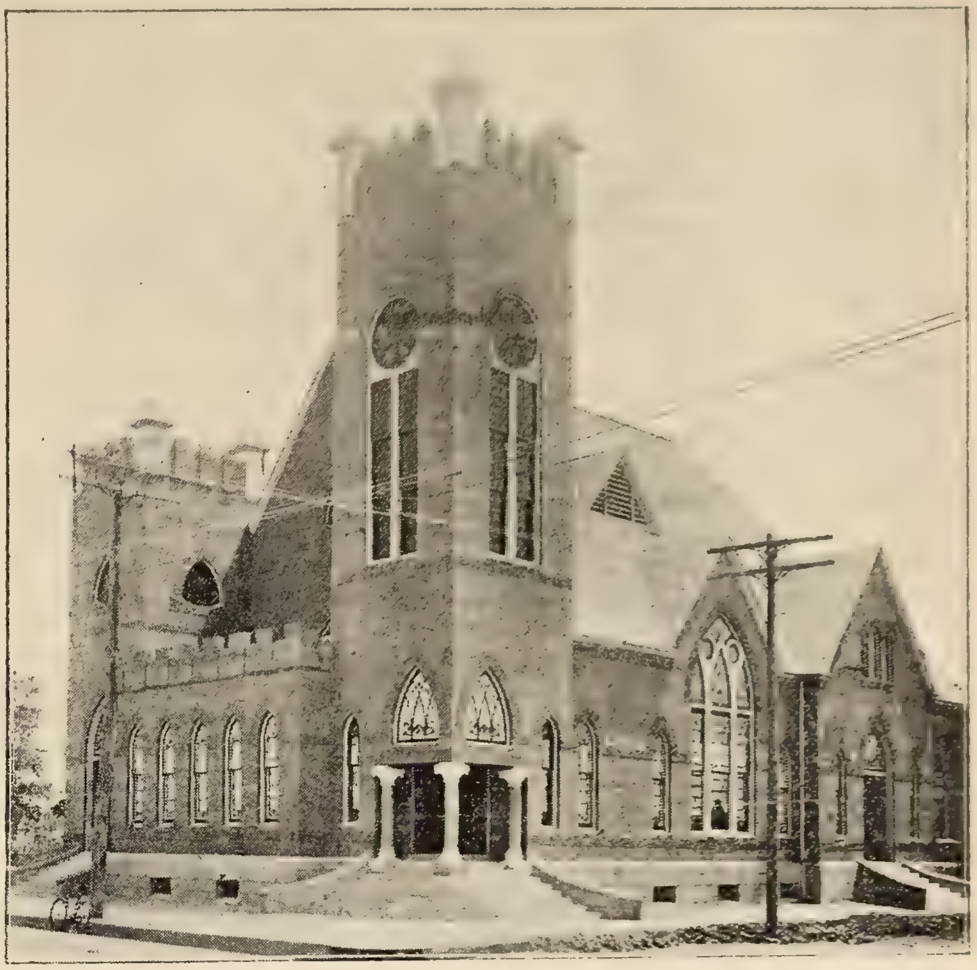
The early history of the work of the church in Beaumont is perhaps not materially different from that of hundreds of places in this great country. Beaumont is an old town, and yet a new one; for many years this was the home of a hundred people who were attracted to the section by immense timber interests and other resources common in southeast Texas. Among these early settlers there was occasionally a Disciple of Christ, but yet little was done looking to the permanent establishment of the cause of apostolic Christianity. As the town grew, however, evangelists and preachers began to make occasional visits, and in the year 1894 the work was definitely started by Brother Bush, who now has charge of our Orphans' Home. A Brother Linehart was engaged as pastor, remaining for a year; then J. C. Mason held a meeting and a Brother LeMay was employed to preach once a month. In 1898 D. A. Leak held a series of meetings, but the church as such was not finally organized until after the meeting of Brother Van Pelt in 1899; at this time Brother Patterson began his pastorate and a small house was erected in what was then an excellent part of the city. In 1900 Brother Saunders held a meeting and in September of that year Brother Hamner began his pastorate. In January of 1901 a great discovery of oil was made, and Beaumont sprang into a city of thousands as if by magic. But the church suffered.

Brother Dudley came in 1902, and while the church began to show some signs of life, the town had shifted somewhat and the old site was unfavorable to good growth. In the beginning of 1904, Evangelist B. J. Waugh came to the city and secured the promise of Brethren Scoville and Smith for a meeting in May. To those of us who know of the demands made upon the time of Brother Scoville, there is no satisfactory explanation of his coming here, save only that it was the Lord's leading. A tabernacle was erected by the faithful few who had been gained through the years of struggle, that would seat about one thousand people. It was made as comfortable as could be, but it rained, and rained, and rained. Our people were not recognized among the churches of the city. The Methodists and Baptists had together several hundred members; of course they lent no aid to our people.

J. B. Holmes.

Brother Waugh left soon after the meeting began. Brother Scoville and his co-laborer, De Loss Smith, faced the difficulties like spiritual giants. Peogle began to see the light and they turned to the apostolic church by the score. Brother Scoville saw the great opening, and telegraphed to J. B. Holmes, then state evangelist of Oregon, for whom Brother Scoville dedicated a church and held a great meeting at Albany, Ore., in December, 1900. He thought Brother Holmes and wife, graduates of Drake university, peculiarly fitted for the field, and his judgment was correct. A better pastor for the place could not have been found. Brother Holmes landed in Beaumont about June 1 of last year. The great meeting had closed with 276 additions to the church, leaving it with about 325 members.

Immediately after the coming of Brother Holmes plans were laid for a new building; the church was fortunate in that he had built three churches before and understood what was needed. He drew a sketch which was adopted and submitted to an architect, who furnished plans; they began to raise funds at once, and early in the fall the foundation of the present structure was placed. The general public did not consider the effort seriously at first, but when the outlines of the building began to appear they wondered, admired and lent a helping hand.



The New Church Building, Beaumont, Tex.

The church has a great deal of determination, consecration and energy; they hired a foreman, Bro. G. O. Browning, who, together with the pastor, was almost constantly on the building; everything moved well, and at last a splendid building, a marvel for convenience, durability, beauty and cheapness, was complete. The outside may be judged by the accompanying picture. The arrangement within can hardly be improved upon for the size; four rooms, three of which have floors inclined toward the pulpit, may be thrown together; perfect vision may be had from every point in the three main rooms, and one may hear perfectly from any part of the house. Three large vestibules may also be thrown into the audience room by opening large doors, thus adding about 150 to the seating capacity of the church, which will hold about 1,000 all told. The robing rooms, toilet and parlors are all in convenient places and the baptistry is so placed that nothing has to be moved from its place before a baptism and everyone can see the ordinance performed; it could scarcely be better.

South Side Mission Church.

At the earnest solicitation of the pastor and the church, Brother Scoville promised to return and dedicate the new building and to stay for a short meeting—stay until one hundred had been won for Christ. Early in the year the pastor organized what he called a "Committee of Seventy," whose work has been exceedingly helpful. Through this committee and its subdivisions, a religious census was made and many prayer-meetings were held preceding the present meeting; all were expecting a great victory, but few looked for such a splendid increase in numbers as has come in the last few days. During the year there were 75 added at the regular services. One subdivision of the Committee of Seventy began a prayer-meeting in the south end of town, from which perhaps fifteen have been added to the church. The Bible-school formed a home department in that section and soon this developed into a Sunday-school of 50 members. When the old tabernacle was torn down, these brethren took the material and have erected a splendid mission church building which will seat about two hundred people.

Brethren Scoville and Smith came on the evening of June 3. Everything was ready for the opening of the building the next day. In a remarkably short time more than $6,000 was raised and the building erected. The building, lot and furnishings cost a little more than $23,000. The dedication day pledges are being taken up with notes and the church is released from all indebtedness, save only $4,000 borrowed from the Board of Church Extension.

In seventeen days here one hundred and forty have entered the life of faith. The high regard which is had for these men of God is indicated by the fact that they recently received one hundred calls for meetings within three days.

G. W. Hardy,
Chairman of the Church Board.

International Sunday-School Convention

The triennial meeting of the international Sunday-school association was held in Toronto, Canada, June 23-27. It was in every respect a great assembly of consecrated men and women. Two thousand delegates and visitors were expected; three thousand were present. The sessions of the convention were to have been held in the Metropolitan Methodist church, with a seating capacity of 2,500. The first meeting demonstrated the inadequacy of this auditorium to accommodate the people. It was, therefore, at once determined to hold the meetings in Massey hall—an auditorium with a seating capacity of 3,500. Simultaneous meetings were held in both the church and the hall. Both buildings were uniformly crowded. The enthusiasm was great. Some of the addresses were great. All the speeches and papers were of a remarkably high order. The great theme of the entire convention was, The Bible and How to Teach It. The spirit of this remarkable meeting was from first to last thoroughly and profoundly Christian. Not all delegates were of the same opinion on all questions. For this reason there was discussion. The debates moved on a high plane. The speakers were strong men and earnest. The report of the lesson committee gave rise to the greatest debate in this great assembly—especially the portion of the report in which advanced or supplemental lessons were suggested. The committee favored such lessons in its report to the Denver convention three years ago. That portion of the committee's report was overwhelmingly defeated by the convention in 1902. The first vote in the Toronto convention on advanced lessons stood 601 for to 617 against. The opposition contended in the debate that there was no demand for such lessons. The vote demonstrated that such a demand exists. When this fact was made clear the leader of the opposition moved a reconsideration, the result of which was a practically unanimous vote for a series of advanced lessons to be selected by the lesson committee—said lessons to be optional. This is believed to be a most important step forward in our Bible-school work.

A prominent secular paper commenting on the Toronto convention said: "Tremendous interest attaches to the religious education of the young, as was shown by the great international convention of Sunday-school workers just held in Toronto. This meeting demonstrated beyond question the wide interest held and that by people who count themselves orthodox Bible teachers."

Men show their earnest interest by giving money. The leaders in our international Sunday-school work give money as I never saw leaders contribute. The amount expended during the last triennium was more than $54,000. The amount of money pledged to carry on this work during the next three years was $75,000. The amount will easily reach $100,000. The chairman of the executive committee gives time, talent, strength, and $3,000 per annum to this work. One man asked permission to pay the entire salary of a worker among the colored people in the south. Unanimously granted! Another asked permission to pay the salary of a general Sunday-school secretary in Japan. Permission having been given, he immediately asked leave to go to Japan at his own expense and personally inaugurate the work. This request also was granted!! The erection of a building to cost $2,000,000 to be known as "International Sunday-school Headquarters" was suggested. Action was deferred. This matter will come up in the Louisville convention in 1908. Can such a building be erected? It can, there are men interested in this great enterprise who can, and will, furnish the money to make real this dream. The pilgrimage to Jerusalem in 1904 seemed to some of us an impractical scheme. To begin with, a sufficient number of persons could not be induced to go to make a convention respectable in size. But there were 1,800 delegates enrolled in the Jerusalem World's Sunday-school convention in April, 1904. Some person, or persons, must stand good, to the steamship company, for $400,000 in order to secure a vesel for the pilgrimage. Three of our men promptly came to the front and freely assumed the financial burden and responsibility. The biggest thing I know of, in a religious way, is this international Sunday-school work. It is simply tremendous.

There is no sectarianism in this convention—not a bit. This is one place where it is quite sufficient to be a Christian. No one seems to know anything about, or care anything for, denominational labels. To be on the side of the Christ and to belong to Him is sufficient.

With the beginning of 1906 a new series of lessons to continue through six years will commence. Three and a half years will be spent in the New Testament, two and a half years will be given to a study of the Old Testament. Requests for greater continuity of topics have come from many quarters and from many persons. The committee in the preparation of the new series has given respectful and sympathetic attention to this expressed desire. As a result the year 1906 will be spent in a study of Matthew, Mark, and Luke. The year 1907 will be devoted to a study of stories concerning the Old Testament patriarchs. The year 1908 will be spent as follows: Six months to a study of the fourth gospel and six months to a study of the Hebrew people from Saul to Solomon. The planting and training of the apostolic church will be the general topic during the year 1909. The year 1910 will be given to a study of the glory, decline, and restoration to their own land, of the people of Israel. This six years' course will be brought to a conclusion in the year 1911 by a study of the kingdom of Heaven as set forth in the first book of the New Testament.

I have just looked over a list of the lessons that have been studied in this international scheme since its inauguration in 1872. More time and attention have been given to The Book of Acts than to any other book in the Bible. More than two hundred lessons during this period have been in this book.

There is no thought of a critical study of the Bible in this scheme. Such study is not practicable in the average Sunday-school. The most that can be done is to give a general view of the contents of the Bible. This is all that is attempted.

The Holy Spirit.

By J. H. Garrison, Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo. $1 postpaid.

We welcome this new book from the pen of J. H. Garrison. His name would be an assurance of worth in the book. The subject is one which all should study. If it is true that the Disciples of Christ have not given due prominence to this subject in their study and in their literature, it is certainly time that they should learn to magnify it. The writer succeeds in making very real the presence of the Spirit in the word, in the church and in truly believing hearts to-day. The lesson of pentecost is spoken of in no uncertain way. The last chapter has for its subject "Christian Union." We quote: "We can not doubt that in the fullness of time, through the leadership of the Holy Spirit, our Lord will gather his scattered sheep into one fold, 'and there shall be one flock and one shepherd.'"—Missionary Tidings.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Jonesboro.—C. C. Cline has just closed a meeting resulting in 37 additions.

CALIFORNIA.

Eureka.—Work is prospering here. Three additions by letter last Lord's day; Junior Endeavor reorganized; Sunday-school doing splendid work.—I. H. TEEL.

Long Beach, July 3.—Six were added to the church here yesterday, three by letter, two by statement and one confession.—E H. KELLAR.

COLORADO.

Loveland, July 3.—We had five additions yesterday, making 22 since we began here in March. All lines of work prosperous.—A. O. WALKER, pastor.

FLORIDA.

[Telegram.]

Jacksonville, Fla., July 9.—Five additions First church, J. T. Boone, pastor; large audiences, fine sermons.—C. W. ZARING.

GEORGIA.

Griffin.—The "Martin Family," who held the meetings through North Carolina in which there were about three hundred additions, have just finished a two weeks' meeting with G. F. Cuthrell at this place with nearly 20 additions which will be a strong help to the church financially. They will hold a meeting of about four weeks' duration in San Angelo, Texas, with Brother Shore, minister.

ILLINOIS.

Jacksonville, July 8.—Four added last Sunday. This is a busy church and looking forward to the time when we can move into our new house.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON, assistant pastor.

Waukegan, July 6.—Three additions last Sunday, making six recently, five of them were adults, four confessions. Our attendance at all services is on the increase.—E N. TUCKER.

Hillsboro, July 3.—Sixty-three to date. We were billed for a meeting in South Carolina to begin the last of this month. It has just been cancelled. Who wants a meeting for that date? Write quick, no time to lose.—LAWRENCE AND EDWARD WRIGHT, general evangelists.

Aurora, July 6.—There were two additions to the church here last Sunday. We have never had a church in this little city of thirty thousand until the present organization was effected this spring. The new congregation begins its work with splendid prospects of a vigorous growth. Nearly all of the present membership of forty are adults. One-half are men whose character and standing in the community are the promising features of our work. Charles A. Young was with us recently in a short campaign of education. His Bible studies and strong sermons on the fundamental things in religion brought our work before the town in a very successful manner and enlisted the interest of many to whom our church has been entirely unknown.—R. L. HANDLEY, pastor.

Chicago, Ill.—The First church congregation submits the following report of its work for the year ending June 30, 1905: Amount of money raised for all purposes. $4,233.09; for missionary enterprises, $402.10; for local benevolences, $135; amount raised in cash for church lot fund, no personal subscriptions being taken, $410. There were added to the church during the year 78 persons. Loss by letter and otherwise 31; net gain in membership for the year, 47.—GUY HOOVER, pastor.

INDIANA.

Francesville, July 5.—One confession at Gillem school house June 25; two baptisms here June 27.—I. G. SHAW.

Hammond, July 3.—One confession and one by letter yesterday. Three by letter and three confessions the Sunday previous. In all thirty-seven confessions and 10 by letter since January not previously reported. We are working and praying for means to build a new church large enough to accommodate our needs.—C. J. SHARP, minister.

KANSAS.

Wichita, June 30.—W. E. Harlow and son after closing at the Central church came to the South Lawrence avenue church for a few days. Results: 31 accessions and church greatly revived.—W. T. MCLAIN.

Augusta, June 30.—We are enlarging and improving our church building at a cost of $2,200 or more. We begin a summer meeting in a temporary tabernacle in the city park July 9. M. E. Harlan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., is to do the preaching and V. E. Ridenour, of Topeka, Kan., is to lead in the singing. We have made great preparations for this meeting. The writer has held during the last quarter Bible institutes in the following places: Beaumont, Douglas, Haverhill, Leon, Arkansas City and Cherokee, Okla. We are encouraged and believe the Lord is wonderfully blessing our work. The Augusta church is one of the best in this part of Kansas.—G. J. CHAPMAN.

KENTUCKY.

Henderson.—Five accessions at regular services since close of meeting.—WM. A. WARD.

Princeton, July 1.—The Crossfield-St. John meetingf closed with 58 added to the church—54 baptisms. The greatest meeting in the history of Princeton. The church will have these brethren again next year.—HARVEY BAKER SMITH.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Everett, July 3.—Yesterday we had three additions and one confession.—A. T. JUNE.

MISSOURI.

Fredericktown, July 6.—S. W. Robinson, of Libertyville, just closed a very successful singing of two weeks' length with us at Mountain Oak church, and also preached several times.—S. P. GROSS, minister.

Ham's Prairie, July 3.—W. T. Clarkson, of Northside church, Lawrence, Kan., preached yesterday to a full house. At the close of the morning service there were two additions.—W.

Shelbyville, July 3.—The work moves nicely. One confession yesterday. Our offering on children's day amounted to almost $35. Our Lord's day school is in excellent condition.—C. E. WAGNER, pastor.

St. Louis, July 3.—There were four added by primary obedience and two by statement, to the Fourth church, in June.—E. T. MCFARLAND.

Chillicothe, July 4.—James N. Crutcher and Clarence Wagner will hold another meeting at Chillicothe, beginning October 22. Their last meeting with the Chillicothe church resulted in 102 additions to the church.

Macon, July 7.—I held a meeting with my son, C. E. Dunkleberger, at Flat River, and there were 27 additions. The church seems greatly benefited and will build at once. My post office will hereafter be Macon, Mo., instead of Canton.—D. DUNKLEBERGER.

OHIO.

Findlay, June 28.—Please report two additions to the First church by baptism.—C. H. BASS, pastor.

OREGON.

Salem, June 27.—The Martin-McVay meeting closed here the evening of June 25 with 150 additions, most of them adults. This gives us the lead so far as numbers is concerned in the city. The results are beyond our expectations. —D. ERRETT, minister.

Turner, June 27.—We enjoyed Bro. J. A. Lord's sermons very much at our state convention. I go from here to Silverton, Oregon, to sing in a meeting conducted by Brother Martin.—CHARLES E. MCVAY, singing evangelist.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Lone Pine, July 3.—Closed a meeting of three weeks and one day with the church here yesterday. J. J. White is the pastor. It has been a good meeting; ten were added—nine by baptism and one by statement.—F. A. BRIGHT, evangelist.

TEXAS.

Greenville, July 3.—The additions to our congregation have not been reported. There have been 133 since my coming here eighteen months ago.—JOHN WRIGHT HOLSAPPLE.

Ferris, July 3.—I began a meeting for the Ferris brethren, Sunday, June 25. We were rained out until the middle of the week, but in four days have had seven additions, five of them by confession and baptism. Meeting continues. —CHAS. CHASTEEN.

[Telegram.]

Dallas, July 10.—We are in a tabernacle meeting with the East Dallas church. Eighteen added yesterday and 28 last Sunday; nearly 1,000 men at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon; nine men accepted Christ. We have reached over 1,300 for Christ and his church in the first six months of 1905.—CHARLES REIGN SCOVILLE and DELOSS SMITH.

WISCONSIN.

Grand Rapids.—We observed children's day last Lord's day evening, got a collection of $8.90. Our school is only nine weeks old, has 65 pupils enrolled, people here never heard of a church of Christ until we came in during the past winter.—B. G. EGGERT.

THE NATURAL AND SPIRITUAL MAN.—1 Cor. 2; Romans 8.

The Contrast. No one can read even the two chapters indicated above without realizing that the Christian is not like the man of the world, but has become indeed a "new creature" (2 Cor. 5:17; Gal. 6:15). But how many whose names are on our church books are living in no respect differently from their worldly neighbors! The body of Christ is hampered in its divine enterprise by a multitude of dead members, who cannot contribute anything to its power, because they lack the life of God. Is it not time that "judgment should begin at the house of God," and these carnal members be revived unto spiritual life, or separated from such contact with the spiritual members as will neutralize all their efforts to serve God and save men? Without attempting any critical distinctions between the "natural" and "carnal" man, as these terms are used in the New Testament, let us look at the contrast between the man who is dominated by the spirit of God, and the one who lives after the spirit of the world.

The Natural Man. 1. Is ignorant of the things of God (1 Cor. 2:14). Much of the opposition of the sinful heart to Christ is due to ignorance of the scriptures. To teach men the word of God is to remove much of the hostility to righteousness. 2. Is at enmity against God (Rom. 8:7, 8). Man was made for knowing, loving and serving God. There is great wisdom in the answer of the old catechisms to the question as to the chief end of man, "To glorify God and enjoy him forever." He who remains willingly ignorant of God's will, and indifferent thereto, is missing the whole purpose of his creation. 3. Is sectarian in spirit, and prone to strife and divisions (1 Cor. 3:3, 4). This sectarianism may be equally manifest and harmful, where it does not take the form of diverse names and organizations, but merely of unchristian suspicion and malicious slander. Any man who seeks to alienate those who believe in the one Lord and one Father, because of their difference in opinion or method of work, is a sectarian. As one of our preachers said not long ago, "The meanest sectarian of all is the sectarian preacher of unsectarian truth." The apostolic heresy was that of dividing the body of Christ; and it is possible to pose as an advocate of Christian union and yet be a promoter of disunion. Let us examine ourselves, whether we be true to our great plea. 4. Is subject to death (Rom. 8:6,13). The carnal man having separated himself from God, the source of life, can but die, both in time and eternity.

The Spiritual Man. 1. Knows the things of God (1 Cor. 2:12, 13). The Holy Spirit is also the Spirit of truth, and to become subject to his influence is to be enlightened in the will and purpose of God. Many a humble saint, who lacks worldly wisdom and the culture of schools, has become by practice wise in the truth that saves the soul, and ennobles the character. 2. Has the mind of Christ (1 Cor. 2:16; Phil. 3:5-11). Therefore his life is molded after the pattern of Jesus' life, and his ministry to the world is a perpetuation of that of his Master. For him to live is Christ. 3. Possesses the Spirit of God (Rom. 8:9). Enjoys the highest and holiest relations possible to a human soul, being permitted to call God his Father and Jesus Christ his Savior and Elder Brother (Rom. 8:14-17). With what contempt may such an one look upon the honors of the world, and the glories of earthly kingdoms! He is a Prince of the Most High, and heir to throne and crown immortal. 4. Enjoys, through these new relations, fullness of life and peace (Rom. 8:6-10). Oh, that all who call themselves Christians might experience this blessed life, and the church of God be indeed the light of the world, and the salt of the earth!

THE GRACIOUS INVITATION.—Isaiah 55:1-13.

Memory Verses, 6 8.

GOLDEN TEXT:—Seek ye the Lord while he may be found.—Isa. 55:6.

Those who consider the later chapters of Isaiah a product of the period of the Exile, make this fifty-fifth chapter one of two or three exhortations delivered shortly before the return, when the opportunity was in sight and yet there was the temptation to remain and enjoy the profitable commercial relations which had been formed by many of the thrifty Hebrews in the land of their exile. Whether this was written then or at an earlier date, it is doubtless true that such exhortations were needed to persuade many of the Jews to return from comfortable and prosperous exile in Babylon to their own devastated Zion.

And it is equally true that the call is ever needed, in every age, by those who have to make choice between ease and material prosperity on the one hand, and the true values of life on the other. There is a vast amount of spending resources on that which has in it no real or permanent food for satisfaction. Whether this noble chapter was written in the reign of Hezekiah or in the days of Cyrus, whether by Isaiah or a great unknown prophet, it bears deathless testimony to the superiority of the spiritual way of life. It makes eloquent appeal to all men to turn from the low, mean and unprofitable things, to leave even the things which are good but not the best, and to seek the spiritual values which are truly substantial. And it breathes a buoyant and hopeful spirit, a contagious joy in righteousness, a perfect enthusiasm for spiritual things.

MRS. STEESE'S BABY

Cured of Terrible Eczema by Cuticura and Skin Made Clear as New-Born Babe's.

"My little daughter was covered with sores and her face was terribly disfigured. I called in three doctors, but she grew worse. Neighbors advised Cuticura, and before I had used half of the cake of soap and box of ointment the sores had all healed, and my little one's skin was as clear as a new-born babe's. I would not be without Cuticura again if it cost five dollars, instead of 75 cents, which is all it cost us to cure our baby."—Mrs. G. J. Steese, 701 Coburn Street, Akron, O.

PREPARING FOR OUR HEAVENLY HOME.—

Phil. 3:20, 21; Heb. 11:13-16.

For the Leader.

The world is a happy place. Whether we admit it or not, there is testimony to this view in the fact that we want to remain here as long as possible. With a few exceptions, we are prone to tarry in this good land. Yet we have many hardships, many trials, many sorrows here. Now this is far from ideal. We can not keep from thinking how happy we would be if these disadvantages were removed. This will not be done for us. Yet we are told how to realize the equivalent of this: Trust God and prepare for another world, another home—heaven. This is better. It is not an old world made over. It is another world. To us a new world. It is a place where the things that worry us here are never known.

Here is the thought for us to-night: We must prepare for this home.

For the Members.

1. Heavenly home. What heaven is we can not tell. But this we know, it is a place that God has prepared for us. Jesus has told us that it was prepared for God's own from the foundation of the world. It is not, then, an afterthought with God—heaven. He intended from the beginning to lead the sons of men up to these upper fields of glory in his good time. My work may be made very good; What then, can God's work be made in his infinite power?

2. It is our home. This not in the sense that it was made for us. That is true. But in the sense that we were made for heaven. If this be true, what then follows? Many things. If we were made for heaven, then we do not fit in another place. Destruction from the presence of God is not our destiny. We must live the life that prepares for heaven, if we would be happy while on the road to our heavenly home. The life of sin hurts, for it is not the life for which we were made. It is unnatural. Man was not made to live such a life.

3. The person that now is, and the person that we are conscious of having been since first we could remember, that is the same person that is to live in heaven some day. But some say, "How can this be? How can this body of corruption enter an eternal home?" Well, the author of Philippians says, in the Standard American Revision, "Shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able even to subject all things unto himself" (Phil. 3:31). This gives us to understand that the new body will some way, by the power of the Lord, be made into the new and heavenly body. This is the difference between the Christian and the philosophical doctrines of immortality.

Getting ready for the change of homes. How important that is! When we make a long journey here below, how long it takes us to get ready! Everybody on the place is called into service to get one of the family off. And if the whole family is going, and if the journey be across the sea to live all the rest of the allotted time, it is the greatest thing that ever happens in a family's history, and the preparation is in keeping with the magnitude of the change. Here is the time for our departure for our heavenly home drawing near. What preparations are we making? Does the voyage across the crystal sea inspire us to nobler thoughts and nobler deeds as we think of it? Why not? There is nothing so important marked to happen in the career we make from the cradle on. Oh, get ready! It will be the day of all days. And next to that day will be the day upon which we gave our hearts to Jesus in preparation for the heavenly home.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Could I know that within the next month I was to sail the unknown sea, would it make any difference in my living?

Hypnotism and Evangelism, Once More.

Editor, Christian-Evangelist:—It is not for controversy that I again attempt to make clear some things which you seem not to understand in my recent article on "Hypnotic Evangelists." This is certainly a very important subject, since so many pseudo-philosophies and psychic experiences are engaging our attention and making inroads into the church of the living God. I am not an "accurate" writer, it is true, and would make a very poor editor, but I have no fears of my article being misunderstood by every student of modern experimental psychology.

But to the text, "Hypnotism a cheap substitute for the Holy Spirit." In your comments where you use that phrase the second time you add "or the gospel," which to me puts a different phase to the subject. If the St. Louis preachers had concluded that psychological experiences were a cheap substitute for the gospel I would have uttered a loud Amen. That is exactly my contention, and so I tried to express it in the statement that the danger line as I see it was in what was suggested. In your definition of hypnotism the author says "little or no recollection of the actions or ideas dominant during the condition are retained." In the first place, this is an obsolete definition and would not be accepted to-day by a single up-to-date psychologist. But for sake of illustration we will accept the definition. You then ask, "Does the preaching of the gospel produce an abnormal consciousness in which the mind receives ideas and the person performs actions which are not remembered upon regaining 'normal consciousness'?" I answer, never! But a perverted gospel, wherein the Holy Spirit is supposed to come and "carry" the word to the sinner's heart, rout out all evil, convict, convert, sanctify and bear witness of all these by a feeling instead of by faith in what he says, does produce an abnormal consciousness in the mind and actions are performed which are not at all in harmony with a normal presentation of the gospel to a normal intellect.

I still contend for my definition of suggestion, and the experiences of our beclouded religious neighbors where the altar system is still used will verify it, that it is such a presentation of thoughts or ideas to the mind as will result in a mental, moral or physical change. Those acquainted with Professor Starbuck's excellent work on "Psychology in Religion," or Professor Coe's "Spiritual Life," will, I think, not question this statement. I am a stickler for the gospel as against the mysterious manifestations of the mind dominated by the suggestion that the Holy Spirit does his work other than revealed in his holy word.

While it may seem a digression here, yet it is right along this line that there is so much misunderstanding on the subject of Christian Science, falsely so called. From Bros. Craig, Keeler, and the editor, I infer that the power to heal belongs exclusively to the church, and yet Brother Keeler says, "In no real sense can 'Christian Science' be classed as a church of the incarnate Son of God." So say I, and the very fact of their healings which has made all their converts proves that the power to heal does not belong to the church any more than to all God's creatures. He sends the rain alike on the just and the unjust, as he also gives us a mind, or minds, with certain functions to perform relating to the body, and here comes the physical change as a result of suggestion for that purpose and to that end. Here I close, with the hope, dear brother, that while we may now see as through a glass darkly, we may some time see as face to face.

Springfield, Mo. W. E. Harlow.

[It now appears that our brother was replying to something that was not said or implied in anything that was written, but to something he inferred. But why he should suppose that the preachers of St. Louis were less clear than himself as regards "the mysterious manifestations of the mind dominated by the suggestion that the Holy Spirit does his work other than revealed in his holy word," is something we do not clearly grasp. It is probably because his mind was "dominated" by a wrong "suggestion."

Bro. H. thinks that our use of the phrase, "the gospel," instead of the Holy Spirit, "puts a different phase on the question." Isn't this because his mind is "dominated by the suggestion" that to be converted by the Holy Spirit is something different from being converted by the gospel? This is one of the most common errors extant. To dispense with the Holy Spirit in preaching is to dispense with the gospel, and to dispense with the gospel is to dispense with the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit, as the Editor has tried to point out in his recent book on the subject, accomplishes his work in the conversion and sanctification of men through the truth of the gospel. When we said, therefore, that those who sought for power to preach the gospel successfully through hypnotism, were seeking "a cheap substitute for the Holy Spirit," we meant that it is only through the aid and guidance of the Holy Spirit that the gospel can be preached with convincing and converting power.

It is not "the experiences of our beclouded religious neighbors" that we were dealing with, but the "beclouded" and materialistic conceptions of the gospel of some who claim to have very clear ideas about the Holy Spirit, who seem to think that men can be manipulated and suggested into the kingdom of God while in a passive state. The two errors are very close akin and have a common root.

Another erroneous "suggestion" that Bro. H. seems to be laboring under, is, that Brothers Craig, Keeler and the Editor hold that "the power to heal belongs exclusively to the church"! On the contrary, we hold that all healing power belongs to God, and that the mission of the church relates especially to the ills of the spirit, and incidentally only to the ills of the body. God's healing power is not hemmed and limited by the church, but flows through various channels for the blessing of mankind. The church is to lend itself, as far as it can do so, to ministering to all the needs of man, but its supreme mission is to bring the divine power of the gospel to bear upon men as the remedy for sin and its train of evil consequences.

We join our dear brother in the hope that while we now know in part, we shall hereafter know even as we are known. Meanwhile, "heart to heart we bide the shadows, till the mists are cleared away." —Editor.]

In the Interest of Truth.

Not in any spirit of controversy, nor with any desire to have the last word, do I write this letter.

I am in favor of unity; but it must be effected upon a scriptural basis.

In the union consummated recently at Monroe, Wisconsin, between the Baptists and the church of Christ, not the Bible; but a preamble and set of resolutions was made the basis of unity.

A human name was adopted for this new organization. We have ever protested against human ecclesiastical names, why adopt this one? "Presbyterian church" is as scriptural as "Union Church of Christ."

Half the offerings in this "Union Church of Christ" are to go to the spreading of Baptist teaching and church polity. How can Disciples of Christ conscientiously do that?

This "Union Church of Christ" must be represented by delegates to "denominational conventions of both Christian and Baptist churches." The Christian church has no "denominational conventions." We are not a denomination.

The resolutions adopted set aside the weekly observance of the Lord's supper, as practiced by the church in the days of the apostles, and substitute the Baptist method of monthly communion. By what law of right can our brethren enter into such a compact?

It is bad enough for members of the church to absent themselves from the Lord's table, and for some of our congregations to carelessly neglect weekly communion; but it is very much worse for them to deliberately resolve to neglect it three Lord's days in each month. There is as much authority for Methodist quarterly communion or Presbyterian trimonthly communion, as there is for monthly observance.

Within the past year I have held meetings for two congregations where the brethren only met once per month "to break bread." By prayerful and tearful exhortation, I induced them to repent of this wrong, and henceforward honor their Lord by weekly communion. The action of the brethren at Monroe, Wisconsin, does not afford any stimulus to my plea for a return to primitive practice.

It does seem to me that weekly communion is a very vital matter. Is not its neglect the cause "of many weak and sickly ones" among us. For invalids and aged ones who cannot be at the Lord's table, doubtless the Lord will make provision; but for those who can be there, but will not attend, it may be of very vital concern.

Let us foster unity in all legitimate ways, but let there be no backward step. Only the Lord can dictate the terms.

Simpson Ely.

The Salute.

We, about to die, salute you kindly—
We, the very old, hail you, the young,
Though the shows of earth we see but blindly,
And a leaden weight is on our tongue.

But our wan old hearts expand in pleasure,
Watching how your spirits kindle bright;
And we dream us back to springtime treasure,
Old, dim ardors, ghost of gone delight.

We relive in you the chances splendid,
All the buffetings and all the gains;
O, the sense of time and time unended,
Ere the hope dies, ere the wonder wanes!
How you love and fight and taste of rapture,
How your sleep restores you to the sun,
How the sweet of every hour you capture
Haughtily, as heroes e'er have done!

We have lived and loved, as you are doing;
We are glad to see you run the race;
Half you seem ourselves—your work, your wooing,
Your high stakes of glory or disgrace.

Hail! Farewell! nor blame us if a sadness
Clutches at our throat the while we gaze
Brokenly, through tears, upon that gladness
Once was ours in exquisite old days.

Not one bliss nor belief would we dispute you;
Once for us as well the whole earth sung,
We, about to die, again salute you—
We, the elders, hail our brothers young!

—Richard Burton, in the July Century.

Follow Your Own Bent.

I begin with a fable. A lion once grew tired of the forest and essayed navigation like a whale, with the result that all the little fishes laughed at his bungling attempts to swim without fins, and finally made a fine dinner of his remains. Meanwhile, as it happened, one of the whales, who for a hundred years had been a champion spouter, thought it would be delightful to roam over the fields like an ox, but when he tried it, he soon came to grief, and the crows who assembled at his obsequies passed a unanimous resolution to the effect that it is best for whales to keep to the water, and for lions to keep to the land. Each in his own element, was the lesson of the failure of the four-footed beast to swim in the sea, and of the legless leviathan to march on the shore.

We discover many parallels to this in human endeavor. Here, for instance, is a man who would have made an excellent policeman; but he is trying to get on as a very indifferent school teacher. Here is another who is well adapted to the work of an accountant, and who is wasting his time trying to write a novel that no one will publish, and no one would read if it were printed. Here is a mill owner who has succeeded in winning a fortune from the business he understands, but is ambitious to be a great banker; with the result that his bank goes down in a flood of bankruptcy, and his factory is swept down stream along with his bank. Here is a young woman whose talent plainly points to her distinction as a teacher, but who imagines that she may shine as another Miss Cushman; and in her feeble attempts as an actress she gets more ridicule than applause. Coloridge was a born poet, but his ambition was to be a philosopher. Result: The world would gladly exchange all the fog-banks of his prose for another poem of the type of the "Ancient Mariner."

Exceptional, we must believe, is the lad or lass of eighteen or twenty who has not developed a special bent toward some particular form of useful service in life. Happy such a one if the dominating aptitude is recognized, if the one divinely appointed field of work be fully cultivated, if the portion of life's vineyard allotted to another, however alluring it may seem at a distance, be left unexplored. Never was it so true as in our age of specializations that success is conditioned on doing well one form of work, and our exclusive task.

In Christian experience and service, as well as in the secular realm, the fact of a special bent and place for each should be recognized. Perhaps the problem of the boy would be nearer solution to our churches if clearer thinking were the rule among church officials concerning the true type of the religious expression of the lad, say of fifteen. As soon as a boy outgrows his childhood we expect him to adopt the relations and duties of a Christian—which is correct; but too often we expect him to think, speak and act like a Christian of middle life or old age—which is incorrect. Little wonder if our fifteen-year-old friend soon wearies of the church if he is led to fear that he is not a Christian unless he has the special style of spiritual expression of the deacon who has served the Lord for fifty years! Suppose a young fellow of sixteen doesn't enjoy a mothers' meeting, and is bored by the style of missionary service that may be perfectly suited to the need of his aunts and great-aunts; are we to allow him to conclude that consequently his spirituality is defective? He needs a place of his own in the mechanism of the church; and too often we fail to help him to find it.

Henry Drummond never said a wiser thing than when he advised boys that they were to serve God as boys and not as grandmothers. Now grandmothers have their rights in the regular Sunday church service, as well as in the general estimate of the true quality of Christian discipleship; but the boy or young man has his corresponding rights as well. And it is clearly to expect him to do violence to his own nature to require him to be interested in the precise line of church work of his elders, or to sing their hymns, or to offer their style of prayers. Many of us can remember the verses we used to sing in Sunday-school,

"I want to be an angel, and with the angels stand,
A crown upon my forehead, a harp within my hand."

Now, apart from the fact that if any of us were so foolish as to wish to be angels the desire would be vain, and considering merely the longing for a better future existence to which words of this order in our hymnology give expression—what healthy boy of fifteen ever really wanted to be an angel or saint? He is quite satisfied to be a boy, and I think that God wants him to be just a boy; and if he is led to talk or sing about the delight of dying, and of his great desire to go to heaven right off, there is a false note to all his religion, he is made to utter sentiments that are revolting to his true nature. He is a David forced to wear the armor of Saul; he is crowded into a place in the church where he does not belong.

Let us honor naturalness and originality in Christian service. Let us assure ourselves of the truth that there is a form of service for the Master that each can do better than anyone else. Then let each cobbler in Caanan stick to his own last.—G. F. Greene, in New York Observer.

Life in Hayti.

No reliable census has been taken of Hayti since the days of the French. Roughly estimated, it is said to contain about a million people, seventy per cent of whom are black and thirty per cent white or mulatto. It is a notorious fact that few of the lower orders go through any civil or religious marriage, which explains why most of the children born on the island are of illegitimate parentage. The native Haytian is ugly, ignorant, fond of strong drink, and extremely lazy, his favorite occupation being sleep—when he is not watching a cock-fight. He only labors when compelled to, and is very apt to cite an old Haytian proverb to the effect that "only white men, black women and asses work." He seldom finishes anything he starts, and never makes repairs, when anything wears out, he simply throws it away. Under these circumstances, his utter disregard of responsibility and habitual repudiation of obligations must be looked upon as a natural consequence.

As a rule, the native Haytian carries his entire wardrobe on his back, consisting of a pair of trousers and a coarse shirt, to which a light hat is added upon occasions. Children run about the streets in the custumes of Adam and Eve, and the dusky daughters of the latter are scantily clad in flowing draperies that reveal their heaving bosoms and bare nether extremities. They are only distinguished by a certain gracefulness that is acquired by carrying heavy loads on their heads, and turbans of the most gaudy description that make vivid spots of color in the landscape.

The wretched hovels that serve as houses for the lower classes of the natives scarcely deserve the designation of home. In many instances, the dimensions are but twelve by eighteen feet, and they are constructed of basket work walls with steep, thatched roofs, that are overshadowed by majestic palms and banana trees loaded with fruit. In passing, it may be said that the banana thrives particularly well here, owing to the fact that there are so many secluded valleys in which it is screened from the wind. But to return to the habitation I was describing: the single room contains but the most necessary articles of furniture and a few cooking utensils, rice and beans, washed down with native rum, being the national food. For the Haytian can not be induced to add anything to his menu that requires exertion. If you should pass one of these comfortless abodes in the evening, you would observe the interior dimly illuminated by means of a taper floating on a tumblerful of Palma Christi oil. But poverty has no terrors for the Haytian; for here there is no cold; the earth produces fruits and vegetables in abundance; and the use of clothing is reduced to its lowest terms.

The houses of the better class of natives, however, are more comfortable. In town they are almost invariably shut in by high walls, or are entered from the interior, and can be barricaded in time of insurrection. In these dwellings there is a French air in the decorations and furnishings, which is particularly manifested in an abundance of mirrors. The kitchen is usually detached.—Hugo Erichsen, in The Pilgrim for July.

Michigan Summer Resorts.

Among the lakes and rivers of the East Coast of Lake Michigan is the ideal country for a summer outing. Fishing, boating, bathing, sailing, golf, and above all, an ideal climate. Pure air and pure spring water. Health and recreation. Booklets descriptive of these resorts mailed on application to H. F. MOELLER, G. P. A., Pere Marquette Railroad, Union Station, Detroit, Mich.

Holidays at Home.

If, for any reason, it is impossible to go away from home in summer, try what you may do without leaving the familiar place. Air the house thoroughly in the early morning and at other times keep it dark and cool. Opinions vary as to whether a house is cooler with doors and windows closed in the middle of the day, than if a current of air is allowed to pass from room to room. Much depends on the thickness of the walls and the location of the house, but darkened rooms are certainly cooler than those to which the sun is allowed free access. Put away all superfluities in the line of bric-a-brac and ornaments. Make the housekeeping as light as possible, and during the summer avoid too many hot meats and rich pastries. Take short trips, by trolley or steamer, to objective points not very far from home. You may be surprised to discover that within a very few miles of your town or village there are woods and groves where the birds sing, the wild flowers bloom and the sunbeams sift down through interlacing boughs on the velvet turf. There may be historic spots not far from you which tourists visit, but which you have never seen.—Mrs. Sangster, in Woman's Home Companion for July.

Filipinos and School.

Willard French, who recently paid an extended visit to the Philippines, contributes to the April number of the North American Review an extremely interesting article on "The Public School System in the Philippines." Mr. French was not in search of school developments, but they were omnipresent; he could not traverse the streets of a native town, morning or noon, without passing laughing bevies of thin-shirted youngsters, hugging to their brown sides familiar home school-books. Even in Mindanao, Mr. French says, he has yet to find the boy or girl who did not smile and reply in kind to "Hello" or "Good-by." To-day, nearly three hundred thousand Filipino children are enrolled in the public schools. New and larger buildings are being called for all over the islands, and many municipalites have already constructed large schoolhouses, with carpenter shops at one end and blacksmith shops at the other, for manual training.

The Largest Salaries.

When one sees the throngs of richly appareled money-spenders of the great resorts, dining, driving, yachting, dancing, it sometimes seems as though big salaries—big incomes—were the rule rather than the exception. An article contributed to the June 22d issue of the Youth's Companion by Carroll D. Wright will tend to correct this notion. Salaries of more than $25,000 are, comparatively, about as scarce as hen's teeth, and those of $5,000 and $10,000 are not so numerous as to be had for the asking.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE FOURTH NIGHT.

Mr. Worth Acre came by for Arthur about an hour after supper, and took him home for the night. It was Arthur's second night at Horseshoe House. He was somewhat shy with the blacksmith at first, for he had not been with him since his return from the attempted flight. But the great muscular man was so gentle with him and, at the same time had so completely forgotten all about the misunderstanding that the little musician was presently at his ease. On his first visit at Horseshoe House he had seen no one but the master. It was so to-night. There were no lights at any of the windows, nor were any sounds to be heard from within. Mr. Acre entered neither of the front doors which stood in the front ends of the horseshoe-shaped building. He passed between these ends into the circular court, and Arthur still thought it strange to stand by the silver maple and have the house wind about him like some enormous snake. It was dark and Mr. Acre had to feel his way, as he fumbled at a lock with his key. Presently he opened a door softly and Arthur followed him into a room. It was the same room in which they had slept together the night before. The host lit a lamp and set it upon a bracket which was fastened high up on the wall. The wall next to the court, and the wall opposite to it, both curved in contributing their part to the horse-shoe effect of the dwelling. Opposite the door which they had just entered from the court was a window. At each end of the room there was a door. As Miss Lizzie Day had told Mace, one could enter one front door and pass from room to room and come out the other front door, for each room was just behind the other, and each was the same width. "You have never seen my father," remarked Mr. Worth Acre as he threw up the window and propped open the court door that a breeze might sweep through. "He's a remarkably preserved old gentleman; he's ninety-eight. But he goes to bed at dusk and doesn't get up till you go to Mr. Woodney's for breakfast, it's happened that way. I'd like for you to take your meals here, Arthur, and we must see if it can't be managed somehow. I'll study over it. Grandpa has taken up some queer notions and I'm going to try to fit you into them." He drew a great leather covered armchair across the doorway, and took off his coat and vest, which he had donned on leaving his shop, because in bringing Arthur home they were obliged to pass the front windows of the Misses Day. "Ha, this is comfort," he cried, removing his collar and tie, and pulling off his boots. The south breeze stole in from the court and made the lamp flare and dance. The silver maple could be heard whispering to itself. "Set your chair right between the window and me," said Worth Acre.

"I'm afraid of the draught," said Arthur, pulling a rockingchair to one side. "I'm the easiest person to catch cold you ever saw."

"That so?" said Worth, examining the frail little body with a critical eye. "Well, I've got to harden you. Now, son, what a man needs first of all, in setting out for any port, is a hale and hearty body. It doesn't matter how much brains you have, if there isn't enough blood to feed 'em. Everything is built up from blood, blood is what you want. Look at me!" He rose and bared his massive arms. "Let me tell you what the success of my business depends on, what churches need, and schools, and physicians, and blacksmiths—blood, son, blood. Why! I'd rather be strong and able to hold my own with my fellowmen, than to be as smart as Daniel Webster or as persevering as George Washington. If I see a pickle, I want to be able to eat it. And if I see a bully, I want to be able to knock him down; yes, my lad, to knock him down!"

"In your business," said Arthur timidly, "the muscles are always in action."

"Ah, my fine fellow, there's no business on earth that will compare with it!" cried Worth Acre enthusiastically. "How would the horses travel our winter roads without the blacksmith? What would people do when their carriages and buggies lost a bolt or a screw? Such a little thing sends them on their way rejoicing—but a necessary thing. Many and many a time I've had the pleasure parties stop before my shop for just a touch, or a bit of iron that they couldn't do without. 'How much do you charge?' they'd say. Why, bless your heart! There's no charge for that kind of help. There's no money in it, of course—it's like giving a cold drink of water to a thirsty wayfarer. That's the part of life that keeps a man's heart open—the work he does for nothing. But it isn't for nothing, after all; it's for something we don't talk about, you know—something simply to be felt, and left without words. For there are a few things in this life that are simply perfect till you touch them with words—then they are spoiled."

"Yes, music is one of them," said Arthur, nodding thoughtfully.

"If I were a music player," said Worth, "I'd feel that all this strength and power in my blood was doing the world mighty little good. But that's just because I don't see the true inwardness of the matter, I suppose. I'll tell you what I always thought music was for. A fellow will have his notions on a subject whether they're trained notions or wild ones. I always thought music was to make people feel. Take a brass band. When I hear one, I feel like going sideways like a circus-horse. When I hear a hymn in church I feel a whole lot of religion that most generally I just know, without feeling. When I hear 'Dixie' I begin boiling and blubbering up inside till steam has got to be vented, and the only way I've found is to throw up my hat and give up the effort with a yell. Know what I mean?"

"I think you are right about music making people feel," said Arthur doubtfully. "Maybe different people have to have different music."

Worth Acre nodded thoughtfully and said, "Those funny little jumps you make, and those races you take up and down your fiddle-string, and then the sudden whacks and stops, and the first thing you know that scratching 'way up in the air—most as keen as a locust in August—how does all that make you feel?"

Arthur clasped his thin white fingers about his knee and stared over the blacksmith's stalwart legs into the gloom of the court. "When I am playing," he said, "everything that I would like to have—a home—a mother—and—and all that, seems

HIMALYA
(THE KOLA COMPOUND)
The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific, proving that HAY-FEVER
—AND—
ASTHMA can be CURED.
Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Clossen, 126 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes, Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.
Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

just out of my reach. And as I play it draws near and nearer—everything beautiful—all that is dear—all that I might have had if everything had been different." He paused, then said, "I don't know how to say it—I expect it's one of those things you meant that are just perfect without words."

"Never knew your mother and father, son?"

"No sir. They died before I can remember. I was taken into an orphans' home. My father was a musician, but he drank; he died that way."

"No kinfolks, I reckon, hey?"

"There was an uncle—mother's brother—he used to send some money to the orphan home. Once he came to see me. He took me out driving. I don't know whatever became of him. I don't know his name. 'Uncle Roster' is what I called him."

"Must have been mighty poor material to leave you in an orphan home," remarked Worth Acre.

"He was so good to me that day!" said Arthur. "He drove me all about the city, and every once in awhile we'd stop at a drug store and get an icecream-soda. At the shops we got candy and peanuts and doughnuts and everything. One reason why I remember it so well—I was so young—is, because I was dreadfully sick that night after he had gone. I'm glad he never knew how sick I was."

"That brings me back to what I was talking about at first," exclaimed the blacksmith. "Whatever you mean to do with yourself, you can only do it half way with a weakly body. If fiddle you must, it stands to reason you can pile up those runs and make those leaps better if your arm is strong and your legs steady under you. I've been devising. There are a whole lot of health magazines being printed, telling just how to build up blood. I never needed to base my strength on a magazine; but with you it's different. I've ordered half a dozen magazines through Mr. Wren, bearing on the subject, and as long as you're here, I mean to work on you. I hope you'll take no exceptions?"

"It is kind of you to think of it," said Arthur with some hesitation.

"I've been afraid you mightn't like it," said Worth Acre hastily, "so I thought if you'd bring your fiddle over, we could take a dose of the magazine and then you could play your music as a solace. And I'll do my level best to learn to appreciate Mozart and those old chaps. I'll buckle and screw my mind onto your playing, and in turn, you'll meet me half way in building up your blood." To this Arthur agreed, feeling he could do no less. Presently they went to bed, and the blacksmith had scarcely settled himself, when he was sound asleep. It was long before the little musician could find repose. Mr. Acre unconsciously sought his favorite position—with his head at one corner and his feet at the opposite corner, and his body forming as it were, a diagonal fence. Arthur was pushed up into a small triangle of sheet where he was obliged to lie with his knees rather close to his chin. As the host had a rich supply of blood, he scorned all covering save the upper sheet, and insisted, in his sleepy unconsciousness, in heaping all extra covering over upon Arthur. The little musician, after thinking a great deal about Jennie Woodney and the approaching grand dinner to which he was uninvited, fell asleep; and all went well in Horseshoe House.

Business Notes.

"Gloria in Excelsis" has not come to stay, for they are going out now in goodly numbers to those wishing the song book of this century.

"What is Your Life?" by Russell, is one of the books to put into the hand of any young friend, especially one leaving home even for a time. Price, $1.00.

Have you read "The Simple Life," by Charles Wagner? Think of such a book at 50 cents postpaid, in good cloth binding, full of splendid, purest thought.

The devotional books, "Alone with God," "Heavenward Way," and "Half Hour Studies," are always in demand and always acceptable. In good silk cloth, 75 cents each.

Our Bible school buttons, with Scripture texts and scenes in the Life of Christ, at 15 cents a dozen, postpaid, are meeting with favor wherever used and will grow in use among our classes once trying them. Try a dozen.

In marriage certificates, booklets and such like, we are fully equipped and will take pleasure in sending you our circular, with full list of the stock on hand and prices of same. Command us in any way possible.

Have you seen the "Dime Album," with spaces in it for securely putting away ten dimes, and by which the children easily enlist their friends in raising funds for many good purposes? Price, 5 cents each, good for years.

Our Cradle Roll stock is complete; so that we can furnish any and all our schools with everything needed for this happy phase of interest.

We have another new supply of Reward Cards in stock, and will be glad to furnish our schools or teachers with a list of what we have in hand, prices ranging from 10 to 30 cents per package, postpaid. We keep the best.

Has your school used the red and blue buttons or has either of your Endeavor Societies tried them? We have them for both branches of the work, selling either red or blue, for either society or school, at 1 cent each in any quantity.

A friend induced us to sell him a book for about the cost, then sent us a local check for the amount, less than one dollar, so that in helping him we worsted ourselves. Do not send us local checks, but if you do, add 15 cents for collection.

Have you seen our "Attendance and Offering Card," by which the children are induced to come on time, and to make their offerings for the Master? They are 1 cent each and will triple the offerings in any school. Samples sent.

Our "Birthday Banks" are really handsome glass globes on which the margin is very small, but which we carry for the good of the schools; selling them at 35 and 50 cents and $1.35, postpaid, we will guarantee that you can get nothing nicer for the money from any publishing house.

We have had to make another shipment of "The Christian Worker's Bible and Christian Worker's Testament," but will be well stocked before these notes are read, and we can fill your order or give you any information.

Examine our vacation books in this column, for they are the rarest bargains we ever offered for the summer reading and we shall be glad to have our patrons take advantage of it.

"The Gospel of Matthew," by Peloubet, was put on the market to sell at $1.25, the author having arranged to write a commentary on the entire New Testament, and for teachers, too; but by some hitch, the work for the time being was discontinued, and the present book is offered you, postpaid, for 50 cents, making it worth your while to have it if only for reference.

"Do you keep 'The Christian Worker'?" inquires a friend from Brooklyn. No, we do not, it is too good a book to keep, but we are sending them out at 75 cents each and no one has ever complained of not getting the worth of his or her money. It is good for young ministers, or older ones, it is good for elders and deacons to have with them, and it is good for any one wishing information on the church and its organization, equipment, service and work. Any consecrated Christian is helped by it.

The boys and girls will soon be off for the summer, and will want some good reading to take along. We have "The Young Buglers," "By Pike and Dike," "The Young Midshipman" and "Through the Fray," also "The Bravest of the Brave," and such like books reduced from 75 to 35 cents. If the girls wish something special, we have "Six to Sixteen" and "Six Little Princes," and "Book of Golden Deeds," also "Wild Kitty" and "Our Bessie" and "Four Little Mischiefs" and "Esther," reduced from 75 to 35 cents.

For older folks: "If I Were King" and "The Resurrection," also "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Virginians," also "Gordon Keith" and "In the Palace of the King," also "The Right of Way" and "Captain Ravenshaw." All of the above are $1.50 books, selling at 60 cents, postpaid. Our stock is complete.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events.

The Peace Conference. The retirement of Muravieff from the Russian delegation to the peace conference and the appointment of M. Witte in his place, is the removal of a good man to make way for a better one. Muravieff is a staunch conservative, but an advocate of peace, and he would doubtless have discharged the important duties of the position with ability and good results. Witte is the leader of the radical party in the government, and, while his work is less likely to command the approval of the ultra-conservative bureaucratic element, he can be safely trusted to safeguard the real interests of his country. Just at present, it is far more important that Russia's representatives make good terms with the enemy and restore peace and set the government's feet upon the path of progress, than that they shall be popular with the grand dukes. Witte is to be president of the Russian peace committee. He has been clothed with plenary powers for the negotiation of a treaty of peace. The original intention to have merely an informal conference to determine whether it would be possible for the two belligerents to find common ground has been abandoned in favor of the plan of holding a formal conference between authorized representatives, with a view to actually finding this common ground and making it the basis for a treaty of peace. It has been decided that the peace commissioners shall meet at Portsmouth, N. H., when the hot weather forces them to leave Washington. The navy yard at Portsmouth will afford facilities for the meeting.

The War Continuing. Japan seems completely indifferent to the suggestion that there be an armistice pending the negotiations of the peace commissioners. President Roosevelt's suggestion to that effect was promptly, though guardedly, approved by Russia ten days or more ago, but Japan has not yet replied to the note. The developments in the field indicate the probable reason for this delay. Within the past few days the Japanese forces have taken possession of the Island of Sakhalin and have apparently made their occupancy complete and permanent. Thus, for the first time in the present war, there has been an actual seizure of territory which is properly Russian. The Island of Sakhalin is upwards of six hundred miles in length and extends north from the chain of islands which constitutes the Japanese archipelago, reaching almost to the coast of Siberia. It is properly one of the Japanese islands and was the property of Japan until its seizure by Russia about forty years ago. It is thinly populated, as are all the northern islands of the Japanese group, and it is not known to have resources of any great value, but the Russians considered it worth stealing, and it must be sweet revenge to the Japanese to get it back by conquest. It is not improbable that Japan was anxious to win back this island before there should be any cessation of hostilities and the retention of this island is very likely to be one of the points which Japan will insist upon in the peace negotiations.

The war in Russia is also continuing. The prefect of police for Moscow was assassinated last week and there were further outbreaks of insubordination and disaffection in the army.

The Mutiny Subsides. The mutiny of the Kniaz Potemkin is at an end. After terrorizing several Black Sea cities and compelling the fleet which was sent to capture it, to retire for fear the contagion of mutiny would catch the whole fleet; after issuing a manifesto formally declaring war on Russia and virtually asserting independence as a floating republic, at the same time magnanimously announcing that it would make no attack upon neutral shipping; after compelling one port to supply it with provisions under threat of bombardment, and helping itself plentifully to coal from another—after all of these and many other incidents, the mutinous mariners surrendered themselves and their ship to the officials of a Roumanian port on condition that they be conveyed to the frontier and allowed to make their escape. And so it was done. They were treated like simple deserters from the navy and were not extradited to Russia. It was reported that Russia would protest vigorously against the lenient treatment, for the crew had murder and robbery as well as desertion charged against it, and would ask for the extradition of the criminals, but it is not improbable that the Russian authorities were privately pleased with the arrangement which took the troublesome parties out of the way, restored to the depleted navy one of the best ships it has left, removed the scandal and disgrace of a safe and successful defiance of the imperial power, and saved the government the trouble and risk of punishing the culprits if they had been caught. It would have been very embarrassing for the government to have been forced to grant amnesty to the mutineers in order to get the vessel back uninjured and prevent the revolt from spreading. The settlement by way of Roumania amounts to the same thing, and saves the government's dignity. Of course the mutiny was a foregone failure, even when it was most troublesome to the authorities and seemed most successful. It stood for no principle, had no sane following, and could have no possible issue except in collapse. The only question was how much time would elapse and how much damage would be done before the collapse came. The inability or unwillingness of the Black Sea fleet to put down the rebellion is a mystery unless we accept the explanation that the crews were in sympathy with the mutineers. The general belief that this was the case has doubtless already done much to weaken the awe and fear which the government inspired, and to make the revolutionary element feel that the time has almost come when revolution may be undertaken with impunity.

The Cotton Reports. The Department of Agriculture has been fairly free from scandal. As the result of investigations recently set on foot, it has been found that the cotton crop estimates and reports collected by the bureau of statistics for the Department of Agriculture have been leaking out to favored brokers in advance of their publication. It is not yet clear that the reports have actually been doctored to make them more useful to bull or bear operations on the stock market, but by the giving out of advance information, for a consideration, government employes have been diverting the machinery of the department to the special use and service of favored cotton gamblers. Assistant Statistician Holmes has already been dismissed from the service and President Roosevelt has instructed the department of justice to begin criminal proceedings against him. As might have been expected, some respectable people are very indignant.

T. H. Price, cotton broker, who is accused of having bribed Holmes to betray the secrets of the department, denies his connection with the matter and threatens a libel suit against the Secretary of Agriculture. It is to be hoped that he will make good his threat. The secretary shows no signs of alarm and could probably stand it, and it is quite probable that a trial in court would disclose some things which a departmental investigation will fail to reach. The incident affords a good opportunity for the department to reconsider the matter of these reports and estimates. A large amount of money in the aggregate is spent in maintaining the system by which the information contained in these estimates is collected. This information, together with the estimates based upon it, must be of value to the cotton brokers who are dealing in cotton futures, for they are the ones who have conspired to obtain it by foul means. But as to its value for the public, the farmer, the legitimate dealer or the consumer of the commodities in question, there is room for doubt. It is not a question which we would feel like settling with a stroke of the pen, for there are many considerations involved upon which only expert opinion has any value. But while the subject is up, it is to be hoped that the matter will be seriously examined by those who are qualified to pass upon it.

Chauncey Depew.

Chauncey Depew has resigned his position as counsel for the Equitable and has also resigned from the directorate. He left these resignations behind him when he went to Europe not long ago. He says now that he is tired of the Equitable and its troubles and he refuses to talk about them. Senator Depew's resignations were announced almost simultaneously with the publication of some interesting facts about the Depew Improvement Company, with which he is connected. This company, it appears, borrowed $250,000 from the Equitable Life Insurance Society secured by property which, when it was taken in under foreclosure, turned out to be worth only $50,000. Mr. Depew was counsel for the Society at the time and as a member of the board of directors voted for the loan by which his own company was to gain and the Society was to lose. How much he knew about the matter of course we cannot say, but it is this sort of thing—officials of the Society voting to lend the Society's money to themselves on bad security, and the like—that has brought the Equitable into those troubles which Senator Depew is, quite naturally, tired of hearing about. Mr. Depew has cut quite a large figure in the public eye for many years. He has been President of the New York Central railroad, prominently identified with many large business enterprises, famous as an exponent of the art of post-prandial oratory, delighting to pose and be posed as a Yale man and a member of the corporation of that university, a political leader and a member of the United States Senate. But with all his reputation, the impression has gotten pretty common, in recent years, that Mr. Depew is not as big as he has been supposed to be. He has been doing a great deal of business, both social and political, on very small capital. Of course it does take a certain kind of ability in no small degree to do that thing, but it is just as well to distinguish between the real ability which constitutes greatness and the ability to get on without that sort and make people think you have it. We hope that Mr. Depew will be able to show that he was not at fault in this "Depew Improvement Company" business as much as appears on the surface. But however that may be, the disclosure of his evident complacent attitude towards the regime of plunder in the Equitable will contribute something toward shattering the fragments of the myth of the great Chauncey Depew.

Secretary Bonaparte.

The new Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte, has convictions on the subject of railroad passes and public officials. He has returned the passes which have been sent to him since he accepted office, stating that he did not think a public official could with propriety accept favors of this sort. At the recent Christian Endeavor convention at Baltimore, Mr. Bonaparte delivered an address in which he spoke of the evils of excessive devotion to party and political corruption and traced a connection between them. His own public and private career has been a continuous exhortation on both of these points.

Scotty.

Scotty has come and gone. He came quickly, and his going was not long delayed. If he had gone sooner, nobody would have minded. Scotty, the Crœsus of Funeral Mountain, Death Valley, represented himself as a miner of great and sudden wealth with a consuming passion for speed. He did not care very much where he went, if only he got there in a hurry. He came into Chicago the other day on a special train which had covered the distance from Los Angeles to Chicago, which is 2,244 miles, in 44 hours and 56 minutes. That much of the story of Scotty is history—that he actually traveled two-thirds across the continent at an average speed of fifty miles an hour, stops included. The rest of his story appears to be fake, and Scotty has about lost his character as millionaire, and turned out to be somebody who was employed by the railroad to impersonate a speed-gluttonous Crœsus for the sake of the advertising which would accrue to the road by the gratification of his supposed desire and the publicity which it would receive. If this was the case, it was rather a stupid piece of advertising. It does a railroad little good to show the public how fast it can send a train. The public is interested in how fast it does send the ordinary trains which the public rides on. The old sixty-hour schedule, which this same railroad still maintains between Chicago and Los Angeles, does not seem quite so satisfactory to the speed-hungry people who are not Crœsuses, as it did before Scotty's stunt. However mythical Scotty's gold mines may be, there is no doubt but that he represents a good many of us, with our insane desire to go always faster and faster—not because our time is really so tremendously valuable, but because we want to go faster than we used to go. It might be worth while for us to ponder upon the exploits and weaknesses of Scotty. He is worth more as a parable than as an advertisement.

The Omniscient Graduate.

Again the commencement season has come and gone, and again we have harvested the crop of very familiar jests based upon the supposed conceit of knowledge which is popularly attributed to the recent graduate. As a matter of fact, the new graduate, if his teachers are people of any training, and have dealt with him even half fairly, is usually quite a modest creature and wholly unlike the all-wise individual pictured in the comic papers. And yet, one must of course admit that the development of culture and wisdom and experience is marked by the increase of modesty as to one's attainments, and it would scarcely be fair to expect the new graduate to have attained the maximum. The following clever verses, therefore, which appeared originally in the Louisville Herald, are worth recording to mark the close of the commencement season for this year:

The Gradual Graduate.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

He strides upon the brilliant stage,
  Bows lightly to the loud applause,
And, with the wisdom of a sage,
  Declaims "The Cosmos and Its Cause."

HIGH SCHOOL.

Again the hero of a night,
  His head is high, his voice is sure;
He squarely looks across the light
  And speaks "Our Country and Its Cure."

COLLEGE.

Now, with the right to sign "A. B.,"
  But hardly with his spirit less,
He grasps his signed and sealed degree,
  And reads "The Threshold of Success."

POST-GRADUATE.

Prepared with all the schools may teach,
  He figures at a public dinner,
And gives a careful little speech
  Upon "The Chance of a Beginner."

LIFE.

The years roll by. He wins his way
  Hard through the thick of modern strife,
And haltingly puts down some day
  "Thoughts on the A B C's of Life."

DEATH.

His honors crown his weary brow;
  He lives life to the fullest scope;
Gently he makes his final bow,
  And breathes his theme, "A Humble Hope"!

A Great Church Hymnal.*

The publication of a church hymnal is more than a mere literary event. Prepared and published under the supervision of representative men as this hymnal has been, it marks a stage of religious progress and of spiritual development of the people it represents. There cannot be a truer index to the spiritual life and aspirations of a religious people than the hymn-book which has been prepared, as above stated, for use in private and public worship. The reality and character of one's religious life are certainly most truly indicated in the forms of expression used in his acts of worship. The same thing is true of a religious body. Hence, we would rather examine a representative church hymnal of any religious body to ascertain the real quality of its religious life than to read its creed or a volume of its theology.

The Disciples of Christ have had a series of hymnals from the beginning of their history which have served their needs in the different stages of their religious growth, and which have been very creditable, both in the character of the music and of the poetry employed. For some time, however, there has been a growing demand for a more elaborate hymnal adapted to all the uses of public and private worship, embodying the standard music of the church universal, selections for responsive readings, and suggestive orders for public worship and forms for the observance of the ordinances. For a number of years the Christian Publishing Company has had in mind the publication of such a hymnal. A few years ago an arrangement was effected between that company and the Hackleman Music Company, of Indianapolis, by which they should co-operate in the bringing out of such a book. William E. M. Hackleman was selected as the editor-in chief and a large committee of representative brethren, known as the Twentieth Century Hymnal Committee, was selected to assist him in this work. Back of these there was a larger advisory committee of well known brethren whose good judgment and musical taste fitted them to render valuable service. These committees and the editor-in-chief have taken abundant time to accomplish the responsible task which had been assigned them, and their completed work is now before us.

We do not hesitate to call the "Gloria in Excelsis," as the book has been named, a great church hymnal. In the first place, it is large enough in volume to present a dignified appearance, and to indicate that the idea of worship has come to something like a proper appreciation in the church which uses it. Then, the mechanical feature of the book is all that could be desired. In the paper, size and character of type, clearness of print, arrangement of matter, completeness of index, classification of subjects, and style of binding, the hymnal is up to the highest standard of book-making. Here is a hymnal which any member of the church will be glad to place in the hands of a religious visitor as representing our conception of church music and of public worship.

But it is when we come to examine minutely the excellent selections of scripture and the responsive scripture readings arranged in such admirable manner as to make them really responsive readings, and note the high character of the music and the fulness of selections under the various topics, that one feels the deepest satisfaction. No thoughtful, devout soul can turn the beautiful pages of this hymnal, noting the music and the words, without feeling the kindling of the devotional spirit, and allowing his adoration to flow upward to God through these lofty sentiments.

We note with pleasure not only the great number of standard hymns and tunes which have come down to us out of the past, sanctified by long usage, but the presence also of a large number of those hymns, more modern, but some of which have been dropped out of our recent hymnology, for the restoration of which we can but feel grateful. We hesitate to mention any of these by name lest the list should be longer than our space would permit. There is a magnificent array of hymns of "Praise to Christ," and also under the topic, "The Holy Spirit; the Comforter." And then the "Holy Scriptures" are duly magnified, as also is "The Gospel of Atonement." Hymns appropriate to baptism and the Lord's supper are ample in variety and most satisfying in their character. In the miscellaneous department there are songs for every season and for every possible occasion. Indeed, it would seem that every mood and aspiration of the devout soul may here find expression. We are glad to notice, too, a good selection of chants, which are too little used in our church music. Some of the choicest selections of scripture are presented in this recitative form, which cannot fail, when well rendered, to more deeply impress themselves upon the minds and hearts of worshippers. In a word, it is entirely within the limits of truth to say that this is the most complete church hymnal, by far, that we have ever published, and that there is nothing superior to it in hymnology, so far as we know, and we have taken pains to examine the splendid hymnals of the leading religious bodies. For the use of our own churches, there is, of course, no other hymnal that is its equal.

We cannot close this article without a word concerning the use of a hymnal like this. Churches should supply themselves with a sufficient number of copies to permit each worshiper to have a copy. The hymns, as a rule, should be read and attention called frequently to the sentiment. Such a hymnal should be handled carefully, and any marking, dog-earing, turning backs together, or defacing of it, is a desecration which ought not to be tolerated. They should be taken up and distributed by the sexton or janitor, with diligent and reverent care. Each Christian family should have at least one copy in the home, where the sacred poetry can be read and studied, and the music sung. The book is well adapted to private devotions as well as to public worship. The writer has spent a number of quiet mornings recently, in feasting his soul upon these spiritual sentiments of the devout men of the church, and in singing to himself these lofty breathings of the Spirit, making melody in his heart to the Lord.

We feel devoutly thankful for the timely advent of this hymnal, and we most heartily commend it to all the churches and to all the families among us, as a noble vehicle of worship and as a choice means of spiritual development.

The Fulness of Christ.

This is the keynote of the Colossian letter. Even at that early date there were the beginnings of those offshoots or substitutes of philosophy and of science falsely so called which tended to sap the life of the church and to detract from the glory of Christ. Especially had gnosticism—a combination of oriental theology and Greek philosophy with the doctrine of Christianity—begun to exert a baneful influence on the church. It taught a series of successive emanations from the deity called Eons of which Christ was only one. In the Colossian letter and in some of the other of Paul's writings he has this error in view and seeks to meet it by the exaltation of Christ to his rightful place as the full manifestation of God to men. "For it was the good pleasure of the Father that in him should all the fulness dwell." He labors "to present every man perfect in Christ," and to teach men "the mystery of God, even Christ, in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge hidden."

For this purpose the apostle warns the brethren, "lest there shall be any one that maketh spoil of you, through his philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ; for in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and in him ye are made full, who is the head of all principality and power." What then was the necessity for these Colossian Christians to be seeking some good which they desired elsewhere than in Christ? It was a practical repudiation of Christ to be turning to other systems for something to satisfy their deeper and higher needs.

*"Gloria in Excelsis," A Collection of Scripture Readings, Standard Hymns and Tunes, and Spiritual Songs; For worship in the Church and Home. Edited by the Twentieth Century Hymnal Committee, William E. M. Hackleman, Editor-in-chief. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo.

It seems to us that there is great need to-day for emphasizing this same truth—the fulness and adequacy of Christ to meet all the manifold needs of our human nature. Theosophy, "Christian Science," Spiritualism, Dowieism and various other forms of philosophy, occult or crude, are drawing away believers from Christ to seek in them respectively some fancied good which they have failed, so they claim, to find in Christianity pure and simple. The teachers and defenders of Christianity to-day can only meet these old errors appearing under new names by showing that Christ represents the fulness of God, and that in him we are complete, lacking nothing. The church, too, must stand for this wide and comprehensive mission of Christ. Not otherwise can we successfully meet the claims of these modern devices and false philosophies of men.

As a diseased and unhealthy tree sends forth a cluster of sprouts from its roots to furnish an outlet for the new life which the decadent trunk is unable to accommodate, so it is an abnormal condition of the church, with its divisions, its carnality, and its worldliness, together with a partial and one-sided view of its mission in the world, that has proved the occasion for the rise and growth of these modern "fads" which are coming to be regarded by many as a substitute for Christianity. Let the church resume its rightful relation to Christ, as the agent to execute his will and the vehicle for communicating his life to men and ministering to their manifold needs, and these modern substitutes for Christianity will wither and die of inanition. There is something true and good in almost all these systems, for that which is wholly false cannot attract good people. Let the church frankly recognize all the good there is in them, but show by its teaching and its fruits that this same truth and good can be found in Christ and in fellowship with his church.

Notes and Comments.

Talk about the dead-line! The archbishop of York has just entered his eightieth year and he wields a greater influence than any preacher in America.

A deacon of our Tasso tabernacle church in London has just been for the second time committed to prison for refusing to pay thirty-eight cents, the sectarian portion of the education rate. He was sentenced to fourteen days. Among the defaulters summoned were Revs. Thomas Spurgeon and F. B. Meyer. Thus it is that the nonconformists are making their protests against the state's sectarian education.

On the other hand by the king himself the Free Churchmen are receiving more recognition than formerly. Dr. Horton, a leading Congregationalist, and the ex-President of the Baptist Union were invited to a royal garden party the other day and R. J. Campbell was among those invited to the state banquet given to the King of Spain. Some day the British clergy and their conservative followers may see that their attitude has in it much of the harmfulness of the reactionaryism of the Russian hierarchy.

The Watchman reports an illustration of church union. The Baptist and the Free Baptist churches in Beaver Harbour, New Brunswick, united in special evangelistic services. Christians were revived and souls converted. Then at separate business meetings the churches voted unanimously to unite. The Baptists had a pastor and the Free Baptists had none, so the two churches met together as one, unanimously adopted the necessary action for starting off as one church, voted to call the Baptist pastor and to worship in the Free Baptist house of worship, "and the thing was done," adds our contemporary. Now if to avoid any question as to which is the better name—we are not told which was adopted—Baptist or Free Baptist, the new church simply insisted on all converts being at once immersed and adopted the simple name Christian or Disciple, how easy it would be to enlarge the membership! Some of us would feel almost like moving to Beaver Harbour just to show what a simple matter Christian union is when the Christian spirit is predominant.

Current Religious Thought.

Bishop Oliver C. Sabin, who has risen into prominence as a Christian Science teacher, has been explaining to the uninitiated some of the mysteries of that modern cult. In one of his lectures before "the Evangelical Christian Science church" of Washington, D. C., he undertakes to explain that mystery concerning the non-reality of pain and wickedness. It will be edifying to our readers, no doubt, to hear his explanation. He says:

> What we mean by reality is permanency. Take a fire and put it into a grate; put some wood in a grate and build a fire under it and start it. Now that fire is burning that wood and it looks real, doesn't it? It is, for the instant, a real entity, but you let that fire alone and what becomes of it? It will burn up that wood and go out, just as though there never was any fire there. Now, where did the fire go? If it is real where did it go? If you want to put it out in another way you can put a bucket of water on it and every particle of it is gone, instantaneously. Now, where did it go, if it was real? Now, don't you see, it is not real? It was for the instant. It is just like that with the reality of pain, the reality of sickness. If you do not destroy the reality of pain and sickness, use the waters of truth, deluge it and destroy it, it will do as the fire did with the wood, it will burn it up and go out. You take a person with a burning fever, and it looks real, doesn't it? It is real enough to kill a person, so-called—I am talking from the material thought—but if you destroy it with the waters of truth, it is gone.

Thus is profundity sacrificed in the interest of clearness. After all, then, this whole hue and cry about pain and sickness not being real simply amounts to a misuse of terms. "What we mean by reality," the bishop says, "is permanency." Why not say so, then? Nobody believes that pain or sickness is permanent. Many things are real which are temporal. "The things which are seen are temporal," says Paul, but he does not deny their reality because they are temporary. What right has Christian Science to put an entirely new meaning into a word and use it in that meaning?

But Bishop Sabin has done something far more wonderful than to explain the non-reality of pain. He has dispersed a storm-cloud by "treating" it. This is what he says about it in one of his Wednesday evening lectures as reported in the Washington News Letter:

> Last Sunday a week ago, a very black cloud appeared over in the west. My grandson was out taking a ride on the cars, and this black cloud appeared and I thought it looked pretty black for the little fellow to be out in, and I thought I would treat the cloud; and then the thought struck me, I cannot treat the cloud just for my grandson, that would not be loving my neighbor as myself, so I treated that the cloud could not hurt anybody in Washington, or any house in Washington, and God would disperse the cloud. I commanded it in the name of Jesus Christ to be still and disperse, and it was but a minute or two until it commenced to lighten up and it did not hurt anybody or anything.

What are we to think of that in the blazing light of our boasted twentieth century civilization and in the capital of one of the most enlightened nations of earth? It is well that our readers who do not have access to Christian Science literature should know the heights of absurdity, not to say of blasphemy, to which this modern craze has grown. One can imagine what confusion might be brought about in God's universe by one "healer" treating a storm-cloud for dispersion while another should be treating the same cloud for rain! It is comforting to know that God has not abdicated nor annulled natural laws in the interests of Christian Science.

The editor of The Congregationalist invites his readers to open their New Testaments these midsummer days and make a fresh study of Jesus' thoughts with reference to money. How much time and energy did he think men ought to give to the pursuit of wealth; what methods of money-making did he consider permissible; what objective should those who seek wealth have in view; what was his law with reference to the distribution of wealth?

Editor's Easy Chair.

Pentwater Musings.

The above title signifies a change of base. Our last weeks at Macatawa Park were very delightful. The many friends we have there made it very difficult for us to leave there. For fifteen summers it has been to us a charming, restful place, with which Nature has been prodigal in the bestowment of her gifts. But the reasons for changing that place for a more northerly resort were, in our case, decisive. It by no means follows that they would be decisive for others. Indeed, we are sure that one of the chief reasons for our change will make the place more desirable with many, perhaps most, others. On Tuesday last, our last day in Macatawa for the season, we were the guests of Mrs. Holland, Mrs. Crittenden, and their mother, Mrs. Rogers, for dinner, and received many marks of kindness from them as we had many years ago from the revered father and husband, J. K. Rogers, than whom Missouri has never had a stauncher Disciple, nor a worthier citizen. It was such friends as these, together with the Hallacks, the Haleys, the Joneses, the Earls, the Muckleys, the Combs (who are not in their cottage this season), and many others with whom our associations have been very pleasant and intimate for many years, that made it difficult for us to leave the place. Why then did we leave? Not that we loved Macatawa less, but Pentwater more.

At the beach meeting on the last Lord's day evening at Macatawa, we made a reminiscent talk of the place as we had first known it, and, referring to the question which so many had asked, as to why we were leaving, we gave the following fact as perhaps the chief reason: When the Editor was a boy of about ten years of age his father moved with his family to a new and sparsely settled region of Missouri to establish a new home in that new country. Neighbors were remote and deer and wild turkeys abounded in the land. On off-days when we did not have to work on the farm we spent the time in exploring the country round about. In this way, we suppose, the pioneering germ was planted in our system, for we have always had a fondness for pioneer work. The hills and ravines about Pentwater, in what is now designated as "Garrison Park," are a sort of terra incognita. Ours is the only cottage in this particular forty acre plot of wild woods. This, we suppose, is one reason for the change. Macatawa Park has become too populous for our idea of a summer resting-place. In this, we are aware, our taste differs from that of others. Many would prefer Macatawa Park now, over what it was when we first knew it fifteen years ago. There are more people, finer houses, more luxuries, and there is more going on. "For people who like that sort of thing," as Lincoln would say, "that is about the thing they would like." And many do like it, and the place will continue to grow. Nothing that we have ever said in praise of Macatawa Park, as a resort, do we care to cancel. If there have been some undesirable things in the management, it is in the power of the cottagers to remedy these by concerted action. Long may that place prosper as a resort for those who seek rest and recreation under moral conditions and with religious associations! But Nature has been no less prodigal with Pentwater, and it is virgin soil for resorters to make of it what they will.

One of the features of Macatawa Park which we shall miss here until our community is increased, is the religious service on Lord's day, by the cottagers. That feature has always served to bind the people of Macatawa more closely together and to make them realize their unity. On the last two Lord's days we were there the services were very interesting. On one of these the sermon was preached by Evangelist Bennett, who, after the sermon, conducted a baptismal service at the lake just at the spot where our beach meetings have been held for so many years. A man and his wife who came from a town in Indiana, where Brother Bennett had been holding a meeting, made the good confession while standing on the sands at the beach, and thereby placed their feet on the Rock of Ages. It was an impressive scene as they were led out into the clear waters of the lake in the presence of a large company of people, to be buried with their Lord in baptism. It was, perhaps, the first time in the history of Macatawa Park that such a scene had been witnessed. Bro. A. B. Jones, of Liberty, Mo., preached on the last Lord's day a sermon which his large audience thoroughly enjoyed. Brother Jones is something of an invalid at home, but at Macatawa Park he seems to forget that fact and takes his share of the burden of preaching. It must necessarily be a long time before there can be established in our resort here at Pentwater a community and a religious service and associations that will equal those of Macatawa, but the possibilities here are all that could be desired and the friends are coming. Alfred Matthews and family, of St. Louis, who live just across the street from us there, came up on the same train with us here, and are stopping at the Club House, just adjoining our resort. They are delighted with the place. Dr. W. T. Moore and wife, of Columbia, Mo., have engaged a room at the Club House here for August; Brother Brandt and family, of St. Louis, are expected here soon. It will not be long, therefore, until there will be enough of us here to prevent us from being lonesome, even though we be good!

If the readers of the Easy Chair could see the scene spread out before us as we write this paragraph, they would need no further argument to convince them of the beauty of this place. The Easy Chair just now is located on one of the green hills, one hundred feet above the level of Lake Michigan and about three hundred yards from the lake, with the intervening space below us filled with many varieties of trees, whose green tops are waving beneath us. The tall pines, the larger hemlock, the cedar, the young oaks, and how many other species we know not, furnish a green foreground, while Lake Michigan glimmers and flashes far out toward the distant horizon. Immediately beneath where we write is the first cottage going up on these grounds, "The Pioneer," and the sound of the hammer and the saw is heard, as the house is yet unfinished. A cottage located where we are sitting would overlook "The Pioneer," which stands near the lake front in a grove of hemlocks and pines, and would command a wide view of the lake and of the surrounding country. Nature has thrown up these hills in amphitheatre style, tier above tier, thus affording opportunity for each cottager to obtain a view of the lake unobstructed by his neighbor in the forefront. The weather to-day is of the ideal type, and sunshine and breeze and blue sky and dimpled lake seem to unite to make life seem worth living. Ungrateful must be the heart that does not respond in gratitude to the gracious hand that provides all these blessings by which the good Father would woo us from things base and unworthy to the higher and nobler things of life.

Children.

Sunbeams from above!
From heaven you have come
To this dark world of man,
To tell us that the sun still shines,
And cheer our lives again.

Bits of heaven's blue!
Fallen to earth's estate,
As messengers of love;
Your message—that the sky is bright,
Though clouds loom dark above.

Angels come from God!
In your hands have you brought
The key to Youth's bright door,
A key of precious gold—
"Rejoice forevermore."

A Notable Sign of the Times

The Church of the Future

By William Durban

One of the most popular of British Congregationalist ministers is Dr. John Hunter, whose present sphere of labor is Trinity church, Glasgow. This cultured preacher belongs to the small but steadily growing Broad Church section of his great denomination. He ministered for many years in York with great popularity, then went north to Glasgow, and was a few years afterwards induced to settle in London. Here his pastorate was brief, as his return to Scotland was continually agitated for and took place last year. But London longs frequently to see and hear this thoughtful and original preacher in its pulpits, and Dr. Hunter is very often called up to the metropolis for special occasions. He is noted for his quiet and polished eloquence, his deep spirituality, his fearless and independent style of speech, his profound idealism as a theologian, and his simple diction. Although he is not to be classed among the sensational orators who attract immense crowds, he is everywhere sought after by cultured people. Such a man is sure to be recognized as one of the leaders of the thought of the age. Dr. Hunter is about to preach a course of sermons in London during six Sundays, at Bechstein Hall.

Dr. Hunter's New Book.

A little volume just published lies on my table. It is from the pen of Dr. Hunter and is entitled, "The Coming Church, a Plea for a Church Simply Christian." The book was expected to appear, and many of us have been eagerly looking for it, for it is the expansion of an address first delivered to the Theological Society of the University of Glasgow, and afterwards to the English Churchmen's Union. That address made a great sensation, especially as Dr. Hunter has been preaching in the same line to various congregations in Glasgow, Nottingham, and London. The book is likely to increase the sensation. It is an epoch-making production. It abounds in passages any one of which is calculated to administer a severe shock to Christian people who cherish a sectarian or even a denominational spirit. I cannot do better than give a few extracts from various portions.

"One of the characteristic tendencies of our religious times, that represented by the phrase, 'Back to Jesus,' indicates, I believe, the best and most direct way out of not a few of our ecclesiastical troubles and confusions. A return to 'the simplicity that is toward Christ,' to 'the truth as it is in Jesus,' would, if honestly and earnestly attempted, put an end to much sectarian strife by abolishing that upon which sectarianism rests, bring about a reformation such as has never been known in the history of our religion, and be the signal for a new and wonderful advance. The cry 'Back to Jesus' is not one of retrogression. It is the symbol of a going back which is in reality a going forward. It means back to the simplicity of first principles. The teaching of Jesus is the standard by which everything claiming the Christian name ought to be judged. It is only historically that it can be said to belong to the past. It is still an unexhausted and unrealized ideal. The principles of Jesus are the principles of spiritual freedom and progress."

An Unrealized Ideal.

Dr. Hunter does full justice to the Protestant Reformation, but in his keen and discriminating style proceeds to show how it was marred and minimized by the terrible tendency among Protestants to endless divisions. This courageous Congregationalist minister draws up what is in reality a formidable indictment of Congregationalism as a sectarian institution. In one of his footnotes he writes thus:

"The reader must not confound the old independency with the new congregationalism which seeks to be a large and aggressive denomination. The writer has always maintained that the denominational idea has no place in independency, and prefers to describe his own ecclesiastical position as that of an independent Christian minister —in sympathy more or less with churches of every name, but formally related to none."

Dr. Hunter shows that the early independents were among the first to bear witness against the finality which was the avowed principle of the Reformed churches. The last charge of John Robinson, of Leyden, the father of English independency, to the members of his church on the eve of their emigration, in 1620, to the new world, scattered the first seed of an advancing Protestantism. In it he declared that the Reformed churches of his day were in a miserably backward condition. The Lutherans, he said, were where Luther had left them, and the Calvinists had stuck fast at the place to which they had been led by Calvin. The Free churches at the beginning in their loyalty to Christ alone felt that they must be at once both stable and progressive. Dr. Hunter's contention is that in order to find the true church of Christ we must pursue the ideal more than the historic track. He notes certain signs of the times which point to the coming realization of the true church ideal. Says he:

"If the differences are no longer real and important, there is neither reason nor cause for continued separation. Separation has now become schism . . . . Organized Christianity is on the eve of a reformation more extensive, more profound and spiritual than that of the sixteenth century. Members of different religious communions are drawing together and feeling as never before that they are no longer strangers and exiles, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. We are within sight of the end of all kinds of denominationalism. It is getting to be more and more difficult to run a denominational paper."

The Knell of Denominationalism.

In the concluding pages of his book Dr. Hunter says: "The church we need, I repeat, is a church that stands for the simplicity and sufficiency of the religion of Jesus Christ, calling itself by no name but one. Every such name as Episcopal, Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, Baptist, Unitarian, is a derogation. . . . . Denominationalism has done about all the good work it can do. It has borne witness; let it now fade and pass away. Calvinism and Arminianism represent extinct disputes. . . . . In the recognition of the incarnation of God in the life of Christ and in the life of Christian humanity, we are finding a faith which rises above the lines of ancient controversy and leaves room for the broadest churchmanship. The best men in all the churches do not want to wear theological and sectarian labels. They are seeking to find a common basis of union, to come together under some large Christian confession, and to live with one another as becometh disciples of Christ. Many of them will be devoutly thankful when even Protestantism will disappear in the glorious reality of a church right worthy to be called 'The Holy Catholic Church.' That day may be far off, but we can labor and pray for its coming. The unity of the Spirit must work itself out in a body and be seen of men."

Wanted—Matron.

The Christian Orphans' Home, 915 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo., is in immediate need of a matron. We want an educated, warm-hearted, loving, Christian woman, who can be a kind mother to the children, and who can, at the same time, control the children and the employes with a firmness that will insure good discipline and good management in all departments. None other need apply.

We want also a good Christian man and wife to assist in the work of the Homes at Loveland, Col., East Aurora, N. Y., and the Orphans' Home at St. Louis, Mo. Address Mrs. M. V. Warren, Loveland, Col., Mrs. W. K. Tabor, East Aurora, N. Y., for their respective Homes, and for the Christian Orphans' Home, St. Louis, Mo., address, Mrs J. K. Hansbrough.

Personality in Education

By W. P. Aylsworth

In a time like ours when educational advantages are so largely linked with external equipments, such as laboratories and libraries, we are in danger of underestimating the chief power in education, viz., the personality of the teacher. The idea very generally prevails that educational institutions are to be almost wholly measured by the standard of external equipments of this sort. It would be flying into the face of established facts to underrate such advantages. Many lines of study can hardly be pursued without them, at least in modern ways. They wonderfully facilitate the work of the competent teacher. Yet, without discounting their value, we ought not to underrate that force in education which has gone before all these and which has inspired the grandest scholarship of other days. A great teacher is not a deft manipulator of implements nor a bookworm alone but, above all, an inspiring and impressive character. It is this, rather than the tools used in education, that gives stamp to schools of distinction. What Garfield said about Mark Hopkins, a president of Williams college, is true to the deepest philosophy of culture. To sit upon one end of a log with this great teacher on the other was to enjoy a nobler opportunity than could be offered at some great center in which the arrogance of learning is uppermost. In our own history Bethany college, in its early days, stands a shining example. Placed beside modern institutions with up-to-date equipment, it would be wholly outclassed. Yet what school of the modern days produces more marked results in real scholarship? There was a master spirit inspiring pupils and fellow-workers to the highest self development. A distinguished educator recently said, in an address at a university banquet, that the greatest college in Oxford university is one of the poorest in endowment and equipment, but richest in personality of its leadership.

Such a conclusion may be helpful in two ways. It serves to account for the unexpected good that often comes from Christian schools whose work cannot rank in the matter of equipment with better financed foundations. Such institutions may, at least, be endowed with noble, consecrated characters. From such halls frequently go young men and women who are able splendidly to compete with those from the best equipped centers. Let us not be ashamed of the work of our own schools, most of which rank in the former class.

Again, may it not be a mistake in employing teachers, to underestimate this element? Technical training is important, of course. But by all means let this excellence not lead us to underestimate the power of high personal example and leadership. Placing a premium upon this, let us surround such guides of youth with needed equipment for their highest usefulness.

An Endeavor for Millions[*]

By Francis E. Clark, D.D.

Christian Endeavor is nothing if not practical. It does not deal in glittering generalities, but seeks for actual results. Let us set before ourselves these great definite aims as we look forward to the beginning of a new and larger era:

A million new members brought into our societies.

A million people brought to church, or prayer-meeting, or Sunday-school.

A million young people brought into membership in the church of the living God.

A million dollars for missions at home and abroad, given through our denominational boards.

Here are four large, practical, definite, attainable endeavors, four efforts which will greatly promote the interest of the church throughout the world, four things which he would like to have us do.

Many denominations and organizations wisely utilize their great anniversaries by raising large funds for their important enterprises. Let us signalize the twenty-fifth year of the modern young people's movement by beginning a campaign, not only for dollars, but for millions of young men and women and boys and girls. Let me repeat:

A million new Christian Endeavorers.

A million new churchgoers.

A million new church members.

A million new dollars for denominational missions.

Do you say that these are large figures, that many societies are small and weak, in scattered communities, with few people to influence, and little money? I can only reply that we ought to strive for large things, for we are laborers together with him, and that, if each one does his little best, the aggregate will soon mount up into the millions.

Remember once more for our encouragement the record of the past. Over and over again has God surprised us, and rebuked our little faith by giving us more than we expected. When the increase campaign began, less than three years ago, it seemed impossible that in so short a time many of our states should add 10, 20 or 30 per cent to their number. But thousands of new societies have been the result, and the campaign is still going on with undiminished force. It has spread into every land, and Great Britain as well as America, Asia and Africa as well as Europe, have their increase campaigns, which are rapidly multiplying the number of our comrades and the value of their work; so why should we not expect, and within a reasonable time, too, to reach our million goals? Let us each contribute our small quota, and the work is done.

In the past years you have more than once allowed me to suggest a motto, which you have generously adopted as your own. Here is one which I ask you to take for this year as a source of inspiration and encouragement. It was given us first by that old warrior apostle Paul, who was always endeavoring, always achieving, always leaving past attainments behind, always pressing forward to new heights. For our twenty-fifth anniversary year he seems to have written these inspiring words:

"In one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel."

How exactly appropriate to Christian Endeavor! "I will strive to do whatever he would like to have me to do," we have all said a hundred times. The best translation of "endeavor" in many languages is "striving together." "Striving together" in Europe and Asia and Africa and America. "Striving together" in every continent and all the islands of the sea. "Striving together" for these millions which will mean so much for the advancement of the kingdom. "Striving together," Baptists and Methodists, Presbyterians and Disciples of Christ, Congregationalists and Lutherans and Episcopalians, but all striving for the faith of the gospel. "Striving together" to bring men to the sanctuary; "striving together" to bring men to Christ and into his church; "striving together" to raise money by which the gospel can be sent to the remotest part of our own and other lands; "striving together," though far apart; striving in our prayer-meetings, our committees, our unions, and our great conventions; always "in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel."

The Convention

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

The twenty-second Christian Endeavor convention which met in Baltimore July 5-10, was the "best yet." Being so near the Capital, it was necessarily great. Any mouldy top folks who had predicted the wane of Endeavor must have felt utterly disconsolate. The attendance, the program, the enthusiasm, the whole convention, from beginning to end, was a glorious surprise, even to the most hopeful of the friends of the cause. We had many surprises. It was a great festival of praise for one thing that can never fade from the memory of those who had the privilege of ascending the mountain and sharing in the high and holy fellowship of those five days. The meetings were well planned, the hall was large enough for the vast concourse to be comfortable, the city was unstinted in its hospitality, the speakers were among the best, the great multitude was reverent and thoroughly appreciative, and the music, oh, the music!—it was like that when the morning stars sang together—a foretaste of the song of Moses and the Lamb. Over 20,000 thronged to hear and thousands were turned from the doors. There was but one thing lacking to make this an ideal convention, and that was the absence of Dr. Clark. At his summer home, Pine Point, Me., the organizer and beloved leader was sick! Tender prayers were offered for him, and messages sent and received; but the face and form and words, so familiar to thousands, were sorely missed.

The trustees met and conducted the business, as usual, re-electing the old officers. Perhaps their most important action was that providing for the erection of a memorial home for world-wide Endeavorers, in Boston, New York or Washington. An average gift of twenty-five cents—one cent for each of the years of Christian Endeavor—is asked for this memorial to Dr. Clark, to show him the honor, love, and gratitude of Christendom, and provide permanent headquarters for the movement.

Secretary Vogt reported 66,772 societies; 49,339 in Canada and the United States and 17,433 in other lands. Religious bodies rank as follows: Presbyterian, Congregational, Disciples, Baptist, Cumberland Presbyterian, Methodist Protestant, Lutheran, Dutch Reformed, Methodist Episcopal and United Brethren. Net gain for the year, 2,014. Forty-six states received 10 per cent increase banners. The publishing department reported receipts, $66,000, and expenditures, $64,000, and $8,500 of this was contributed by the United Society for the work of organization and extension. Seattle, Kansas City, Los Angeles and Minneapolis invited the convention for 1907, but no decision was reached. Over 10,000 were present at the opening session and a great ovation was given to the governor and mayor of the city, and the greeting of President Roosevelt. As it was about the hour of Secretary Hay's funeral, the opening was a brief Hay memorial service. The late secretary's hymn, written for Washington '96, was sung:

Lord, from far-severed climes we come
To meet at last in thee, our home;
Thou, who hast been our guide and guard,
Be still our hope, our rich reward.

* * * * * *

Thou who art Light, shine on each soul!
Thou who art Truth, each mind control!
Open our eyes and make us see
The path which leads to heaven and thee.

The mammoth chorus of 2,500 rendered this and other hymns with great effectiveness. As Lanier said, it seemed indeed, "The world had bloomed again at Baltimore!"

The second meeting was "the International Festival of Praise," led by Rev. Carey Bonner, of London, England. This was one of the greatest services ever held at a C. E. convention. It was a glorious rendition of a sublime theme which was listened to by a vast multitude. It represented the praise of all nations for the gifts of the gospel. China's praise, India's, Africa's, as the praises of Great Britain and America, were all in native music. Africa's praise in "Turn Back Pharaoh's Army" and "We Shall Walk Through the Valley" was most effectively given. It was unique, and the most impressive and beautiful service of song ever given at one of these great conventions. It inaugurates a new era in C. E. assemblies. The Junior rally on Thursday afternoon was of the same order, only the children's choir numbered 1,500 singers. The day brought "showers of blessing." It was the wettest day in thirty-three years. Jones Falls—Baltimore's despair and yet Baltimore's savior in the great fire—overflowed. The city had its memorable flood of 1754 and then in 1786, and again in 1817, 1837 and 1868, and the cloudburst came once more for our C. E. hosts. Notwithstanding the great downpour, however, 12,000 people came to hear the children sing. It was a great Junior and Intermediate rally, full of enthusiasm and inspiring melody. Among the speakers was Miss Ellen Stone, whose trouble with the bandits came near causing international complications. The children sang the story of Christian Endeavor, concluding with a flag exercise which consisted of the "Star Spangled Banner," "Maryland, My Maryland," and the "Endeavor Flag Song." As the three choruses of 500 each rose up by a skillful use of caps and capes they were transformed into the three flags, and in singing the "Star Spangled Banner" the red, white and blue chorus swayed from side to side, giving a most realistic impression of a flag swaying in the breeze. Remembering the circumstances of the origin of the song in the convention city it had such an effect as could not be produced elsewhere.

Another somewhat spectacular session was the "Recognition Meeting." Flags were distributed to states and all societies bearing banners paraded the hall and were massed on the platform. "Voices from Across the Sea" presented an interesting feature—the missionaries in costume with the usual salutations in unknown tongue. State yells formed a startling innovation, the one from Los Angeles, for example:

We're it! We're it!
We're it, you bet.
We're going to get it.
And don't you fret,
The "Angel City" is next to Heaven;
We're for Los Angeles 1907.

There were some notable speeches. That of Governor Warfield was true to the ideal of the southern orator. Our Commissioner Macfarland, the real mayor of the capital city, scored a success on "Responsibility for Public Opinion." Dr. Matthews, a sort of live wire from Seattle, handled without gloves preachers and churches in discussing the pastor-evangelist. He claims to have added 1,700 to his church in three years. Dr. Gladden made a telling talk on "The Education of Conscience." Dr. John Duxbury, of England, recited the book of Job with great beauty and power. Secretary Bonaparte was the most disappointing speaker. Drs. Willett and Hillis failed us. The Disciples' rally was big and almost all the states were represented as far as Florida, Texas and California. The climax was in closing. John Willis Baer read Dr. Clark's message. It dealt in millions. "A million new members brought into our societies. A million people brought to church, or prayer-meeting, or Sunday-school. A million young people brought into membership in the church of the living God. A million dollars for missions at home and abroad given through our denominational boards." How does that strike you?

Our Washington societies were honored. Ninth street, Whitney avenue, and Vermont avenue were on the Cum Laude list. The work of the Vermont avenue society was particularly mentioned among a score out of the 66,000. The society has conducted Sunday evening services at Fort Myers, formed a Junior, organized a tennis club, and a class of 25 to study church history and doctrine; given $628 to benevolences, and joined three other Christian Endeavor societies in building a church. Its first president is a missionary in China. It has organized 32 other societies. Its members are preparing a volume which will be issued in September.

Prayer and Its Answer

By Cephas Shelburne

In this day of conventions, demonstrations congresses, when the world is "drunk with rapid transit," and "sick hurries and divided aims," we are forgetting God, and losing the inspiration and strength that comes from blessed communion and fellowship with our Father in heaven. There are so many other things that claim our attention, and so many objects in our eye, that we fail to think of God, and lose the vision of spiritual things; and with our great material prosperity we are robbing our own souls of the capacity to enjoy. Even in the church we are so busy working for God to day that I fear we have no time for communion with God; so busy talking to God about our affairs that we have no time to listen to God.

Prayer is communion, friendship, a nearness to God, and the inspiration, confidence, strength that we gain through the intermingling of our spirit with his. We are selfish, materialistic, so desirous of getting things—the literal, material things that we pray for—that we lose sight of the fellowship, the presence.

I think the majority of people who pray simply make a convenience of God. They use him as they would some well-to do friend: To better their condition, to get an invitation to some swell affair, a present on a birthday, a trip abroad, a good dinner, a ride in a fine carriage. That is about the way we treat God: Give me this thing and that, carry me safely through the day, further me on this journey, enable me to carry out this plan successfully, make me exceedingly prosperous, direct this deal, avert this sorrow, disaster, pull me through this spell of sickness—a convenience of God, but not one hour of friendship and abiding in his presence. Haven't you felt sometimes, when in some supreme, reflective moment and vision of better things, that you would give anything to see that dear old friend and companion; just to be in her presence and live again just for a day the sweet life as of yore; just to let that friend speak to you and you to listen, or it may be just to sit in silent communion? Mr. R. J. Campbell has aptly said: "Communion of soul is the only real communion. There is a language of the eye more eloquent than the language of the lip, and a language of silence more eloquent than either; it is enough to be near, to feel yourself gladdened in the presence of the loved."

And I wish that at times we might withdraw our better self from this feverish, complex civilization, and for the time wish God present and just let him speak to us and we only listen and live in his presence—not to ask God for anything or expect anything, but just to live in the blessed presence. It is said that Napoleon on the field of battle so encouraged, inspired, enlivened and increased the fighting value of his men that his presence was equivalent to another army. The presence of God in your life and life's battles will do that for you and more—inspire courage, confidence, hope. Luther did not fear Rome, he would go to Worms though every leaf on the trees were devils to hedge up his way; because he referred all his plans to his Father, he held communion with God as with a friend, the Lord spoke to him as with Moses, face to face. And as was said of John Knox: "He never feared the face of man, so familiar was he with the face of God."

The man who spent eight hours a day with God could not fail of the Protestant Reformation. George Muller takes God into his plans, dwells constantly in his presence, calmly pursues his work of feeding a thousand orphans, prays into his hands a cool million of dollars, without asking another living soul for a penny.

There are times when we do not feel like going through with the formal thing that we call prayer—that at a stated time, and in an accustomed way, and for some definite thing, we must pray; that just before jumping into bed at the close of day, or between the scripture lesson and song on a Sunday morning, we utter a three or five minute prayer. There are times when we go apart and alone commune with God; or in the quiet of our study we would lay aside books, papers, sermon notes, and just let God speak to us and only listen to what he has to say. Conversation is a lost art because there are to-day no listeners. There is plenty of talk, gabble, interruptions, but no converse, no listening. And so there is praying and praying and petitioning, but there is little reverent listening to what God has to say to us.

Nor is it necessary that prayer should be formal or uttered, in order to be prayer or answered. I think there is no sweeter, more blessed communion and fellowship with our Father than a quiet walk in the woods, a day on the lake, down by the meadow brook, over the fields where the lark pipes his song. How Christ loved the mountain side, the slopes of Olivet, the sea of Galilee, the desert place, to go apart. It was there that he found his closest communion with the Father and received his richest blessings, his wonderful transfigurations and best strength and equipment for service. Here he found his Father's spiritual influence mantling him in divine protection, peace and love. "The answer to prayer," says Lyman Abbott, "is furnished not always in the things given, but in the life imparted, the fellowships enjoyed, the counsel received"; the uplifting, inspiring, life-giving influence that comes from the conscious presence of God. In prayer, communion with the Father of spirits, our weakness becomes strength, our sorrows become joys, our doubts become faiths, our sins forgiveness. Prayer is that within the soul which looks up; it is the expression of the noblest and highest in man. You stand upon the mountain peak of character and divinity when you pray. The hart, weary and athirst, lifts its head in dumb devotion; there comes the sound of water. Climbing the mountain side it finds the brook. It quenches its thirst, strength comes back to its limbs, light to its eyes, and like an arrow it bounds away again speaking thanks: "So panteth my soul for Thee, oh, God." Prayer is the communion of a spiritual creature with a spiritual creator. God the Father naturally gravitates towards man his child; man by "natural selection" seeks God his Father, they meet and rejoice.

CHANGED HUSBAND

Wife Made Wise Change in Food.

Change of diet is the only way to really cure stomach and bowel trouble.

A woman says:

"My husband had dyspepsia when we were married and had suffered from it for several years. It was almost impossible to find anything he could eat without bad results.

"I thought this was largely due to the use of coffee and persuaded him to discontinue it. He did so, and began to drink Postum Food Coffee. The change did him good from the beginning, his digestion improved; he suffered much less from his nervousness, and when he added Grape-Nuts food to his diet he was soon entirely cured.

"My friend, Mrs. ——— ———, of Vicksburg (my former home), had become a nervous wreck also from dyspepsia. Medicines had no effect, neither did travel help her. On my last visit home, some months ago, I persuaded her to use Grape-Nuts food. She was in despair, and consented. She stuck to it until it restored her health so completely that she is now the most enthusiastic friend of Grape-Nuts that I ever knew. She eats it with cream or dry, just as it comes from the package—keeps it in her room and eats it whenever she feels like it.

"I began eating Grape-Nuts food, myself, when my baby was two months old, and I don't know what I should have done without it. My appetite was gone, I was weak and nervous and afforded but very little nourishment for the child. The Grape-Nuts food, of which I soon grew very fond, speedily set all this right again and the baby grew healthful, and beautiful as a mother could wish. He is two years old now and eats Grape-Nuts food himself. I wish every tired young mother knew of the good that Grape-Nuts would do her."

The Social Test of Theology*

By Geo. A. Bellamy

It is a significant fact that all life to-day is being tested by new standards. Especially is this true of the religious life. Awe, inspired by the idea of the supernatural, and fear of punishment by an angry God has kept the religious life apart from comparison with man's experience or his judgment. If the word of the Lord was supposed to have been spoken man dared not contradict it. This resulted in a persecution of religious reformers, which was not confined to the dark ages alone, but is quite common now. The representatives of the most advanced religious thought, no matter how God-fearing or how conscientious, have by no means passed the period of church discipline and rebuke. This lack of freedom in religious thought and study has hindered a wholesome, righteous growth of religious understanding. We may look with a great deal of misgiving upon the forces outside of the church which have been attacking our doctrine and life, yet unquestionably they have been one of the chief factors in destroying the false in it.

This flood of criticism has turned out two types of men which mark quite distinctly the religious views of to-day. The first represent the high, holy, saintly life, such as observance of the forms of religious life and the strict adherence to the individual creed. They distinguish between the sacred and secular, and raise the perpendicular line to God without relation to the horizontal line to man. Their more extreme representatives are the Catholic church and such Protestant peoples as believe in doctrinal salvation. The more moderate representatives of this class consist of those who separate religion from politics and business, and accept church attendance and the discharge of church duties as synonymous with religious life, and think all subordination of ecclesiastical and church problems to secular life a weakness of the flesh, and inconsistent with the truest spirituality. They plead for individual morality and what has been termed "the simple gospel of Jesus." This results in making religions form an end in itself. It dwarfs and narrows the conception of religious life, and blinds the minds of men to the deeper spirituality and richer character that comes through service and contact with life. It leaves strong, forceful, righteous men of keen moral insight to work out the problems of daily life, relegating these struggles to a secondary importance. Often it drives such men out of the church altogether or excludes them from its more intimate fellowship.

The other type of men, representative of the religious life, includes those who are in and out of the church, who have caught the idea that all life is sacred and that all are God's children. They have an increasing recognition that the domestic, commercial, social, political, and ecclesiastical spheres are all partial and co-ordinate phases of life to the one God who is immanent in them all. "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." Having different gifts according to the grace that is given unto us, each one is to serve his God wherever his service is most effective to his fellowmen. This type of mind does not make the church an end in itself—the righteous life. Often the church is placed on a level with other social agencies and made to stand the test put to these agencies. It is not done with a desire to weaken the supremacy of the church or to lower the standard of true religious life, but to lift all standards of life to the highest. "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." Not life in a narrow sense, but life in all its relationships, is to be more abundant. To obtain individual morality without social morality is not sufficient for this second type of men. They are unhappy in regard to the social order and their relation to it. They feel that a religion not taking into account the social forces is not complete. There are men, perhaps, who might refuse to be classified with either of the above types; men whose sympathies would extend to both classes; yet it seems fair to make this division.

In the further discussion of this paper we wish to enlarge only on our appreciation of the social side of our religious life; but please do not assume that it is because we are out of sympathy with the old idea of faith and doctrine. The old faith, clothed in modern thought, has power of conviction in it beyond anything in man's experience. And when that adjustment comes so that the gospel of Jesus is made a consistent whole, the gospel will have lost none of its freshness and strength, but rather will have taken on greater proportions, and will go out into the world making it a juster, fairer, healthier, purer world; and will drive the selfish, sensual sinner in shame from his meanness and cruelty.

This struggle in the religious life does not appeal to me as a struggle between the good and the bad; but rather between the good and the better. It is not like a conflict between brothers, but rather between the father and the son. The father has his conservative position. He is grieved over his son's liberal views. He was educated long ago, lived in seclusion, and has not met modern life, its problems and its struggles. The son has seen new life, new problems, new evils. He has new hopes and new visions. He sees the good in the father's views, but knows they are not complete; complete enough, possibly, for his time and place, but not for the new conditions. The son continues to respect his father's views, but also meets the larger life and its problems. Finally the son becomes a great leader of the men of his time. We cannot stop this increasing demand for a new adjustment of our religious forces. It is as permanent as the Eternal, and those who follow it are guided by the Star of Bethlehem.

It is sometimes charged against social workers that they lose their interest in the church. In so far as this may be true, I believe it is because our theologians have failed to correlate facts and bring out the right relationships of life. Surely these young people are not less religious, for they have larger sympathies for man, greater faith in man and more hope for man. Possibly also, many see the awful wreckage of human hearts and homes, due to the social, economic, industrial and political forces, and grow discontented with the lack of interest which the church shows in these problems.

This may also account in a large measure for the falling away of so many of the church members, and especially for the little interest shown by the labor unions and working people. Some writers have even gone so far as to use the term, "the separation of the masses from the church." When our theology is so full of God that it will take in all the problems of life, as he does, when it defines justice and righteousness so clearly that the poor and rich come to the same standards; then God and theology and Christ's gospel will take on new clothing and power, and there is not likely to be any separation of the masses from the church.

Men and women in every age have unconsciously extended the idea of God from a systematic statement of his attributes to a direct personal relation of man to man; but especially in the last decade or two, many, in and out of the church, have extended their efforts correlating the facts wrought out of their experience. From these facts there are certain definite results which are as apparent as are the results in any ordinary test in chemistry; and it is these results which lay claim upon our study of a social theology.

In the first place, we notice it has deepened the sense of the fatherhood of God. The social forces have caused the church to hear the cry of the outcast. Every human being, high or low, rich or poor, educated or ignorant, even the idiot, the insane, the sick, the orphan and the slave—every human being is considered a child of God, to be loved and helped, not hated and harmed. Not long ago one denomination considered our Creator their father, and that meaning did not extend beyond the family or church of the denomination. But when men were drawn into service for others, the idea of the fatherhood of God deepened and broadened, and as it became better understood, the right conception of man's relation to man naturally followed. It was this increasing recognition of the fatherhood which unfolded the principle of the brotherhood, resulting in the freeing of the slave, the establishment of greater justice for the working man, and the extension of political equality. The labor unions, socialism, and many other economic theories are efforts to arrive at this divine principle.

*Being a portion of an address delivered before the Disciples' Congress.

This social theology has extended and intensified man's sense of sin. While theology has made the individual responsible for his sin, and stopped there, sociology has defined new causes and brought the responsibility home, at times even to ourselves or our respected associates. Social studies have not only given us an appalling vision of sin and its consequences, but are also revealing those who are the accessories to these sins. To this conviction of sin some men have quickly responded, remodeling their tenements while legislatures have compelled others to do so. Such convictions at once settle the permanency and effectiveness of a social gospel.

With this deepening sense of sin has come an appreciation of wholesome amusements and of the value of the recreative side of life. Psalm-singing piety is not real, live, human happiness. The Sunday without cheer and spontaneous joy, so often dreaded by the active youth, does not quicken him to noble pleasures, but often drives him to the bad, failing to make real the good in psalm singing and worship. All healthful minds enjoy pleasure. They instinctively rebel against any asceticism or perversion of these divine tendencies. Many amusements, not only harmless in themselves, but oftentimes instructive and helpful, have been sacrificed by the young merely because the church has said, "Thou shalt not." This spirit of sacrifice, while it may be admired, does not always result in the richest growth of character.

The capacity for pleasure is as necessary a development in the highest type of man as the love for worship. Worship is for soul satisfaction, and its power for influencing men comes from its reflex influence on the mind of the worshiper. It is the source of inspiration, stimulating man to his best; his best, of course, having better influence on his fellowmen. Just as worship is indispensable to man's greatest good, so is the capacity for pleasure.

Reasons Why We Should Contribute to Church Extension

By J. H. SHEPARD

Church Extension—"the business end of Christianity" and "mother of the mission church"—is the most reasonable enterprise ever propagated and promulgated by the Disciples of Christ. It is a business and religious enterprise that appeals eloquently to the business and religious sense of every right thinking person. It is the reduction of Christianity to a scientific, logical, businesslike and successful working principle. In this short article I can but mention briefly some few of the many reasons why we should contribute to this sacred and worthy cause.

1. Because we must expand or die. We must be "rooted and built up in Christ"—grow down and grow up in him. And it is equally essential to life that we "abound"—grow out in Christ. The church of Christ must in justice to its great head, and in justice to itself, keep even step with the onward march of the world and proclaim to the lost the immortal principles of love and light and salvation which it holds as a sacred trust. Church Extension must not fall one whit behind the rapid marches of home and foreign missions and the other enterprises of the church. No part of the kingdom of Christ can be said to be extended permanently to a certain point until the new organization has a church building. If our board had sufficient funds to enable it to assist every new church in building, a thousand new congregations would be organized within the next twelve months. What a mighty power for the salvation of the world!

2. Because of the divine and holy cause we represent. Christianity as taught and practiced by Jesus and his apostles, union of all God's people on the Old Book—this is the divine and holy cause for which we plead and unceasingly labor. And for this great plea do our homeless churches labor with hands that never grow weary, with hearts strong and brave, and with a faith sublime. They are the heroes of our cause in this great land. They with hands outstretched plead with us: "Help ere we die." It is for us to say whether these churches shall perish in their helplessness or live by the power of Church Extension.

3. Because the work of Church Extension is a success. (1) In that it provokes our brethren to liberality, sacrifice and confidence. Hundreds of churches have been encouraged to build by being assured of help from the Board, that otherwise would not have tried to build, because they could see nothing but gloom, despair and failure staring them in the face. (2) Church Extension is an economical success. It does away with the "circular letter," the "traveling solicitor," the "chain letter" and the "autograph quilt," from which no lasting and far-reaching results ever came. The Board charges but four and six per cent on their loans: four per cent on general fund and six per cent on annuity loans. The interest on loans meets all expenses. The Board saves our churches thousands of dollars every year. (3) Church Extension is a financial success. The society has handled in all over $895,000 with a loss on bad debts of but $563. We challenge any business enterprise in the world to make a better showing. Most of this money was loaned to mission churches that couldn't borrow from secular financial firms. Fifty-three churches paid their loans in full last year; 353 since the beginning; nearly 900 churches have been helped to build. The mission church raises three dollars for every one dollar it borrows in a manly way from the Board. Thus every dollar draws out three more. For these and other reasons, every church among us ought to make a liberal offering to this great work in September. By all means let us have the half million dollars asked for by our Board, and let no less than 2,000 churches promise to take the offering.

COMES A TIME
When Coffee Shows What It Has Been Doing.

"Of late years coffee has disagreed with me," writes a matron from Rome, N. Y., "its lightest punishment was to make me 'logy' and dizzy, and it seemed to thicken up my blood.

"The heaviest was when it upset my stomach completely, destroying my appetite and making me nervous and irritable, and sent me to my bed. After one of these attacks, in which I nearly lost my life, I concluded to quit and try Postum Food Coffee.

"It went right to the spot! I found it not only a most palatable and refreshing beverage, but a food as well.

"All my ailments, the 'loginess' and dizziness, the unsatisfactory condition of my blood, my nervousness and irritability disappeared in short order and my sorely afflicted stomach began quickly to recover. I began to rebuild and have steadily continued until now. Have a good appetite and am rejoicing in sound health, which I owe to the use of Postum Food Coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Our Budget

—California is in all our minds. Let us go over to the help of the brethren on all the Pacific Coast.

—The photographs appearing on "Our Budget" pages this week, are those of some prominent workers in the west. Of course, there are many others who deserve publicity.

—S. C. Shoup has taken charge at Defiance, Ia.

—The San Marcus camp-meeting has begun.

—C. R. Moore, late of Santa Paula, will take the work at Colton, Cal.

—J. M. Monroe has dedicated a new house of worship at Port Cobb, O. T.

—J. W. Carpenter has entered upon the work auspiciously at Uniontown, Pa.

—H. D. McAneney, whose picture we print, is president of the Berkeley Bible Seminary.

—I. H. Teel has removed his family and will make his permanent home in the Golden State.

—Grant K. Lewis is now taking the state work in southern California in hand as secretary.

—The church has again been organized at Chilhowee, Mo., with 33 members, by R. B. Havener.

—J. Kenyon, A. B., Hiram, class of '98, has been appointed as assistant in English in Harvard university.

—T. B. Smith of Eureka, Ill., will take work at Drake university next year, removing to Des Moines.

—I. J. Spencer is to be evangelist at the special revival of the First church, Washington, to begin October 22.

—Earle M. Todd is supplying for Bro. T. P. Haley. His address is 2909 Holmes Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

—R. E. McKnight leaves Saratoga, Cal., for Santa Clara, where he will not devote his whole time to the ministry.

—B. J. Forbes at Weatherford, Tex., was thrown from a pony the other day and now has to walk on crutches for a time.

—Bethany Beach, Delaware, is now a United States post office and a great many Disciples of Christ are having their mail sent there.

—The laying of the corner stone of the new church at Belmar, Pa., took place last Lord's day afternoon, Wallace Tharp delivering the address.

—The annual meeting of the Campbell Institute will be held at the Hyde Park Church of Christ, Chicago, Ill., beginning at 10 a. m., July 25.

—T. H. Mathieson has resigned the work at Marlin, Tex. Brother Mathieson is from New Zealand. He will devote himself to study for a time.

—Geo. B. Evans is now unpacked at Big Run, Pa. Brother Evans was lately secretary of the West Virginia Christian ministerial association.

—Hiram VanKirk confesses that he has had "a gnawing" to go back to the land of his choice, with added appreciation of its worth and opportunities.

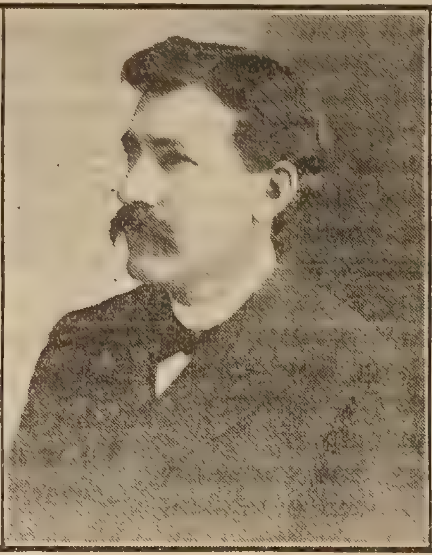
—Wallace Tharp, of the First church, Allegheny, is almost well again after seven weeks of "the most teasing and tantalizing illness" he ever experienced.

—Chas. A. Medbury is taking a holiday by doing some lecture work. After marrying some people in his old field at Angola, Ind., he is engaged for a series of lectures at the Chautauqua, N. Y., and will return later for the program at Bloomfield, Ia.

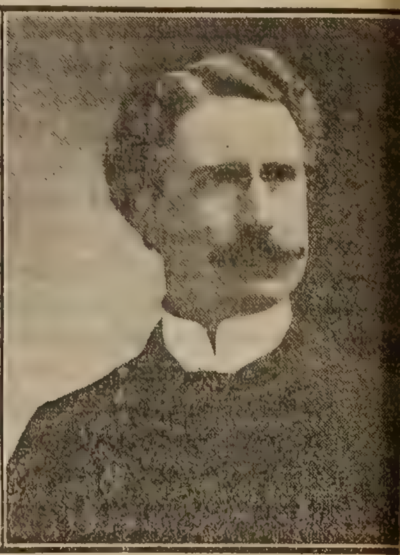
—W. H. Martin is one of our leading brethren on the coast where he has done excellent work as an evangelist, and is now pastor at Santa Barbara.

—Since going to Vanderbilt, Pa., a little over a year ago, C. B. McKnight has accomplished a splendid work. He has a full house to hear him at each service.

W. B. Berry.



J. P. Dargitz.



H. D. McAneney.

—E. H. Kellar is delighted with California. He writes that the entire coast region seems to be fairly glistening with magnificent opportunities for the Disciples of Christ.

—A postcard has just informed us of the death of Sister Lamar, wife of our old friend, J. S. Lamar. The death was due to a stroke of apoplexy. May the Great Comforter abide with our brother in his affliction.

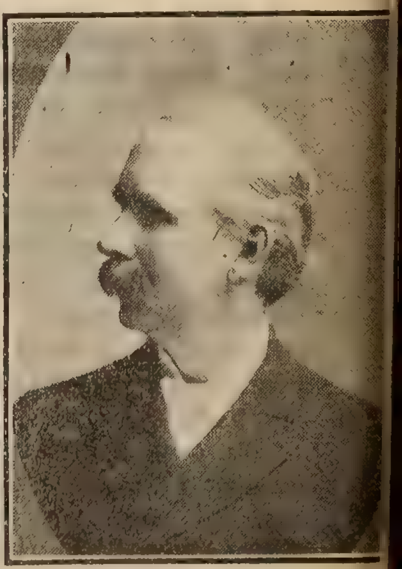
—The picnic season is upon us. Don't let all the brethren report at once. It was such a relief to the editorial force when the commencement oration period was adjourned until another year.

—We hear that new song books will soon make their appearance at the church at Ebensburg, Pa. Will they be "Gloria in Excelsis"? That book is the one that most of our churches will use in the future.

—P. C. McFarlane, the hustling press agent of the national convention, is getting large audiences at Alameda, Cal., where he is pastor. One report says: "It looks as if he were getting ready to take the town."

Grant K. Lewis.

W. H. Martin.



J. F. Ghormley.

—W. W. Vallandingham, of Fortuna, Cal., has been elected president of the county ministerial association. He has just been unanimously called to continue for another year as pastor of a splendid church.

—G. Washington Wise has just spent his first Sunday at the new church at Monroe, La., and he reports that the outlook is very hopeful. John A. Stevens preached in the evening. A. Y. P. S. C. E. was organized and fine interest was manifested in all the services.

—J. Fletcher Ghormley, minister of our First church at Portland, Oregon, was born in Wisconsin, studied at Eureka college, and has been prominent in western work, having served as evangelist both in California and Montana. He has been at Portland for about eight years.

—The last Lord's day in June was convention rally day on the Pacific coast. On Monday, August 14, there is to be a general rounding-up of the whole body of Pacific coast Disciples and "on to San Francisco" will be the war cry.

—Jas. T. Nichols, of the Christian Union, after attendance upon the International Christian Endeavor convention, called at the office of the Christian Publishing Company on his way home. Brother Nichols is making himself felt on the paper of which he has taken hold.

—Our National Benevolent Association has just issued Annuity Bond No. 97 to Mrs. Eliza F. Risk, of the faithful Missouri sisterhood. Geo. L. Sniveley, 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis, will gladly explain the annuity method and the work of the association to all inquirers.

—During the year's ministry of J. W. Kern at Monongahela, Pa., the membership of the church has been more than doubled; the Bible-school has made the same increase and its collection is three times larger than it formerly was. Every department of the church work shows advance.

—T. J. Head has just been appointed by the National Benevolent association to represent its work in Tennessee and Kentucky. We expect for Brother Head who has been one of the state evangelists in southeast Missouri, the best consideration from the brethren whom he will meet in his new field.

—A telegram announces the completion of a handsome new church at Mannington, W. Va.

—Nine new churches have been established in southern California since the beginning of this missionary work nine months ago, or one a month. Four of these have no home, two others need better and larger accommodations, while two others have received help from the Church Extension.

—Brother Erskine reports that the Christians at Akita, Japan, on May 21, gave a dinner and entertainment to 700 wounded soldiers, the Stephens family baking the bread. At home the Japanese eat no bread, rice being their staple article of diet, but the soldiers learn to like the western production.

—We have received a set of resolutions passed by the Sunday school of the Christian church at Mexico, Mo., upon the death of Sister Kokendoffer. They are of the usual form but speak very lovingly of this noble Christian woman and never tiring helpmeet of the pastor of the church at Mexico.

—The work at Havensville, Kan., is prospering under the ministries of H. R. Murphy, formerly of Holden, Mo., who has been in this new field only since January. Brother Murphy will spend one Sunday preaching for the First church in St. Louis during his vacation period, upon which he is just about to enter.

—J. P. Dargitz, of whom we present a likeness in this issue, was for some time secretary of the northern California missionary work, from which he recently resigned to give closer attention to the formation of a Christian colony. It would not surprise us if Brother Dargitz should again be chosen to a prominent place on the official board of the state.

—The ladies' aid society of the First church at Bedford, Ind., has contracted for a new pipe organ of the best quality to complete the handsome church building lately erected. We do not wonder that the brethren of Brother Edwards' church are happy. The interest and enthusiasm of the membership keep up in spite of the hot weather.

—There's a plan on foot to enlarge the church at Frankfort, Ind., of which W. J. Russell is pastor. The new arrangement will put in a gallery around the entire auditorium. The cost will be $10,000 and it will completely modernize the church. A great meeting will be held here in the fall by W. J. Russell, the pastor, and Mrs. J. E. Powell, as singer.

—E. E. Lowe, who is doing a good work at Neodesha, Kan., made a speech on the 4th of July that was received with enthusiasm. He dwelt upon the idea that Old Glory would never wave so proudly and our country be so free and the people so truly brave as on the the day they throttle the liquor dealers' association and drive it from this fair country of ours.

—W. B. Berry is upholding the cause of New Testament Christianity in the journalism of the Pacific coast. Brother Berry has for some time been putting his shoulder to the wheel in an admirable endeavor to push the Pacific Christian, of which he is editor, up that hill, to get to the top of which all religious journals have a struggle. We would wish for Brother Berry the cordial support of the Pacific coast brethren.

Ho, for San Francisco!

Will each brother or sister, going from Missouri to the national convention at San Francisco, send in name and address at once? This is important to you. Please let me have immediate reply.

A word to our patrons in reference to remittances to us made with local checks. We receive many checks payable at banks outside of St. Louis, Cincinnati, Chicago, Kansas City, Louisville, Philadelphia, New York and Boston. On every check payable at the above mentioned cities there is no charge by St. Louis banks for collection. If the check is not payable at a bank in one of the above places, a charge of 15 cents is made for collecting. We are compelled to pay this cost for collection when we deposit the check in our bank in St. Louis. The amount we pay annually for collecting the local checks sent, no doubt, will be a surprise to many of our patrons.

The amounts for the first six months of 1905 are as follows: Jan. $16.20, Feb. $11.70, Mar. $12, Apr. $12.75, May $11.55, June $16.30, making a total of $80.50 for six months, or an average of $13.40 per month.

Our patrons will readily see that this expense has been on us for years and has amounted to a large sum. We wish to say plainly that we do not object in the least to handling your local check but only ask that, if it is more convenient to send it, you will please add 15 cents to its face to cover the cost of collection. Our St. Louis banks adhere strictly to charging us for local checks and we cannot in any way change their manner of doing business.

—F. A. Wight, of Erie, Pa., says he believes in having themes as hot as the season. "Who and What is the Anti-Christ?" and "Things Still Retained by Protestants from the Apostasy" were subjects of two of his sermons. He reports that he was recently asked to make a speech at the annual banquet of the Baptist social union. The fellowship, he says, is very encouraging among the immersionists of his city.

—J. V. Coombs has had some experience on the subject of a Christian paper in every home. He has found many homes where from twelve to fifteen dollars per year are spent on secular papers and magazines, and where the people are "too poor" to take a single religious paper. Brother Coombs says, "A man who pays $15 for secular papers and no dollars for church papers, needs the second blessing, for I am sure he never had the first blessing."

—D. A. Russell, pastor of our church at Red Bluff, Cal., was born near Memphis, Mo., and began preaching in 1892. His first pastorate was at Honey Grove, Tex. Resigning there, he entered the University of California at Berkeley in 1896, graduating in the Bible seminary in 1901. Prior to his present pastorate, he had charge of the churches at Palo Alto and Hollister. Brother Russell is now president of the state board of northern California.

—M. D. Clubb, whose photograph appears in this issue, is a Kentuckian by birth, and received his education in the College of the Bible in the Kentucky university. He married the youngest daughter of President Robert Graham. Since leaving the college he has served the following churches: Danville, Midway, Walnut St., Chattanooga, Tenn., and his present field, Watsonville, Cal. During his financial secretaryship of the College of the Bible, there was secured for its endowment about $40,000. The church at Watsonville is doing a noble work. E. L. Powell, of Louisville, Ky., is to begin a meeting for Brother Clubb's church, July 30.

—The Central Christian church of Cincinnati has called J. L. Hill, until recently of Union City, Ind. He has accepted and entered upon the work. The congregation was quite enthusiastic in the invitation to Brother Hill to become their pastor. The church building is now undergoing painting and general renovation at an expense of nearly $1,400. The Endeavor Society had a special meeting to endorse and pledge Brother Hill their good will and hearty support.

—Loran Sanford has just been set apart for the Gospel ministery by A. T. June, pastor of our church at Everett, Mass. Brother Sanford has received a call to McCook, Neb., and will have taken up his work before these lines are printed. Brother June writes that he has long been associated with Christian workers and the church at Everett will be the losers by his leaving for the west, but they sent him forth with every good wish and the prayer for his success as a winner of souls.

—C. J. Chapman has begun the publication of a little church paper called Faith and Works. M. E. Harlan and V. E. Ridenour have begun a meeting for Brother Chapman at Augusta, Kan., and the little paper has its columns crowded with matters of interest bearing on this revival. Under the head, "What some others say of us," varieties of opinions, with some answers to them, are published; these are followed by an article on our distinctive position. Such a publication ought to do a great deal of good in these revival services.

fect Sept. 1. Brother Barney has been twice pastor of our church at Mishawaka, serving altogether seven years. He was formerly at Webb City, Mo., and was one of our territorial missionaries in Oklahoma. By temperament and education he is well adapted for temperance work. He leaves his charge in excellent condition. The church has in view his successor though at this writing no definite announcement can be made.

—Judge Durham, one of our best known brethren in California, hails originally from Holmes county, O., where he was born in 1836. He was educated in Abingdon college, Illinois, where his wife, Miss Vira J. Whitman, was also educated. After teaching for a number of years in his Alma Mater, he went to California in 1871, opening Pierce's Christian college in 1874. Later he was president of Washington college but was always actively engaged in the ministry. He is prominent as a lecturer and is the author of "The Man with the Book." Brother Durham is now the longest active worker in the ministry in the state and is known all over California as the "handshaker."

—W. F. Reagor, who ministers to our church at Sacramento, Cal., is a Tennessean, having been born at Singleton in 1865. Following his early education in his native state he became a student at the Bible college at the Kentucky university, subsequently taught for a year in one of the public schools of Tennessee, preaching at the church at Winder, Ga., in 1893, where he become vice-president of the Winder institute. Later he took the presidency of Pierce's Christian college, College City, Cal., but a year later went back to the pulpit, serving the church at Calusa, with an interim of eight months, when he returned to Georgia. Later he accepted charge of the work at Sacramento, Cal., where he now is.

—Charles W. Jopson, whose photograph appears among our Californian brethren this week, is a native of that state, having been born near Nicolaus in 1869. After a course of study at Pierce Christian college, and teaching school near Butte City, he went to Bethany college for another degree, and while there, preached at West Middleton. He returned to his native state, and has been pastor at Madison, Capay and Los Gatos. The last was a nine years' pastorate, and was given up to accept the larger work only last November, when he began his present term at Stockton. He is a member of the state missionary board, and has been for four years, during which time he has served as recording secretary. For three years he was president of our state Sunday-school association. He has also been interested in the executive committee, and was superintendent of the state home department for the interdenominational association. At Stockton the work is flourishing under his ministry.

When Shall We Hold the Convention?

We would say as business men that it would, in our opinion, be best to hold our national convention in July or August. It would afford the best opportunity for those to attend that would be most interested. It being vacation period, educators, business men, farmers and mechanics, all ministers as well as laymen, would be glad to include the convention attendance as a part, at least, of their vacation term.
Tebbs Brothers.

Harrison, Ohio.

Apropos of your request for expression of opinion as to the best time for the national convention to be held, I would be in favor of changing the time to the period between the first and the tenth of September. This would, in my opinion, interfere less with state conventions than a period in June.

Sioux City, Iowa. J. K. Ballou.

1. It would be wise to change the date of holding our national convention; and for the reasons indicated in your editorial on the subject.

2. In making a change—as between June and September, the former can scarcely be classed as vacation month, but with many the latter is so classed. If the first week in September were fixed upon it would, in my judgment, insure a larger attendance than any other week of the year. W. P. Keeler.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Arkansas.

A most successful session of the State university has closed. Something over eight hundred students were enrolled. Dr. Henry S. Hartzog, who, for three years, presided over the institution, was succeeded by Judge John N. Tillman. Two new dormitories will be built this summer. President Tillman will make a thorough canvass of the state. As the Disciples of Christ in Arkansas have no church schools they ought by every consideration to send their sons and daughters to the State university. They will find a good Sunday-school and church in which to work and worship. The writer will gladly give any desired information in regard to the school.

The author of this letter was called to Stilwell, Indian Territory, to assist in the ordination of Prof. Thomas E. Wyly to the work of the Christian university. He is a young man of high character, good ability and well educated. For some time he has been the principal of the public school in Stilwell. He has, also, been elected to the same position for the coming session. He will preach for the church in Stilwell during the vacation. His ministry has already been blessed to the salvation of several. After one more year in the school room it is his purpose to attend some Bible college to further equip himself for his life work. His wife is also a good Christian and an efficient teacher. The church in Stilwell will build a house of worship in the near future. The Extension Board will help to the amount of one thousand dollars. It will be a good investment. N. M. RAGLAND.

Lexington, Ky., Notes.

Ira E. Paternoster and Miss Ethel Waddell, who were married here recently, are both from Australia. The bride reached Lexington a few days prior to the wedding; having come direct from her far-away home. The groom has been in the College of the Bible for two years, and is now engaged in the work of the ministry in Mason county near Maysville.

F. M. Rains recently preached at Chestnut street church and after the evening sermon Brother McGarvey officiated at the ordination of J. C. Ogden, under appointment of the Foreign Board as missionary to Tibet; R. L. Mobley, soon to enter upon his duties as minister of the church at Springfield, Tenn.; G. H. C. Stoney, minister of the church at Flemingsburg, and A. J. Boughton, as a deacon at Chestnut street church.

A movement is on foot in Central church to enlist a large number of daily Bible readers, to be known as the daily Bible readers' union. The movement contemplates a lecture on each book as it is read.

The time has come when news notes from Lexington cannot be free from reference to our mission work. Within a month's time marked progress has been made at each of four points. At Forest Hill, where Spencer L. Jackson labored long and under discouragement, and where Gayle Spencer devoted much consecrated time and energy, the workers, led by Bro. Ralph E. Alexander, are rejoicing in the fruits of their own labors and of those into whose labors they have entered. The purchase of the property from Henry J. Baker has been made by the Lexington Christian missionary society and money is being raised to put the building in good repair. Brother Alexander has been engaged for full time during the summer, with the understanding that he will continue his work in the fall in connection with his school duties. The protracted meeting held by J. B. Hunley two weeks and one day resulted in 61 persons added to the saved at this point. This congregation now numbers something over 100. High water mark was reached at the Sunday-school when on a recent Sunday there were 211 present, and the offering amounted to over $3.00. One of the classes was compelled to meet out in the yard on account of the crowded condition of the room. The school observed children's day and the offering amounted to $50.

The Arlington mission, now meeting in the public school building, will soon meet in its own house. The new chapel will be a neat structure of the best of material and with a seating capacity of about 200. R. S. Wilson has been engaged by the Lexington Christian missionary society to look after the mission during the summer. M. A. Cassaboom, who has had this work in hand, will visit his home in Nova Scotia during the vacation.

Alley Rector will continue to have oversight of the Willard street mission. Money was recently raised in Broadway church to paint the Willard street building.

Preaching services on Sunday night have recently been commenced at the Ashland avenue mission. Attendance has been good. C. M. Famuliner is in charge. He calls on fellow students to assist in the work. A meeting was begun Sunday, June 4, R. S. Wilson and others doing the preaching the first week and R. N. Simpson the second week.

Nebraska.

J. W. Sapp has resigned at Brownville. He reports two added at Nemaha and one at Brownville.

Avoca will want a located preacher about September 1, to live there.

Exeter is building a parsonage for their popular preacher, Manson Miller. It will cost about $800.

DeForest Austin will do evangelistic work in Nebraska next year, beginning in the fall. He will be alone this year. Address him at Bethany as usual. He has been supplying at Blair since the close of his meeting there. He reports one more baptism.

Two baptisms at Bennett where Bro. Burton Whiston ministers. They had an afternoon grove meeting, and R. F. Whiston was present and preached. He reports the work in excellent condition. A full corps of officers was elected.

R. F. Whiston and wife have gone to Brooklyn, N. Y., to visit relatives. Will return in time for the state convention. He begins his evangelistic work again August 19 with a meeting at Geneva, where E. M. Johnson labors. Brother Whiston's work for the state board during the last year has been very satisfactory. The fields he visited were hard and in every case the work was well done. It is hoped that the incoming board will retain him for the coming year.

The last district convention of the year was held at Craig in No. 4. It was a very live convention. The program was good and well carried out. Good attendance marked the sessions, and the evening audiences filled the house. Thos. Rawlings was chosen president and W. L. Ireland secretary for the year. H. E. Motter preaches at Craig and Wakefield.

Just a few words relating to the San Francisco convention trip. The official route for Nebraska delegation is over the Union Pacific railroad. The C. & N. W., Mo. Pacific and St. Joe & Grand Island roads will sell tickets from local stations over this road for the round trip rate of $50 including Los Angeles. If you want to go to Portland the ticket will be $6 more. This does not include sleeping car rates. As to the latter it is the intention to charter a sleeping car for the exclusive use of the delegation, provided enough will join together to make this possible. In this way we can have our own company without the intermingling of strangers. The car will be held for us at the stops made, which will be at Denver, Colorado Springs, Pike's Peak and Manitou, Glenwood Springs, Salt Lake City, on Sunday, and one day at Truckee for a side trip to the largest mountain lake in the world, and one of the most beautiful, Lake Tahoe. We can take our own lunch baskets and replenish them as we go, or patronize the diner, as we choose. By this arrangement, the sleeping car cost will be reduced to the minimum.

From Denver we will probably go with the "CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special" train as far as Salt Lake City. Daylight rides will be the rule through the mountain scenery. The route from Denver will be over the Colorado Midland to Grand Junction, D. & R. G. to Salt Lake City, Central Pacific the rest of the way. A daylight ride through parts of Nevada and from Truckee to San Francisco, Cal. We expect to leave Omaha August 10, at 4:10 p. m., on the Union Pacific, Lincoln at 1:45 p. m. same day on the C. & N. W. Passengers on the Missouri Pacific can connect at Omaha or Lincoln as desired. Union depots at both places. From St. Joe & Grand Island stations, connection will be made at Grand Island, union depot.

Write the undersigned if you are thinking of going and let us help you plan the return trip as well. Parties on the B. & M. that can not get to the Union Pacific can join us at Denver. Write me about routing. W. A. BALDWIN.

New Franklin, Mo., Notes.

The Higbee congregation has licensed Prof. Ed Keiter to preach the word. He is our son in the gospel—a very fine man in character and speech and worthy of all encouragement.

The Howard county meeting will be held at Pleasant Green, Aug. 28-30; the Randolph county meeting at Higbee, Aug. 31, Sept. 1.

Brother Walker and wife who have recently come into our county have been well received and are fast organizing four of our country churches for a forward movement.

The New Franklin church is the recipient of an elegant communion set with individual cups; the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Odon Guitar, of St. Louis, in memory of Father and Mother Estill.

Since coming to New Franklin five years ago we have had 1,068 additions to the church, 645 in Howard county. Revived a number of churches; builded two new ones. We hope to lift the $1,000 debt here in a few days and make some general improvements.

Captain Dollard, of Armstrong, is the authorized agent of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in Howard county. We hope that he will get 100 new subscribers in the next 30 days.

The Bible-school at Fairfield, Pa., is less than a year old, and has but twenty members, and they observed their first children's day with a splendid program and over six dollars in the offering.

The house of worship at Waynesboro is undergoing repairs, a new roof and coat of paint will be added, papering and other work done.

Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, preached June 25, for the saints at Beaver Creek, Md., while W. S. Hoye occupied the pulpit at the Christian Temple, Baltimore.

H. C. Kendrick is planning for a great meeting at Hagerstown, with one of our best evangelists, this fall or a little later.

Your correspondent spent Lord's day, July 25, at Bellaire, O., the home of his mother, and attended the sixty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the church there, delivering the historical address. Walter Mansell, of Salem, O., gave the anniversary sermon at night. The work here is in good condition under the pastorate of J. P. Allison.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The state meeting has passed into the "has beens" and we are ready for another and, we trust, a more profitable year. We have much to rejoice for in the one just gone. We were happy in reporting increase all along the line. In auxiliaries the increase was 13; in numbers, 388; while in the Y. P. department, the increase was greater in proportion. Last year only 29 auxiliaries were entitled to a place on the Roll of Honor. This year there were 46 there.

While at Marshall, and before the convention closed, plans were largely perfected for the work of the coming year. Some are as follows: The rally cry adopted was an old one, "Each one win one," and the aims are, 2,000 Tidings, $12,000, and 4,600 women, before the next state convention. For special work, the following: Mexico, $1,000; Mattie Burgess, $600; Caroline Pope, $600, and California, $600. The special work was decided upon in time for the auxiliaries in making pledges for the new year to designate their choice of fields. Pledges to the amount of $1,235.50 were made, at that time, besides 14 auxiliaries asked to be apportioned, and one, the Union avenue, St. Louis, pledged to be a living link for the second year. In addition, Christian college, of Columbia, under the leadership of Mrs. W. T. Moore, has aspirations, with every prospect of having them gratified, of becoming the next living link. Surely God has blessed us and caused his face to shine upon us. What shall we render unto him for all his benefits toward us? Surely nothing less than our very best is worthy of our offering or of his acceptance.

We call now upon every auxiliary officer in Missouri to ring the rally cry, "Each one win one," through and through the auxiliary membership, until all shall have it by heart and in their hearts. Let your greeting to the members be, "Have you won your one?" Your state board has given much thought and prayer to the ways and means of growth for the future, and calls upon you, and you, to help, by winning one other to your own auxiliary first, and when you have tasted the joy of winning one, you will not be contented until other ones are also added. If each will be true to this high aim, we shall come up to Hannibal next year with praises in our hearts and hallelujahs on our lips.

Mrs. S. J. White has kindly consented to act as manager for the Grand river district, and already is at work preparing the program for the convention, which meets at Pattonsburg, on July 19-21. It is earnestly hoped that all the auxiliaries in the district will be represented at this convention, and will give its manager its most loving support all the year.

The Nodaway district convention will meet with the Savannah church on July 19-21, and the program is in charge of the manager, Mrs. C. O. McFarland, who will preside. Mrs. H. A. Denton, the successor of our dear president for four years, Mrs. Wm. M. Goode, will be present and help on the program. Everything points to a splendid convention.

The Webb City auxiliary has sent $25, its apportionment for special work, and has given the life membership certificate to its oldest member, Mrs. Mary Cooper.

Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Virginia Christian Assembly.

This assembly held its first sessions in Virginia Christian college chapel, Lynchburg, Va. From 25 to 30 preachers were present, together with other Christian workers from over the state. Most of those attending roomed in the college building. Professor McGarvey, of Lexington, Ky., and J. J. Haley, of Richmond, Va., were the chief speakers each day. Professor McGarvey delivered lectures on Old Testament themes, as follows: "Defense of the Book of Genesis," "Isaiah Sawn Asunder," "Daniel in the Critics' Den," and "Was the Book of Job an Allegory?" The subjects considered by Brother Haley each night were "Pentecostal Problems." An hour each afternoon was spent in asking questions on scripture thought and practical Christian work. These lectures were of a high order, full of interest and instruction to preachers and Christian workers, while the colloquies seemed to some to be of even greater interest than the lectures.

Tuesday night, on invitation, we went down to the First Baptist church of the city, where Brother Haley and Dr. W. L. Pickard, pastor of First Baptist church, delivered addresses on "The Twentieth Century Attitude of Baptists and Disciples." Brother Haley, with his accustomed strength and power, courteously presented the position of the Disciples and their readiness to form a basis of union on New Testament teaching. Dr. Pickard was not so felicitous in speaking of Baptist principles and practices.

On Friday night E. B. Kemm, the efficient pastor at Blacksburg, Va., gave a very interesting recital before the largest audience we had during the assembly. Prof. A. R. Davis and wife, singing evangelists, from Ohio, conducted the musical features of the sessions.

W. G. Johnston, the successful pastor at Roanoke, Va., in the absence of President Atkins, presided with dignity over the sessions of the assembly. The Christian fellowship was sweet and all present found recreation and rest on the shady verandas of the college building or on the beautiful grounds of the institution. Professor and Mrs. Hopwood, with other members of the college home, were most kind in making the guests of the week to feel that they all were members of the home. So well pleased were those present that they unanimously voted for the assembly next year, referring their request to our state ministerial association, which meets in annual session in Norfolk, Va., at our state meeting, October next. Washington.

Two years ago M. A. Thompson took up the mission work in Yakima valley, central Washington, without support from any outside sources. His time was divided equally between Zillah and Prosser. Zillah has a fine small house of worship. Prosser just sold their tabernacle and begins the erection of a modern church house immediately. In effectiveness for work and membership the Zillah field has easily doubled, and at Prosser quadrupled. All special offerings were taken; all bills provided for to date; money for full time work at Zillah was raised and Bro. E. E. Francis, of Missouri, located; Prosser retains their pastor for three-fourths time, with all expenditures for the new year provided for. Brother Thompson takes up some new mission work for the coming year. The great American northwest is the greatest and ripest mission field in the world to-day. It requires much hardihood and sacrifice to alone enter this field and win it for the old apostolic plea. Here is what one man did in two short years.

M. A. Thompson, pastor.

The Meeting at Murfreesboro, Tenn.

It is my conviction that the sunny southland has more hearts that are ready to join hands for Christian union and the conversion of the world than any other section of our country. The fellowship among all the churches in many places down here is delightful. Of course, there are many things that must be said before the last thing can be said on our distinctive plea, but many are seeing the beauty and basis of it, and what a happy day it will be when Jesus will conquer all and unite all.

We have been here now for four weeks, with 70 additions, about 90 by conversion, and the interest is increasing. Bro. W. L. Logan, the minister, is a wise co-worker and a man of wide influence in the town and county. His services are in demand on every public occasion, and his good will toward all and unselfishness have given our work here a standing which rejoices our hearts. He has several wise counsellors in the elders who are standing nobly by the work and sacrificing time and money to build up the cause they love. The attendance of the members from the other churches has been phenomenal.

Brother Daugherty has had a large chorus from the first, and though the church does not use an instrument, the singing has been hearty and strong. During the first part of my stay here, I was at Bro. E. H. Jones's.

The latter part of my stay here has been in the home of Bro. James D. Richardson, the Grand Commander of Masonry. My attention has been attracted to a work which he has just compiled, entitled, the "Messages and Papers of the Confederacy." It comprises all of the official utterances of Jefferson Davis, the president of the Confederate states, and the diplomatic correspondence of the southern states with their commissioners in foreign lands. My next meeting, before going to the coast, will be at Milan, Tenn. James Small.

West Virginia.

The pastoral question is receiving a larger consideration than ever before. Churches that have no regular preachers are in a fair way to go out of the Lord's business. The great Head of the church made it obligatory upon his people to have the Gospel preached, and when they do it, they prosper and when they make trifling excuses and have no pastoral care, the church dies. What is true in West Virginia is true in every state. Churches die when they are not engaged in preaching the Gospel. Our churches were slow to comprehend the great commission to "go." But everywhere they are taking on new life where they get going and where they do not they go into a debate about the Lord's plan and soon lose their power. A preacher of a church that has the spirit of debate will never accomplish much in the twentieth century. We have a few debaters still left among us, but they are growing beautifully less every year. We feel sure the Lord will never send men that have the spirit of hate and debate, into the great harvest field of the world.

We are much pleased with the spirit of the Christian-Evangelist and the broad and comprehensive view it takes on the great problems that have come up among us in our advancement toward a higher ideal. The church of Christ has always been one of great ideals; and we must advance along those lines. A. Linkletter.

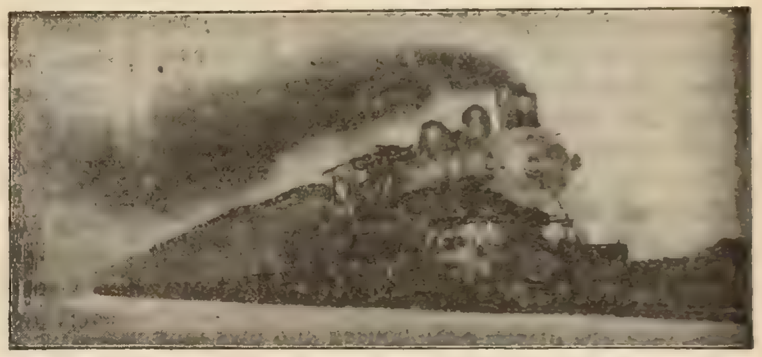
The Christian-Evangelist Special—Important



This splendid train will leave St. Louis at 9 p. m., August 9. We will be joined in Kansas City by additional delegates, a number of which are headed by A. W. Kokendoffer and T. A. Abbott, and at St. Joseph we shall have quite a number of additional delegates. There will be others join us at different towns along the line, and at Oxford, Neb., S. D. Dutcher and W. B. Clemmer will join us with their parties.

Before we leave St. Louis, we shall have, in addition to those joining us from St. Louis and vicinity, a party of at least fifteen, headed by J. Murray Taylor, Washington, D. C. Also a party of as many more, headed by John C. Warner, from Indiana. Others will join us here from Tenn., Ky., Ohio, Ind., Pa., N. Y., Va., W.Va., Ill., and other states. Now, we have a few matters to present to you which are of vital importance.

First. Your ticket for railroad fare should be bought at or near your home. It should read from St. Louis or Kansas City, over the Burlington to Denver, then the Midland to Salt Lake, from there over the Salt Lake and Los Angeles (San Pedro). Then over the Southern Pacific to Portland. If you continue with us east, it should be over the Northern Pacific to Billings, and then over the Burlington to St. Louis or Kansas City, or Omaha, or any other point from which you start.

Second. These tickets are good for ninety days.

Third. We provide you with tourist sleepers, two in lower and one in upper berth, at $6.00 for each person. This includes stops at Colorado Springs, Salt Lake and other places to Los Angeles. From Los Angeles to San Francisco we travel in day coaches.

Fourth. We will stop for meals at hotels with the exception of breakfast and dinner on San Pedro line. These two meals will be served in the dining car. The eleven meals provided for will cost you fifty cents each and only two will be served per day. Most of these meals would cost you seventy-five cents, but by arranging ahead we get them for fifty.

Fifth. Now is the time for you to register for sleeper and meals. This will cost you $11.50, and you will eat your first meal at Oxford, Neb., and the last at San Francisco. No further arrangements have been made. You will provide your noon lunch, as only two meals per day are provided for.

Sixth. The Christian-Evangelist Special will bear a magnificent company of people. It will do you good to enjoy the fellowship of such an excursion. For this reason we ask you to send on your registration fee at once and let us assign you your berth and also provide for your meals as above, should you wish the meals.

Christian-Evangelist Special, per G. A. Hoffmann.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Jonesboro, July 10.—Evangelist C. C. Cline began a tent meeting with us June 4, and continued till the evening of July 3. Men who never heard a Christian minister before, listened to Brother Cline and commended his preaching. When the meeting was two weeks old, a street carnival opened and continued business till Saturday before the meeting closed. This, with abundance of rain, did much to hinder the meeting. Thirty-seven were added—twenty-four by confession and baptism, seven by statement or letter, and the others from the sects. The church was much edified. We go into our new building next Lord's day.—E. J. Barnett, minister.

CALIFORNIA.

Eureka, July 7.—Two additions last Lord's day. One an immersed Methodist.—I. H. Teel.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, July 10.—Just closed a meeting at Vienna, Va., where J. T. Watson was until recently the much loved pastor. We had five additions by confession and baptism and one reclaimed, and substantial good done otherwise. Heavy downpours of rain seriously affected the attendance a part of the time. This church has a bright future.—Claude C. Jones.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, July 11.—The hot season has not impeded the work in Florida. In fact the hot season is not so hot—a shower every day and fine breezes, especially at night. Our state evangelists, Brothers Cox, White and Chisholm, send in good reports. Bro. J. P. Rowlison and the Tampa brethren have just completed the lecture room of a good church building. Less than two years ago they owed $3,000 and had a shack for a building. Today they are pretty well housed and owe only $1,000 and that to Church Extension. Brother Rayner, of Kissimmee, is among the churches north now in the interest of the Kissimmee work. He has done a splendid work and a little aid just now would do much good. The last Sunday in June our beloved A. McLean during the Sunday-school hour wisely entered and almost hid behind the back of a pew as if he were "spying out the land," but he straightened himself up and grew tall as he preached that morning. There were four confessions, and one addition from the Baptists last Sunday at the First church.—J. T. Boone.

ILLINOIS.

Eureka, July 7.—Two received in the Mt. Olivet Christian church by letter on July 2. The church is near Clarence.—Lewis P. Fisher.

Waukegan, July 10.—Two confessions and two received into fellowship yesterday. The Bible-school reached high water mark. We begin a tabernacle meeting July 30.—E. N. Tucker.

Chicago Heights, July 10.—We baptized nine Sunday afternoon in the Englewood church; several others to be baptized soon.—Harry E. Tucker, minister.

INDIANA.

Terre Haute, July 9.—Confession of young Catholic lady last Lord's day; baptism Wednesday night. Work is going nicely with Brother Givler as minister. Our tent meeting begins July 16. Brother Givler will do the preaching and Le Roy St. John will have charge of chorus.—J. F. Ashley, elder Second church.

KANSAS.

Hutchinson.—We took our regular children's day offering at Langdon, and we are all rejoicing over the success attained. Our Sunday-school enrollment is 96; average attendance, 60; offering last Sunday for foreign missions, $115.07. Last year it was $100. We feel that we are making substantial progress.—C. W. VanDolah, pastor.

Leavenworth, July 10.—One addition yesterday, good crowds. Nine added since last report, four by confession and five by letter. All departments doing nicely. I am three months on my second engagement here. I have been called for an indefinite period.—E. J. Wright.

KENTUCKY.

Lebanon, July 10.—On July 5, Brother J. T. McKissick preaching and Prof. J. W. Ireland singing, closed an excellent meeting with us at this place with 22 added. Since my coming to this place less than a year ago there has been an increase in the congregation of more than 76 per cent. All departments of the work are growing.—T. J. Golightly.

Richmond.—We have closed our meeting here with 128 brought into the church. The Brooks Bros., of Ladoga, Ind., were our evangelists. Not a blemish nor a jar marred our meeting. Every element commanded the respect of the most fastidious. They have left our congregation enlarged and strengthened. We thank God for their coming, and go forward with courage.—Hugh McLellan.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Everett, July 10.—Last night there was one baptism.—A. T. June.

Worcester, July 10.—At the Highland street church of Christ, July 9, there were two baptisms, both from the Congregationalists. There have been two others since last report.—Newton Knox.

MISSOURI.

Bogard, July 12,—One addition at Hale by letter Sunday and one here at prayer-meeting last night by statement.—C. C. Taylor.

Knox City, July 10.—We have just closed a short meeting with the church in Higginsville. There were 24 additions to the church. Bro. J. H. Coil has been pastor three years, in the meantime he has built a $16,000 church house and is still pastor, and is likely to be for several years to come. I expect to begin a meeting in Lexington, Okla., this week.—H. A. Northcutt.

Chilhowee.—We have lived here ten years, hoping for a church, and at last our prayers have been answered. On June 24, R. B. Havener, of Windsor, began a series of meetings. We secured the union church, but met with a great deal of prejudice and unkind treatment. We are thankful to report a good meeting; five confessions, two reclaimed and one from the Baptist church. On July 9, we organized with thirty-four members. We have secured E. B. Wood, of Versailles, for one-fourth of his time, and hope yet to see a strong church in Chilhowee. We ask our churches to pray for our success.—Carrie M. Moore.

OKLAHOMA.

Perkins, July 12.—Eight added since last report; three baptized; three reclaimed; two confessed their Saviour and will be immersed next Lord's day. It takes as much work to save one that has strayed away as it does to save a half dozen sinners.—J. W. Garner.

Newkirk, July 8.—One accession last Sunday. We have reorganized our Endeavor. The Christian spirit is at work in this field.—F. D. Wharton.

OHIO.

Phalanx, July 7.—June 18 was a great day for the church at Southington. We gave our children's day exercise both morning and night, and raised for foreign missions $143 75. One added by statement last Lord's day.—W. P. Murray.

Leipsic, July 10.—Three confessions at regular service yesterday; one May 7, by statement, not reported. The work here is in splendid condition with bright prospects for a good year's work.—H. C. Boblitt.

Geneva, July 10.—Held meeting at Harpersfield during the latter part of June. No church here, but a few scattered Disciples, true to the faith, became our inspiration. Fourteen were baptized. Sectarianism has played itself out here. A building remains in fairly good repair, and is accessible to us. The good audiences and the interest manifested in the community, encourage us in the hope of organizing soon. I am preaching to them every Lord's day afternoon. Two additions at Geneva last Lord's day, eighteen not previously reported, which with the above make thirty-four since last report: twenty-three baptisms, three from Baptists and eight by letter. Church building undergoing extensive repair.—Frank M. Field.

OREGON.

Silverton, July 10.—We are just beginning a meeting here. S. M. Martin is the evangelist. Brother Cartwright is the efficient pastor. Will be here until the national convention. Ministers or evangelists wishing my services can write me here.—Charles E. McVay, singing evangelist.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Vigan, Islokos Sur, June 1.—Three men baptized at Vigan last Sunday night, and three more yesterday at Sinait.—Hermon P. Williams.

TENNESSEE.

Jellico, July 10.—Have been evangelizing in the Indian Territory, under the territorial board, since my resignation at York, Neb., in May last. Began work with the church here last Sunday. Prospects good. A new building is our first necessity.—Wren J. Grinstead.

TEXAS.

Haskell, July 10.—Good day yesterday. Three additions by statement at morning service.—J. H. Shepard.

Garland, July 7.—Closed the meeting at Ferris last Sunday night after being rained out of twelve services, in two weeks, with eleven additions. Church official board organized and whole church at work. They want a pastor.—Chas. Chasteen.

WASHINGTON.

Tacoma, July 6.—Eight added to First church Sunday.—W. A. Moore.

The Great Communion Service at "San Francisco, 1905."

The hall committee for "San Francisco 1905" has just rendered to the committee of arrangements a report on a place for holding the great communion service. At first it was thought that the Greek theater in Berkeley could be secured for this, but the necessary permission from the state authorities was not forthcoming. Now, however, a still better place has been found in Woodward's pavilion on Valencia St., just off Market, in San Francisco. It is a building seating 8,500 persons, with perfect acoustics, easy to get in and out of, and in many ways ideal for the purpose. It has also been decided to secure this building for the Christian Endeavor rally on Saturday night.

Arrangements of all kinds for the entertainment of the convention are gradually being perfected. Brethren, we are all ready for you. Come ahead by thousands to the best convention in the history of our brotherhood. If every one of our 12,000 churches will send at least one delegate, we of the Pacific Coast will agree to be perfectly satisfied.

With regard to the weather: Arrangements have been made by General Chairman White, who has a "pull" with nearly everybody in San Francisco, to have the very best brand of Calfornia weather supplied during the entire convention. The sun will rise in the morning in the east, and set at night in the west during these seven days. Between sundown and sunrise the stars will shine; but, of course, our convention speakers will, either day or night, outshine the heavenly bodies, and also of course the ladies of the C. W. B. M. will outshine the men. At noon of these days it will be quite warm and excitable speakers will be seen to mop their faces, but the delegates will be cool and comfortable because there are always breezes blowing in San Francisco. Toward evening the breezes will freshen up a bit, and gentlemen will button up their coats, while the ladies will not think of venturing out to the night sessions without warm wraps, and the men will be wearing their spring overcoats. In the morning a bit of fire may not come amiss and some people will be seen hovering suspiciously near to certain artistically aggregated coils of steam pipe. On at least one day of the convention, there will be a thick fog obscuring the sun for two hours in the morning. The ladies' cheeks will on this morning look very rosy, and certain men will hump up their shoulders and poke thin blue noses out from under low hat brims and croak about 350 sunshiny days in the year in San Francisco, and ask where they are. But, just as the croakers have begun to strike their gait and to make unfavorable comparisons between the San Francisco weather bureau and the Missouri groundhog, the sun will come out, and away will go the fog and the blue noses and the croakers will smile and be no more croakers, but delegates to the best convention in the history of the Disciples of Christ, hilariously having the best time of their lives.

BREEDEN.

The subject of this sketch is known among us as the mother of one of our preachers. Sarah A. Stoner was born in Clermont county, O., May 25, 1833, and died at the age of 72 years. She was the only daughter in a family of ten children. Her parents, Joseph and Margaret Stoner, came with their family to Illinois when she was but seven years old, and settled in Brown county, where she received her education in the country schools, afterwards becoming a teacher of the same school in which her future husband taught during the succeeding term. In 1856 she was united in marriage to J. H. Breeden, who shortly afterward went to Chicago, taking her with him. After the termination of his studies at Rush Medical college they located in Summum. Here were born to them three children, H. O. Breeden, pastor of the Central Christian church, Des Moines, Ia., L. C. Breeden editor of the Lewiston News, and Mrs. Chas. Danner, of Ipavia. These, with her husband and two brothers, Dr. E. R. Stoner, of Buggsville, Ill., and S. D. Stoner, president of the bank at Burnside, Ill., survive her and with a nephew, Dr. Fred Stoner, of Decatur, were present at the funeral. It was in 1859 that Mrs. Breeden united with the Christian church and she proved a worthy and consistent Christian to the hour of her death. Something over a year ago she became afflicted with cancer of the breast. An operation, or several operations, rather, were performed, and were attended with excruciating weakness and pain, but for a brief season it seemed that the science of surgery had been successful; yet the terrible foe returned and it was known that nothing, humanly speaking, could prevent the spread of the disease. Towards the close of her illness peritonitis with pleural pneumonia made the journey to the grave shorter by many weeks. The funeral, during which all the business houses were closed, occurred at her residence and was conducted by C. G. Kindred, of Chicago, assisted by J. T. Craig. In keeping with Sister Breeden's mental strength was the purity of her spiritual life. She was a Christian not in word alone, but in deed. Her heart was open to the afflicted, her hand to the needy, and one of her last requests was that a certain amount of her own money should be distributed among her friends and dependents.

CHAPIN.

Mrs. Feusa Orlena Chapin was born at West Point, Ia., Oct. 17, 1855. Her maiden name was Mefford. She joined the church in 1873. She died near Greenwood, Neb., May 15, 1905, leaving her husband, three daughters and three sons. The funeral services were largely attended.

W. B. Harter.

HUMPHREY.

J. W. Humphrey died May 11, 1905, as the result of an injury received in a railroad collision a year and a half ago. He was an invalid from that time until his death. Brother Humphrey was very successful as an educator, was an ordained minister of the church of Christ, was a success in evangelistic work, and had served two terms as senator in the Michigan state legislature. He leaves a wife, daughter, son and grandson to mourn his loss. Funeral service by the writer. M. B. Rawson.

MANASSEH'S SIN AND REPENTANCE—2 Chron. 33:1-13.

The two accounts of the reign of Manasseh are given in 2 Kings 21:1-18 and 2 Chron. 33:1 20. The first nine verses of the two accounts are verbally identical, with only the variation of a phrase here and there. Evidently the compilers of both books used a common source. Following these verses which are alike in both records, Kings has an account of a threat made by Jehovah through the mouth of his prophets that he would punish Manasseh and Judah for their wickedness; then a statement of Manasseh's injustice and cruelty; then the account of his death in the usual formula, leaving the impression that he died as he had lived, wicked and impenitent. But in Chronicles, after the common material, we have, instead of a threat of punishment, a record of the punishment itself, Manasseh's captivity in Assyria, and then the account of his repentance and the reformation of his later years.

Manasseh came to the throne upon the death of his father Hezekiah in 696 B. C. and reigned for more than half a century. Hezekiah had been a reformer. Stirred by the preaching and leadership of Isaiah and Micah, and perhaps the other prophets whose names and work have not been preserved for us, he had purified the worship, destroying many of the shrines and objects which had been used in the worship of idols and also in the impure worship of Jehovah. The preaching of the prophets had perhaps led the people to expect immediate deliverance from Assyria and the entrance upon a new golden age. But Judah continued to be a vassal state of the flourishing Assyrian empire, there was no sign of greater prosperity for Judah, and they missed the old shrines where they had been accustomed to worship. All of these things, together with the temper of Manasseh, conspired to cause a reaction and the undoing of Hezekiah's reforming work.

The lesson tells how Manasseh built up again the high places and set up the pillars and Asherah which his father had destroyed, and how he even turned the temple to the worship of other gods and set up a graven image there. In all probability it was a time of persecution for the prophets especially, and for all who remained true to the worship of Jehovah. Very likely the "innocent blood" which he shed (2 Kings 21:7) was the blood of martyrs. It is important to bear this in mind on account of its bearing on the reformation under Josiah and the finding of the law.

Manasseh was brought to his senses by the only argument which seemed convincing at that time—the argument of prosperity and adversity. The doctrine that righteousness must always bring prosperity, and that trouble is always punishment for sin, was an almost universal belief. A period of captivity for Manasseh brought him to repentance, and he did what he could in the closing years of his reign to repair the damage which he had done.

FRESH CONSECRATION.

"And behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail! And they came and took hold of his feet, and worshipped him."—Matt. 28:9.

Jesus Met Them. Yes, he always meets those who are seeking him, when they go where his messengers bid them. The angels who had told these women that Jesus was risen, also directed them to bear the message to his disciples, with the promise that he would show himself to them in Galilee. They started at once to do his bidding, and, lo, before they have even seen the disciples, the Master stands before them (verses 5-8). So does the Lord ever reveal himself to those who speed to carry his message to dying men. The missionary enjoys the divine presence at every step of his journey, and while we are telling the story of redeeming love to a despairing soul, our own heart glows with the consciousness of the nearness of the Lord. "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace; for I am with thee," said the Lord to his servant Paul (Acts 18:9,10).

His Greeting. "All hail!" The word Jesus uses in his greeting signifies to rejoice. Paul makes it the keynote of his wonderful epistle to the Philippians, exhorting them to "Rejoice in the Lord"; "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, rejoice" (Phil. 3:1; 4:4). The Master had said to his disciples before his betrayal and death, "Ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice; and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy" (John 16:20-22). They were now to realize this promise, and enter into the abiding "joy of the Lord;" which no man could take away from them. For the Savior would no more leave them alone. He was to ascend to his Father, but he would send to them his Holy Spirit, whose presence with his people should do for them far more than his personal presence had been able to perform.

Their Loving Hold. "They came and took hold of his feet." Oh, if he would but stay with them, was doubtless their thought. Before this Lord of life and death their proper attitude is that of a subject to a king. Those feet were marred by the cruel prints of the nails, but they were fairer than the bright dawn of morning, for they had just come forth out of the tomb, in which the hopes of the world had ever been buried, and they shone with the light of the eternal day. And he whose steps follow those blessed feet will find the path of his life "as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

Their New Consecration. "They worshipped him." Not a new worship, but one of deeper reverence, more fervent gratitude, and larger understanding than before. Henceforth these simple believers were prepared to go with their Lord anywhere he led them, endure any hardship to which his service invited them, attempt any task that his word bade them do. Their consecration was new only in its depth of purpose, clearness of vision, and completeness of abandonment. Shall we enter into this larger fellowship with those early believers? The prayer-meeting affords one of the most effective means of realizing this consecration. Where a few are met in his name, he has promised to be; and if Christians but believed what Jesus said, our prayer-meetings would be far more largely attended, and more fruitful in spiritual blessings.

MISSIONS IN JAPAN—Micah 5:2, 4, 12, 13.

For the Leader.

We have this evening another missionary topic. This reminds us that anything that is Christian is by divine intention missionary. Anything that is non-missionary is to that extent non-Christian. Anything that is anti-missionary is so far anti-Christian. These are plain words, but they are true. The truth must be told at times in a most striking and shocking plainness of speech. So let this startling statement be made. We must come to a full consciousness of the place God intended missions to occupy in our lives. He wants not someone here and someone there to give to missions, and to have the cause go on in a respectable way, but he wants every Christian to be a missionary or a missionary Christian. How is it with us to-night? Let us see in the meeting which follows.

For the Members.

1. The lesson from the book of Micah declares that the little city of Bethlehem was not to be ranked with the unimportant cities of the world, for the reason that one should go forth from that city who should be the ruler of a multitude of people; one who should bring every knee to bend and every tongue to confess that the way of life was in God's keeping, and that he had revealed it only in Jesus the Christ. If happy the city that gave birth to this founder of missions, how happy the city to-day that accepts and sounds out the Word of life; and how happy the church that is found walking in the good way of missions.

2. The lesson, again, tells us that the Coming One shall feed his flocks in the name of Jehovah, and thus gives us to understand that it was not in the strength or authority of man he would undertake and carry forward his work. This thing of missions, it is not of incidental or accidental occurrence in the gospel of Christ. And we must know that it must not be of one's own choosing whether it shall form a part of his adherence to Jesus the Christ. True, it may be made so, but the one who does it legislates Christ in so far out of his heart and obedience. He puts in its stead his own think-so. He thus makes void the commandment of God with the philosophy of men. One must be missionary. He cannot choose without un-Christing himself.

3. Again, the lesson says he shall be great unto the ends of the earth. Beginning at Jerusalem, where he had been rejected, Jesus, in the work of his disciples, started on a circuit of the globe. His forces began a slow, but sure, conquest of every religion, and of every nation upon the face of the earth; Judea, Samaria, Antioch, Asia Minor, Macedonia, Athens, Corinth, Rome. After that the forests and vales of the north. Then the ancient Briton's territory. Then the New World. Then came a period of modern missions, and the churches began to awaken to a new conception of the world-wide nature of the gospel. Missionaries were sent to India, to China, to Siam, to the Islands of the Sea, to Japan—the ends of the earth. In the conquest of Japan now going on, and a conquest in which Christianity is gaining every day, the gospel has belted the world.

4. The results of the reception of the gospel in the far off lands are foreshadowed in the lesson also. Witchcraft is dying. Idols and imagery, according to the vision of the prophet, should be broken. Charms should fail. Sin should be overthrown in its strongholds. Is this not so to-day where the gospel has come? Is it not the experience of every nation? The power of paganism is broken by Jesus the Christ. Men hear a new story. They see some things they have never seen before. They hear some things that they never considered in the councils of men before. They get a glimpse of the mission of man; a new spirit to live for humanity; a new conception of what one should be and do. Therefore, all the old ways of sin and folly fail. They turn away from dumb idols. They seek one who can hear, and one who is able to help when he is called upon for help. Japan has learned this lesson. There is no more profitable field for the missionary of the cross to-day than Japan.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Have I really tried to know and feel my duty and my opportunity to those who know not Christ?

"Some Things That Ought to be Said."

The Editor, Christian-Evangelist:—Under the above caption a writer who signs himself "Success" offers in the Christian-Evangelist of July 6 some criticisms on our state convention, and the state work of the past year. I beg permission to say a few words in reply.

He says, "It was hoped by many that a new order of things would be inaugurated at our Marshall convention," and proceeds to deplore the fact that nothing of the kind occurred. Will he kindly tell us just what is the "new order" he would like to see adopted? It has for many years been the work of our state organization to keep evangelists in the field to preach the gospel, convert sinners to the Lord, and build up churches of Christ in Missouri. Does he want to change this order? I presume not. The fact that he designates the election of Brother Udell as "a step in the right direction," would indicate that his complaint is of the official organization of our state work. If so, why did he not have the frankness to say so? But I know of no reason for so considering Brother Udell's election, for it is not the first time, by any means, that a business man has been chosen as our president. It is a wise thing, in my judgment, and has happened several times in the last few years.

Perhaps the "new order" he desires is the raising of more money for state work. If so, the state board would second his motion heartily. But we would remind "Success" that instead of "four or five thousand dollars," we have been raising between six and seven thousand dollars for state work. And, if we include the amount raised for Bible-school work and district work, as is done in other states, the figures will be doubled or trebled. I wonder just how much "Success" has contributed during the past two or three years, personally, or through his congregation, if he is a pastor, to this work whose meager success he deplores.

If, as our brother says, this state of things is not due altogether to "want of interest by the brethren in missionary work," will he not tell us to what it is due? If to lack of confidence in those who have been given charge of it, then let us know it, and give the trust into other hands. I can speak for the present state board in saying that they have never sought or desired the responsibility of its management, and would welcome release from it. It is unfair to them to put again upon them the burden of this work, and then criticise instead of co-operate.

If "Success" should give the information above requested, I suggest that he sign his proper name, that we may know that his ingenuous statement is correct, that he is not "personally interested." I hope so, also, that any who look at things as does "Success" will speak out in our next annual convention, and let us know what the "new order" is to be which shall multiply the offerings of our churches and increase the results of our state missionary work. We will all rejoice in such a consummation. W. F. Richardson.

"What is Christianity?" by Dr. Harnack, Not Indorsed.

The Editor, Christian-Evangelist:—Though the author's reputation may not be seriously hurt by the misleading report made in the Christian-Evangelist of his address at the Marshall convention, he begs to express his appreciation of the many kind things said on the grounds by preachers, young and old, and to assert his abhorrence of some of the positions taken by Dr. Harnack in his work, "What is Christianity?" wherein he repudiates the testimony of Matthew and Luke in regard to the miraculous birth of Jesus, the authorship of the Fourth Gospel, emptying it of all historical value, and virtually stripping the gospels of the miraculous element. While admitting the resurrection of the dead, he without just reason repudiates nearly all other miracles. The writer did not commend Dr. Harnack's "What is Christianity?" but referred to his "Expansion of Christianity" as establishing the basis of Paul's success as a preacher, since he built upon the conviction that all men were lost, without God and hope in the world, till convinced that the gospel was the power of God unto salvation. There was no direct reference to Higher Criticism, which does in fact leave the word of God emptied of divine authority, and hence unfit to awaken the enthusiasm of young men for the ministry. It was, and is, a fact, as statistics show, that where the so called liberal Christianity prevails in Europe and in America, fewer young men aspire to preach an eviscerated gospel. The report wholly omitted some of the central facts of the address, and assigned to the writer positions that he did not hold. We do not wish to stand before the readers of the Christian-Evangelist as commending favorably a book which, though written with the tongues of men and of angels, disrupts the foundation of our faith in Jesus who was both David's son and Lord. J. B. Jones.

[President Jones reads into our report more than it said. As to criticism of his speech, that is a matter of opinion about which "doctors may differ," but President Jones himself referred to his address as "rambling remarks." The writer of our report was not attempting any criticism or commendation. He merely stated that the treatment of the theme was not full, and sought, so far as the accommodations of his space would permit, to give an idea of President Jones' line of thought. What President Jones thinks was misleading, was the last sentence of our report which read: "President Jones was rather inclined to connect the condition of things with higher critical studies, yet he advised everyone to read Harnack's 'What is Christianity?'" Unfortunately, after our report was published, the notes from which it was written were thrown into the waste-paper basket, but we are very ready to believe that the ears did not catch correctly the name of the book of Harnack's which President Jones recommended his audience to peruse. In reference to higher criticism, President Jones spent some time in discussing critical tendencies, said he was not willing to concede that the process of thinking has only been developed in recent years, and, concluding this part of his address, asked: "Why speculate, when the world is in ruin?" With this part of his speech in mind, the advice to read any one of Harnack's books seemed a little strange to our reporter, and that is all that can be implied from our report. Our reporter must have been very unsophisticated if he supposed that President Jones would in any large measure commend Professor Harnack. We are glad, however, to give Brother Jones an opportunity to express himself plainly on the subject of both Harnack's books that he mentions.—Editor Christian-Evangelist.]

Family Circle

The Nest of a Blind Bird.

By Sophie Swett.

One of the summer visitors who had lingered at Squam until Grandsir Gilkey's birthday began to be talked of, had left a ten-dollar bill as a present for the old man.

Grandsir Gilkey was so old that he loved a toy and could sweeten the bitterness of life with a sugarplum; so old that he sometimes confused the happenings of seventy years ago with those of last week, and thought Ruthy Ann was his daughter Eleanor Mary who died when she was fifteen.

He was not grandfather to anyone in Squam, although he was known as Grandsir to everyone. He had wandered into the village on a frosty fall day, and sat, with his bundle beside him, on Aaron Gilkey's doorstep. He said his name was Hiram Gilkey, and thought his father and Aaron's were second or third cousins. He had been in a hospital a long time, he thought. Anyhow, there were a good many things that he could not remember about. His son had died and his daughter-in-law had married again. There didn't seem to be any room for him in her house.

Aaron shook his head over the suggested relationship, shook it with a contemptuous smile. He didn't know much about relations anyhow, he had always had to make his own way, he said. Aaron was a shipbuilder, and well-to-do for Squam.

His wife whispered to him eagerly and with frowns, behind the door. She said the poorhouse was the place for the old man; anyhow it was none of their business.

Grandsir Gilkey searched Aaron's face wistfully after the whispered conference, and without another word he got upon his trembling old legs and moved off.

Laban Gilkey, coming from his work in Aaron's shipyard, met the old man. Laban was Aaron's brother, but he had not been so prosperous. The pitiful tears of old age were trickling down the furrows of the wayfarer's cheeks. Half an hour later he was gleefully making "cats' cradles" for Ruthy Ann and little Abel in the coziest corner of Laban Gilkey's hearth.

Before long Laban's wife said boldly to Mrs. Aaron that she didn't know how she could get along without Grandsir. It was really he who carried Ruthy Ann through the measles that she had so very hard, and he who told Nutt such entertaining stories that he never wished to go down to the Point with the rough boys evenings. As for little Abel, he waddled after the old man wherever he went; there never was seen such a pair of friends.

Mrs. Aaron whispered darkly that Mrs. Laban thought it a feather in her cap to keep the old man. But by the time his second birthday in Squam came round—Grandsir remembered how old he was and insisted upon keeping his birthdays—Mrs. Aaron sent him a purple silk handkerchief as a present. She was a person who liked to be in the fashion, and Squam had begun to feel a certain pride in its very old man and to show him attention. People were fond of him, too, he was so gentle and kindly. And although he was so weak and childish, when he told of a sea fight off the port o' Spain, or of a mutiny on board a ship that he had commanded, there came a fire into his faded eyes and a ring into his quavering voice that made people say to each other with meaning nods that he had once been a man among men.

Mrs. Aaron asked Ruthy Ann to return the handkerchief to her when the birthday was over; Grandsir would forget all about it, she said and she could present it to him again on his next birthday! She was thrifty by nature, and she felt that it really did not pay to spend money on a simple-minded old man like that.

Then for eight successive years Mrs. Aaron presented Grandsir with that same purple silk handkerchief, and each time he received it with childish delight and touching gratitude. By this time Mrs. Aaron had almost forgotten, herself, that it was not a new present that she made to Grandsir, and she said to her intimates that she should not know what to think of herself if she allowed his birthday to pass without a gift.

Great trouble invaded the home where Grandsir was so happy. Laban Gilkey died suddenly, and the burden of the family's support came upon young Nutt's shoulders. Sturdy shoulders and a stout heart had Nutt; but while he toiled manfully in the shipyard, his eyes followed wistfully every ship that put forth to sea. He was only seventeen.

When Mrs. Aaron heard of the summer visitor's gift of ten dollars to Grandsir, she was in a fever of anxiety lest the old man should be allowed to spend his money foolishly. Ten dollars was a good deal of money in a poverty-stricken family like that, and of course Grandsir could really call nothing his own. She herself had given him some of Aaron's old clothes that ought to have gone to her sister's children down at Sacarappa.

Even Mrs. Laban drew Nutt back and privately murmured a caution as he and Grandsir were setting out for the Port to spend the precious ten dollars.

"There's a hard winter coming, Nutt, but I'm not thinking of ourselves. If you could make him see that he ought to keep it for a nest egg! Get him to put it in the bank, if you can, Nutt," she said earnestly.

"The man who gave it to Grandsir told him to spend it for whatever he liked, and he is going to. Nobody could stop him," said Nutt; and there was no regret in his tone, either, although he knew—none better!—that it was going to be a hard winter.

"Then I suppose it isn't our duty to say anything," said his mother, and her tone had relief in it. "He will enjoy spending it real well," she added and her tired eyes lighted beautifully with Grandsir's reflected pleasure.

Grandsir had a secret; he could not help chuckling over it and giving little gleeful hints of it to Nutt as they walked along. It was all about a fine compass that he meant Nutt should have. With all his fond old heart he had longed for it, for Nutt, when he had first seen it in a Port shop. It seemed to him like a beautiful dream coming true that now he could buy it. A faint shadow crossed his joyous brow as he tried to recall the price of compasses, which he had once known well. He hoped it would not cost so much as to prevent him from buying all the other things that he meant to!

But surely there was scarcely any limit to the purchasing power of ten dollars! A soft warm shawl for the mother—Grandsir could prattle of that, and he did. A pink fan for little Ruthy Ann! He had heard her talk wistfully with the other girls about a pink fan. Now she could have it in time for Maggie Doane's wedding.

Maggie Doane had been one of the children who had run after Grandsir and clamored for his stories when he first came; now she was to be married to Uncle Aaron's son. (Mrs. Aaron approved of the marriage because Maggie's old maid aunt was likely to leave her a thousand dollars.) It would be a fine wedding, and Ruthy Ann should have the pink fan, and Grandsir meant to buy Maggie Doane a little wedding present.

For little Abel there must be the best present of all! After all, there was no one quite so near to Grandsir's heart as little Abel. Had Nutt seen that fine model of a ship in Dockery's window? Grandsir drew him up to the window, fairly trembling with delight as he gazed.

Dockery was an old sailor with a wooden leg who kept a shop full of shells and sea curiosities and woodwork of his own carving, relying chiefly upon the patronage of the summer visitors.

It was indeed a fine miniature ship that filled one of Dockery's show windows. The old man clutched Nutt's arm eagerly. "She looks like—like—" His forehead knotted under its fringe of white hair and his eyes sought the boy's beseechingly.

Nutt knew what he meant, and his heart ached that he could not help him. He was seeking the name of that ship that he could never remember.

"It almost came then, Nutt!" he said. "But now it has gone again," he added, with a patient sigh.

"I'll just go in and see Dockery and have a nearer view of that ship," he said a moment after, his face brightening with the prospect.

"I'll go along and do my errands and then come back here for you," said Nutt; for Grandsir's interviews with Dockery were apt to be prolonged, and Nutt had but little time to spare from his work.

But when he returned, within half an hour, to the little shop, Grandsir had gone.

"He was so eager and excited that he couldn't wait. You see I gave him a good bargain!" explained Dockery.

The shop window where the miniature ship had been was now empty! Dockery was beginning to deck it with whales' teeth and branches of coral and shell chains and bracelets. Nut was not surprised when, hastening in search of Grandsir, he found him staggering under the weight of a great box. His face was radiant and Nutt tried to keep the dismay out of his own.

"I never thought of such a thing as really getting that ship for little Abel!" he gasped. "But won't he be pleased, though? Dockery asked twenty-five dollars for it, but he let me have it for ten! Season's over, and seeing I was an old friend, he said."

"Let me take it, Grandsir," said Nutt, cheerfully, although with a sinking heart.

"I declare I don't know but we shall have to get the expressman to carry it home for us! Why, that ship is almost big enough to go to sea in!"

Grandsir felt in his pockets, and suddenly the light was gone from his face.

"I hain't got a cent left, Nutt, not a cent!" he said in a tone of bewildered surprise. "I don't see how I came to forget about the compass and the warm shawl and the pink fan and Maggie Doane's wedding present!"

The muscles around Grandsir's mouth quivered and his faded eyes filled.

"Never mind! The ship is worth the money, anyway," said Nutt, consolingly, wondering at the same moment whether he could not get Grandsir the warm worsted jacket that he needed out of his next week's pay. "I'll get Chris Junkins to lend me his wheelbarrow to get the box home," he continued. "I tell you, little Abel will be pleased, and everybody will come to see the ship; you'll have a regular birthday party!"

But as Grandsir trudged homeward beside the wheelbarrow he murmured constantly, regretfully, of the presents he had not bought.

As they drew near home he said hopefully: "I've got an idea, Nutt, that there is something I can give Maggie Doane for a wedding present! I heard Ruthy Ann say that a handsome coverlet could be made of silk handkerchiefs sewed together, and that she had some lace she had crocheted that was just the kind they put between 'em. I don't know but she was hintin', bless her heart! but I never remembered then that I had the silk handkerchiefs your Uncle Aaron's wife has been givin' me every birthday! I don't remember exactly where I put 'em, but your mother'll know. There must be as many as six or eight of 'em now, and Ruthy Ann shall make a coverlet of 'em for a wedding present for Maggie Doane! Maybe I'd better just stop and tell your Uncle Aaron's wife what I'm going to do with 'em, seein' they were presents from her. Besides, I don't know as I've ever thanked her for 'em as I ought to. 'Twas real kind and thoughtful of her to remember me so."

Nutt turned his face away to hide a grim little smile. He thought he should like to hear what Uncle Aaron's wife would say about the silk handkerchiefs!

It happened that she was standing at her gate with a neighbor. Ruthy Ann was there, too, having just run over of an errand.

Mrs. Aaron colored high as Grandsir unfolded his plan of making Maggie Doane a wedding present, but she assented, making an effort to hide her embarrassment, and accepted the old man's fervent thanks.

"What else could I do," she said afterwards to Ruthy Ann, "with Maria Macomber standing there with her curious eyes and long tongue?"

Mrs. Aaron had called Ruthy Ann back as she was going away with the others, and she was half crying with vexation. "He will talk to everybody about those handkerchiefs, the stupid old thing!" she said. "You must pretend that you have mislaid them, Ruthy Ann! Who would have thought that the old simpleton had such a memory, after all?" But Ruthy Ann did not promise to pretend that she had mislaid the handkerchiefs. In fact, she was more troubled about the disappointment that Grandsir would feel when he knew that there was only one handkerchief than about Mrs. Aaron's share of the difficulty.

There was one person who highly approved of the way in which Grandsir had spent his ten dollars, and that was little Abel. He told of his wonderful present far and near, and as Nutt had prophesied, the house was thronged with people who came to see it.

Old Cap'n Maxwell, who had just come to live with his son, over on the Cape road, came over as soon as he heard about it. Cap'n Maxwell had been around the world as captain of a ship, and thought himself a great oracle in nautical matters, and it happened that he and Grandsir fell into a dispute. Grandsir was pacific and long-suffering, but he was not going to allow anyone to say that the vessel was "too narrer amidships"! So the argument became a heated one. Grandsir, especially, became so excited that Ruthy Ann and her mother were frightened, and had serious thoughts of sending to the shipyard for Nutt.

"She's just like the—the Pizarro!" shouted Grandsir suddenly. And then he arose to his feet, white and trembling. "That's the name that I've been trying for fifteen years to remember!" he cried. "That ship or—or getting so worked up, or something, brought it back to me. The Pizarro of Porchmouth! As second mate, mate and cap'n I sailed aboard of her for twenty years!"

Old Captain Maxwell removed his pipe from his mouth, hitched his trousers nautically, and stared, open-mouthed, at Grandsir.

"You don't happen to remember a shipmate named Dace, do you?" he asked after a moment's reflection, his irritating difference with Grandsir quite forgotten.

"Uriah Dace!" gasped Grandsir. "I've been thinking and thinking about him, but his name had got away from me 'long of the vessel's name. All them twenty years Uriah Dace and me was shipmates! He ain't living, is he? He'd be 'most as old as I am!"

"He died last spring down at Paquoit. Some of my folks down there send me The Paquoit County Journal. He had lived alone and been kind of miserly, and he left property worth fifteen thousand dollars and not a relative in the world—left it all to one of his old shipmates of the Pizarro if he was to be found—if not, to the Seamen's Home down at Paugus. Just as sure as you're a livin' man that money belongs to you! Hiram Gilkey! That was the name! I saw it myself in the paper. It said he was supposed to be dead because they had tried to find him and couldn't, and they couldn't hear of anybody that knew anything about the Pizarro. But I don't calculate you've got anything to do but just sail in and show your colors!"

Before night all Squam knew about the legacy, and one of the selectmen went down to Paquoit with Grandsir and Captain Maxwell to claim it.

As soon as he received the legacy Grandsir said he meant to have it secured to his "own folks"; he had found he wasn't fit to have the spending of even ten dollars.

And yet, if he hadn't bought that ship for little Abel! There's an old Norse proverb, "The nest of a blind bird is built by God."

No one doubted who Grandsir's "own folks" were, and it was all in vain that Mrs. Aaron sent posthaste to the city for seven purple silk handkerchiefs.—The Interior.

The Denton Party.

Bro. H. A. Denton of Maryville, Mo., has organized the territory—north Missouri—which we have assigned to him in a most efficient way, and will bring a large delegation to the San Francisco convention. He also conducts the official delegation for the Endeavorers of Missouri. He will leave Kansas City on Monday, August 7, at 11 A. M., over the Santa Fe, a day ahead of Official Train No. 7, as advertised in our circulars. This delegation offers the following advantages.

1. It goes a day ahead and avoids the crowd.
2. It has an extra day for the Grand Canyon or southern California.
3. Mr. Denton has lived six years on the Pacific Coast, and having a small party, can and will give personal attention to all his fellow travelers.
4. He will arrange for berths, rooms, meals and baggage of all who desire.
5. He plans a long thorough trip, and will bring the party back through Utah and Colorado.
6. Those who desire need not stop at Grand Canyon but can go on and have still another day in southern California. Our brethren will be in session at the state meeting at Long Beach, and a delightful convention can there be attended.

This trip offers all the features of a Santa Fe route, $50 from Kansas City for the round trip, $6.50 additional for the Grand Canyon, and $6.00 extra for return via Portland. We hope that north Missouri will be the banner section for attendance at the great convention.

Write Brother Denton as to reservation of berth and further particulars.

P. S.—Let me say in addition to what Brother Van Kirk says above that I am now closing up with those who are going with me. Sit down and write me at once so I can save place for you.

The motto of this party is "Head the Procession," therefore we go a day earlier than any other delegation. All the rest will have to follow. We get the first sight and the first taste. That's one "on" the boys.

The chances are it can't help it.

"My Duty to My Own Church."

By Virgie Campbell.

This is one part of the Christian Endeavor pledge to which the most strenuous objection has been brought by those who are opposed to the Christian Endeavor movement. It has been urged that it is within itself a sort of creed, binding the one that subscribes to it forever to think as his church thinks; to believe as his church believes; in short, to accept without question the doctrines of the religious body to which he belongs; thus cutting off all possibility of being taught by some Priscilla or Aquila the way of the Lord more perfectly; that if this pledge had been in vogue from the earliest part of the last century it would have made impossible all the growth toward better things, in matters of belief, which that century brought as a wonderful blessing to the church of God.

It might be sufficient answer to this objection, to say that it is impossible that it should have this effect, even if this interpretation of the meaning of the pledge should be true; it would indeed be self-contradictory: I pledge myself also "to read my Bible every day." What for? To learn more perfectly God's will concerning me, and no human pledge must be permitted to stand in the way of my fullest acceptance of what my Lord would have me believe and do.

But this whole objection is based upon a misunderstanding of the meaning of the expression, "My own church." It does not refer to the religious body of which I am a member. When we speak loosely, we speak of the denomination to which we belong as "my church," but in no sense is it true. In that sense, I have no church, the religious body to which I belong, I am happy to believe, is the church of Christ. It is his, not mine, even as I am not my own, but, purchased by his own precious blood, I am his. So of the church he said, "On this rock I will build my church."

Evidently the expression, "My own church," refers to the particular congregation of which I am a member; for me, it means the South Side Christian church, in Kansas City. I am pledged in the sight of God and man to perform my whole duty to that congregation of Disciples of my Lord Jesus Christ, and the question of the moment is, what is my duty to that particular congregation and how can I best perform it?

1. I can be loyal to my own church, do my duty towards her, by attending the regular services as much as is in my power. Our book of instructions says that we are "not to neglect the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is." By regular attendance I help my pastor. There is nothing so discouraging to the faithful preacher as to face empty seats; even as there is nothing more inspiring to him than to have a number of "regulars" who, in all kinds of weather, and through all kinds of difficulties, and in spite of all kinds of hindrances, will be found in their places upon the Lord's day. Many a good sermon, doubtless, has been spoiled by the absence of those whose presence the preacher had the right to expect, and many a sermon, that would otherwise have been spiritless and tame, has been filled with blessed inspiration by the very sight of a large, expectant, faithful congregation. I believe it was our own gifted Moses E. Lard who said, "The man that can preach as well to a small audience as he can to a large one is not fit to preach at all." Whether this is true or not, certainly there are but few preachers who are not susceptible to the presence or absence of expected auditors.

Then it not only helps the minister in his ministrations, but this regular attendance on my part has its influence upon the unconverted who know me. If they see that any trifling cause is permitted to keep me from the meetings of the congregation, they easily get the idea that my conception of the value of religion is not very large, and they will make their estimate accordingly. "If this woman," they say, "believed what is written in the Bible she would be found in her place in the house of the Lord—I guess there is not much in it anyhow." And upon the other hand, the constant, persistent attendance on the services of the sanctuary has its influence for good. If, in spite of difficulties and hindrances, I am found in my place, others may "see my good works and be constrained to glorify my Father which is in heaven." There is no surer way of advertising my loyalty to "my own church" than by regular attendance on her services.

2. But I must not be content with that which is known as the regular services. "My duty to my own church" as an Endeavorer is not performed unless I am in the Bible-school, either as a pupil or a teacher. An Endeavorer is first, last and all the time a helper. In the war of the Revolution they had companies of what they called "minute men"—they were ready for service at any minute. So the band of Christian Endeavorers in each congregation should be minute men and women, ready, on an instant's notice for any service, and in the Sunday school especially can I be greatly helpful to my own church.

3. Of course it goes with the saying that I will be in all the meetings of the society which it is possible for me to attend. The mere statement of this receives the hearty assent of all, but let us remember that this service is merely a help to the main service of the congregation, and that when I leave at the end of the Endeavor service and fail to be in the church service I am doing the very thing that is not helpful to my own church. But when I am in the Endeavor meeting my duty—a cold word—demands more than my mere presence; I must be ready for any call—any service.

4. Then I must give my own church all the help financially that I can. A true Endeavorer is never a "dead head," he will pay his way. A religion that costs nothing is of little value. For that which we love, we will give. If we do not give, it is a sure sign we do not love. Neither am I released from this obligation because it is but little that I can do, or because there are others more able than I. I must stand in this for myself before the Lord. "To my own Master I stand or fall."

5. But above all, my duty to my ow church demands such a life that men shall take knowledge of me that I have been with Jesus. A pure life is the best advertisement of the religion of Jesus Christ. Here is every one's opportunity. I may be, like Moses of old, "slow of speech" and not able to say much; I may be like the widow of the scriptures, poor, and not able to give much; others may shine more brightly here, but in this one thing, the greatest, the chiefest, the supreme thing, a life so like the life of Jesus that it shall be a constant advertisement of his love for me and mine for him, I am the peer of any one. Other things may be denied me, but this one privilege, one great joy of being able to say, "The life that I live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me," this is mine, and in doing this I am doing "my duty to my church."

Christian Church Convention
California

The Christian Church will hold its International Convention
at San Francisco, Cal., August 17 to 24

The Santa Fe is the best way there

Santa Fe

It's the shortest line to Southern California and a direct route to San Francisco—the time is fast—the weather is cool in summer—the track is oil-sprinkled and practically dustless—the mountain scenery is magnificent—one management all the way insures satisfactory service, start to finish—and Harvey serves the meals, the best in the West.

Tickets on Sale August 6 to 14, good to return in 90 days, from Middle-West states—on sale a day earlier in the East.

Round-trip Ticket rate via direct routes, $62.50 from Chicago, $57.50 from St. Louis, $50 from Kansas City, with stop-overs in Colorado and West.

Regular Service

The Santa Fe runs four trains to California. The California Limited is fastest and most luxurious—equipped with compartment, observation and drawing-room Pullmans, buffet-smoker and dining car. The California Fast Mail is almost as swift; the other two are called the Los Angeles and San Francisco Expresses; all three carry standard and tourist Pullmans and chair cars.

Special Excursion

Christian Church Special (equipped with standard and tourist Pullmans) leaves Dearborn Station, Chicago, via the Santa Fe, 10 p. m., Monday, August 7, leaves Kansas City 11 a. m., August 8, and arrives Los Angeles 6:00 p. m., August 12, stopping several hours at Albuquerque, N. M., Redlands, Cal., and Riverside, Cal.; also one day at Grand Canyon of Arizona. Personally conducted by a representative of the Santa Fe. Mr. G. W. Muckley, Corresponding Secretary, Board of Church Extension, American Christian Missionary Society, Mr. R. H. Waggener, National Superintendent, Christian Church Y. P. S. C. E., and Mr. Chas. A. Young, of the "Christian Century," will be in charge.

Grand Canyon Side Ride will cost $6.50 extra for railroad ticket, $1 extra for Pullman, and reasonable amount for accommodations at El Tovar hotel. The most wonderful scenic spectacle in the whole world, worth going thousands of miles to see. No extra charge for Redlands and Riverside side-rides through California orange groves.

Not room here to give full particulars. Won't you write to me for all the facts?

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

With the Woodneys.

THE FIFTH DAY BEGINS.

Mr. Worth Acre the next morning woke up early, as usual, and he and Arthur dressed before it was broad daylight. The blacksmith again expressed his regret over sending the youth away without his breakfast, and again declared that he would try to reconcile his grandfather to the other's company. Arthur spoke of the grand dinner at G. C. D. Woodney's. "In that case," said Mr. Acre, "all will be gone but you. Now, I'm not going to have you left there to eat a cold snack, while all the family are off on a festival. You come around to me at six o'clock, and I'll arrange matters."

Arthur smiled gratefully. "If you think your grandfather won't mind," he said.

"Well, grandpa will mind," returned Mr. Acre. "At least, I think he will; but you can hardly ever predict the old gentleman. You can predict the weather, and sometimes hit it; but not so the old gentleman. However, I'll be with you first, and I'll see you through." To the lad, this sounded almost as strange as joining the Masons, but he promised to come at six that evening. When they went out into the court, Arthur saw the black woman who had been Worth Acre's nurse. She was standing in another door of the court, watching him, and she did not appear to entertain a friendly eye. She was very fat and very black, with enormous feet, which seemed to challenge the skill and resources of the shoemaking industry. Her head was tied up in a red bandana; here and there a little twisted wisp of hair had escaped and showed the bits of dingy cotton string which bound it together.

"Mawnin', Mr. Wutn," she said.

"Aunt Tabby," said Worth Acre, "this is the young man I was telling you about."

"Yes, I reckoned it was," said Aunt Tabby, and she went into her door, either to show Arthur that she could get through the opening in spite of her size, or because she was displeased at his being there.

"Aunt Tabby is dreadfully spoiled," said the blacksmith in a low voice, stopping at the court entrance between the two ends of the house. "She has had only me and grandpa so long that the sight of company of any kind seems to worry her almost to death. Well, good-by, and come around to me at six."

Arthur went away slowly, for it was still more than an hour till his own breakfast-time. The house of the Misses Day was the only one between Horseshoe House and the Woodneys'. The three maiden sisters were, of course, already astir, and smoke from the back chimney told its tale of good cheer; but none of the Woodneys were awake. When Arthur came to the yard, a sight met his eyes which caused him to start violently, turn pale, and then red. He was looking upon a tragedy, and indignation leaped up in his breast. The grass which he and Bob Enderthorpe and Peter Wren had set with so much labor, and which had been uncovered that the night dew and coolness might refresh it, was in dreadful peril. A tall, long-legged, vigorous young cock was in the very midst, scratching with all his might and sending blades of greenness whirring through the air. He had already demolished half a wheelbarrow of sod. Arthur stood a moment petrified with surprise and wrath. Then he picked up a small clod and threw it. The cock fell over, quite dead. It was a small clod and Arthur had no sort of reputation for hitting what he threw at. He had not expected to hit the fowl, but he had hoped to scare it. But the cock had been killed before it had had time to be scared. It was Arthur now who was frightened. He felt deep remorse as well, for he shrank from wounding any sort of animal. He bent over the chicken, and shook it. How strange that it had been alive and scratching but a few minutes before! It seemed that there ought to be some way to get the life back into it, but the film had closed over the eyes and the head swung this way and that when the body was held in air. Well, it was dead, and must be disposed of. It was no longer of use to anybody. Arthur concluded to bury the chicken and thus atone as far as possible for his deed. The spade still lay in the wheelbarrow in the next yard. He went over to borrow it. He knocked on the door, but no one heard him, because Miss Polly, Miss Susie and Miss Lizzie were all hard at work, one at getting breakfast, one at making the beds, and one at sweeping. Arthur concluded to take the spade and explain on his return. He came back into the Woodney yard thinking someone would be up by this time; but no sound issued from the house. He looked about for a good burial-site and concluded to dig a grave under the plank walk that ran before the front yard. It would be out of the way under the walk, and if buried in the Woodney yard it might have to be exhumed during the sodding. As the road dipped before the Woodneys', the Days' and the Enderthorpes', and as the sidewalk kept on a level, it was about six feet from the walk before the Woodney gate, to the ground under it. Arthur climbed down under the "bridge," as Mace had called the walk, and dug a hole near two supports of the walk, which were crossed in a way to make the letter "x". He buried the dead and returned the spade and wheelbarrow, still without having been seen. He began to wonder if it wouldn't be just as well to say nothing about killing the chicken. It had deserved death for scratching up such laboriously gotten grass in an alien yard. It had been slain as a trespasser. Again, Arthur had not intended to kill it, and as he had cast a small clod, and not a rock, nobody could have had the right to suppose that he would have killed it. Being, therefore, not to blame in the act, and having no intention to conceal it when he went for the spade, there seemed no use to say anything about it. If anybody asked, of course he would tell just what had happened.

It was old Mrs. Woodney who first discovered the havoc that had been wrought in the yard. "I wonder you didn't find that chicken at work," she exclaimed, "for the earth is fresh where he scratched."

"I did find him scratching," said Arthur, "and I threw at him."

"I wish you had knocked it over," cried the old lady. Arthur was just about to reply that he had "knocked it over," when Mr. Woodney said, "It would have been very wrong, mother, for the chicken was not to blame; it was merely following its instincts."

"When men follow their instincts," returned his mother, "they are given to the penitentiary; and when chickens follow theirs, the pot should be ready."

Arthur did not tell that he had killed the trespasser. During the day the sodding went on. Mace was very busy getting her dress ready for the evening dinner. By noon, she had finished sewing some old insertion in the bertha and in the yoke, and during the afternoon the sewing-machine was busy on the three ruffles of the skirt. It was a full skirt, and the dress was white batiste. There was a girdle to be made of some of her mother's old white silk. Altogether, she was so occupied that she could hardly look out of the window, and so tired that she wondered if she would be hungry when the grand dinner was set before her. Arthur saw her at the noon meal—which was a very slight affair, "because," said Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, "we must save ourselves." Arthur knew nothing about the white batiste with its full skirt and its yoke and bertha, and he could only see the girl as she was. She wore one of her oldest dresses and her hair was tumbled; her collar was a little awry; her shoes were the old ones with that place in the toe that shows where a hole is coming. The leather had been fine in its day, but it had seen so much of the world, it no longer tried to hold itself up stiff, so there was a general air of flatness and letting-down about both feet. Bob Enderthorpe, coming to the house for a drink, found her at her sewing. Her cheeks were flushed, her fingers nimble, her eyes so busy they had no time to look at him. He stumbled against a chair in passing through the room, and knocked it with his shin on returning. He thought he had never seen such a picture of grace and comfort. The old shoes had such a homelike air, the rumpled hair seemed on a childhood's holiday, the collar spoke of cheerful industry, and the cheeks had gathered fresh roses. Arthur did not see what Bob saw; something was before his eyes. Perhaps it was the charming face and form of Jennie Woodney; perhaps it was that dead cock. He had hardly been at ease since the assassination. Perhaps he would tell yet. He thought he might confess to-morrow. He hadn't done wrong; or, he hadn't meant to. Yes, to-morrow would be Sunday, and no sodding could go on then. Now, he hadn't time to enter into the subject; he would wait.

O, Arthur Lowell!

HAY-FEVER
AND
CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific. Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Closses, 126 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York for the mansion of G. C. D. Woodney. Before that, Arthur had wandered away somewhat mournfully to the "festival" Worth Acre had promised him. He came to Horseshoe House and hesitated at the entrance to the court. He had never entered alone. As he stood there, wondering why the blacksmith did not come forth, a thin man, dry and wrinkled, stepped lightly through the entrance, and fastened piercing eyes upon him.

"Ah!" he said to Arthur, "so you have come at last."

"Yes, sir; it is hardly six yet," said the other. There could be no doubt that this old gentleman was the grandfather. "Is Mr. Worth Acre here?"

"He is not here," said the other in a low, emphatic voice. "Listen! They are coming by that road. Come!" He touched Arthur on the arm and showed him the country road, which ran from the west end of town. "They have threatened to have my life."

"Your life!" echoed Arthur in amazement.

"My life! You understand? They mean to kill me. Now, there is not a second to lose. I want you to stand at yonder gate, and watch for them—an old, old man—much older than I—followed by four horsemen. When you see them coming over the hill, rush, rush—you understand? rush into the court! Close and lock the gates!"

Arthur was terrified. "You want me to stand at Mr. Tumbleton's gate and watch for four horsemen?" he gasped.

"Tumbleton? Tumbleton? I know it not," said the other. "When the old, old man comes over the hill with the four horsemen, rush to me—rush!"

"Hadn't I better go for Mr. Worth Acre?"

"Go for him? No! While you were gone, they might come," cried the old gentleman, who was now in the wildest excitement. "Take up your post at that gate, the last gate in the town. There is not an instant to lose. Run, lad, run for your life!"

It did not occur to Arthur to suspect the old gentleman of an unsound mind. Mr. Worth Acre had bragged about the remarkable strength of his grandfather. Arthur ran to the Tumbleton gate and strained his eyes upon the horizon, while his heart palpitated with fear and excitement. It was a little comfort to him to see in the saloon-door just across the way, the fat form of Mrs. Hoogan. He wondered hazily if old Mr. Acre had committed a crime, and if the four horsemen were the sheriff's posse coming to seize him. He thought of the chicken buried under the sidewalk, and felt a thrill of sympathy for the old man hiding from the avengers. Presently, he saw a cloud of dust rising above the brow of the distant hill. It rolled slowly and heavily upward, and the lad, fancying he already saw the horsemen and their venerable leader, rushed for Horseshoe House.

Business Notes.

"Gloria in Excelsis" has not come to stay, for they are going out now in goodly numbers to those wishing the song book of this century.

"What is Your Life?" by Russell, is one of the books to put into the hand of any young friend, especially one leaving home even for a time. Price, $1.00.

Have you read "The Simple Life," by Charles Wagner? Think of such a book at 50 cents postpaid, in good cloth binding, full of splendid, purest thought.

The devotional books, "Alone with God," "Heavenward Way," and "Half Hour Studies," are always in demand and always acceptable. In good silk cloth, 75 cents each.

Our Bible school buttons, with Scripture texts and scenes in the Life of Christ, at 15 cents a dozen, postpaid, are meeting with favor wherever used and will grow in use among our classes once trying them. Try a dozen.

In marriage certificates, booklets and such like, we are fully equipped and will take pleasure in sending you our circular, with full list of the stock on hand and prices of same. Command us in any way possible.

Have you seen the "Dime Album," with spaces in it for securely putting away ten dimes, and by which the children easily enlist their friends in raising funds for many good purposes? Price, 5 cents each, good for years.

Our Cradle Roll stock is complete; so that we can furnish any and all our schools with everything needed for this happy phase of interest.

We have another new supply of Reward Cards in stock, and will be glad to furnish our schools or teachers with a list of what we have in hand, prices ranging from 10 to 30 cents per package, postpaid. We keep the best.

Has your school used the red and blue buttons or has either of your Endeavor Societies tried them? We have them for both branches of the work, selling either red or blue, for either society or school, at 1 cent each in any quantity.

A friend induced us to sell him a book for about the cost, then sent us a local check for the amount, less than one dollar, so that in helping him we worsted ourselves. Do not send us local checks, but if you do, add 15 cents for collection.

Have you seen our "Attendance and Offering Card," by which the children are induced to come on time, and to make their offerings for the Master? They are 1 cent each and will triple the offerings in any school. Samples sent.

Our "Birthday Banks" are really handsome glass globes on which the margin is very small, but which we carry for the good of the schools; selling them at 35 and 50 cents and $1.35, postpaid, we will guarantee that you can get nothing nicer for the money from any publishing house.

"The Gospel of Matthew," by Peloubet, was put on the market to sell at $1.25, the author having arranged to write a commentary on the entire New Testament, and for teachers, too; but by some hitch, the work for the time being was discontinued, and the present book is offered you, postpaid, for 50 cents, making it worth your while to have it if only for reference.

We have had to make another shipment of "The Christian Worker's Bible and Christian Worker's Testament," but will be well stocked before these notes are read, and we can fill your order or give you any information.

Examine our vacation books in this column, for they are the rarest bargains we ever offered for the summer reading and we shall be glad to have our patrons take advantage of it.

"Do you keep 'The Christian Worker'?" inquires a friend from Brooklyn. No, we do not, it is too good a book to keep, but we are sending them out at 75 cents each and no one has ever complained of not getting the worth of his or her money. It is good for young ministers, or older ones, it is good for elders and deacons to have with them, and it is good for any one wishing information on the church and its organization, equipment, service and work. Any consecrated Christian is helped by it.

The boys and girls will soon be off for the summer, and will want some good reading to take along. We have "The Young Buglers," "By Pike and Dike," "The Young Midshipman" and "Through the Fray," also "The Bravest of the Brave," and such like books reduced from 75 to 35 cents. If the girls wish something special, we have "Six to Sixteen" and "Six Little Princes," and "Book of Golden Deeds," also "Wild Kitty" and "Our Bessie" and "Four Little Mischiefs" and "Esther," reduced from 75 to 35 cents.

For older folks: "If I Were King" and "The Resurrection," also "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Virginians," also "Gordon Keith" and "In the Palace of the King," also "The Right of Way" and "Captain Ravenshaw." All of the above are $1.50 books, selling at 60 cents, postpaid. Our stock is complete.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events.

Peary and the North Pole.

Lieutenant Peary is off again for the Pole. One day last week, amid the waving of flags and the tooting of congratulatory whistles, his ship, the "Roosevelt," sailed out of New York harbor. Peary himself was on shore when the vessel sailed, but will proceed as far north as possible by rail and then join his crew. This is his tenth trip into the Arctics and he believes that he has at last devised a plan and a route which will give the largest possible chance of success. It is, indeed, a very clever plan and one which seems, at this distance, as likely as any to succeed. The problem of getting to the Pole is essentially the problem of carrying enough provisions to sustain the party from the last base of supplies to the destination and back again. The latter element, getting back again, doubles the difficulty but without it the joy of getting to the Pole would be clouded by the fact that no one would ever know that it had been done. Peary's plan is to go as far as possible in his ship, which has been specially constructed to resist enormous ice-pressure and to be lifted out of the water rather than crushed by jamming floes. It is hoped to get the vessel to the northern shore of Grant Land, or within five hundred miles of the Pole, before the ice becomes impassable. If that cannot be done this summer, they will get as far as possible this summer and try it again next spring. Arctic exploration has the merit of teaching patience. In any case, this fall or next, winter quarters and a permanent base will be established at the point mentioned. Then, when the long Arctic night is broken by the first streak of daylight, about February, the ship will be abandoned and the overland journey to the Pole will be begun. And this is the clever part of the plan. The great difficulty has been to carry provisions enough to supply men and sledge-dogs on the trip. Peary will have more dogs and more sledges than usual and the expedition will be divided into three sections, all starting together and each carrying as much provisions as possible. From the start, the men and dogs of the entire party will subsist on the provisions carried by the first section and when that is exhausted the first section will return to the base of supplies. The remaining two sections will proceed, using the supplies carried by the second section, which will also return when its supplies have been reduced to the point where there is just enough to enable it to get back. The third section will then be, according to the calculation, two-thirds of the way from the base of supplies to the Pole, with its own supplies untouched. Using these, the dash to the Pole will be made and the return commenced without unnecessary delay. At about the point where the second section was left, the first section, which has returned with a new lot of provisions, will be met. Farther back, the second section will meet them with still more supplies, and the whole party will come in together as it went out. Of course a good many things are likely to happen to disturb the symmetry of this scheme, but it has been carefully wrought out by the man who has had more experience in arctic exploration than any other living man. We heartily hope that he will succeed and break the fatal charm which the North Pole has possessed for bold navigators for the past century.

Enforcement of the Law.

Attorney Jerome, of New York, has had a good deal of the idealism knocked out of him in the course of his many campaigns for municipal decency in his city. His work has been excellent and effective, and he has not yet lowered his arm, but there is evident in some of his more recent utterances a new note of cynicism which indicates that he has lost some of his spirit if nothing of his strength. During his recent western tour, he commented favorably on the general tenor of Governor Folk's work, but gave the opinion that much of it was impractical. He said, "I am sore with banging my own head against unenforceable laws. But I had to. I have got to do it. It is my duty. But I know that I cannot succeed, because the people do not believe those laws have a sound moral sanction." That is rather a sad utterance for one in Mr. Jerome's position and with his experience. He is talking particularly about Sunday closing laws, but it applies equally to all laws that may be locally unpopular with the most assertive element of a community. We may count on it that the attorney who believes his task to be an impossible one is not going to "bang his head" against the stone wall any harder than his sense of duty absolutely demands, and it is pretty sure that the force of his blow will diminish as his conviction of its ineffectiveness increases. We prefer Folk's dictum, which is but a repetition of Roosevelt's motto as police commissioner of New York, that the remedy for a bad law is not to ignore it but to enforce it. Public opinion has a much better chance to register itself in the making of laws than at any other time. The representatives of a million people may enact a certain law, and a thousand noisy and persistent malcontents whose interests or habits are interfered with by it may create the impression that public sentiment is overwhelmingly against the law. The official who tries to regulate his enforcement of law according to the apparent support of public sentiment, is peculiarly liable to such errors of judgment, letting the noisy and obstreperous thousand outweigh the orderly and silent million. The safest thing for him to do, if he wants to be with public sentiment, is to enforce the laws which have been enacted by the representatives of the people.

Party Government.

A well-meaning preacher, with a hearty and wholesome belief in reform, recently nominated Hanly of Indiana and Folk of Missouri as candidates for president and vice-president in 1908. The fact that one of these gentlemen is a staunch Republican and the other a sound Democrat did not in the least enter into the calculations of this volunteer nominating committee. He knew that they were of diverse politics but passed it off lightly by saying that he did not think that would matter in the case of men who stood so conspicuously for righteousness. Now, there can be no doubt of the importance of honesty as an issue in any election at the present time. Nearly any of us would rather vote for an honest man of the opposing party than for a grafter of our own political faith, and in local elections the tendency to overleap party lines and find the best man is most gratifying to all good citizens. But while party politics has no real meaning in connection with the government of a city, and very little in the government of a state, it is an element not to be ignored in the administration of national affairs. There the issues upon which party platforms are drawn have a real significance. It is of course essential that we have an honest man in the presidency and one who will enforce the laws, but it is also essential to have one who will support wise policies in national and international affairs. Upon these matters parties are divided, and to elect a conglomerate ticket, composed of honest men of opposite political beliefs, would be a curious folly. Perhaps it is scarcely necessary to speak so seriously of such an obvious error, but it is worth while, in the midst of our much needed emphasis upon civic righteousness and our criticisms upon blind partyism, to remember that, in federal affairs at least, parties are an indispensable feature of our government.

Saint Columbus.

It is announced from Rome that Christopher Columbus is about to be canonized as the patron saint of America. The ceremony is to take place on the four hundredth anniversary of his death, May 26, 1906, and at the same time a statue of Saint Christopher Columbus is to be erected in the Vatican. This ought to be a great gratification to America, for there has never been a saint whom this continent could claim indisputably as its own. To be sure, we have been getting along very well in our unsanctified condition, but with Columbus elevated to the status where he can be employed as an intercessor in our behalf at the throne of grace, we ought to flourish and abound. The canonization of Columbus will be somewhat unusual, for that honor is usually reserved for those who have given evidence of exceptional piety during life or (in the absence of piety) for distinguished ecclesiastics, who made up in rank what they lacked in religion. In general, miracle-working power during life or evidence of miraculous power of the bones after death is a pre-requisite to canonization, though this rule is not absolute. Living persons, of course, are never canonized, and, as a rule, two or three centuries must elapse before the natural and gradual accretion of legend furnishes a sufficient body of “well-attested” miracles to warrant canonization. Elevation to the dignity of sainthood is not intended as an idle compliment to the virtues of the deceased. In return for the honor that is paid to him, the saint is expected to act as intercessor for those suppliants who invoke his aid. In such a case, it is natural to give the preference to a saint who, even during his natural life, was known to possess wonder-working powers. Columbus cannot, so far as we are informed, lay claim to any such powers during life, but he will doubtless begin to make a record as soon as he is canonized. This particular event is only another illustration of that age-long disposition of the papacy to take to itself the credit for any good thing that is done. Columbus, to be sure, was a good Catholic and the early explorers who followed him were children of their superstitions age, to the extent of asking the pope's permission to sail uncharted seas and occupy unknown lands. But the prosperity of the new world which Columbus ran into by accident while he was looking for China, has been in proportion as it freed itself from the domination of the papacy. The canonization of Columbus will not help the country a great deal, we fear.

Mrs. Eddy's Catechism.

Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy has put forth a message to her Christian Science fold. It is said to be her last pronouncement, and it is in the form of a catechism. We always like to give the Christian Scientists a chance to speak for themselves, for otherwise they always feel misrepresented. Here are some of Mrs. Eddy's questions and answers. Notice the naive absence of relevancy between the question and its answer in some cases and the characteristic ambiguity of the answer in others, as in the ones about the new religion, natural science, and surgery:

“Is Christian Science a new religion?”

“Yes, a new old religion and Christianity.”

“Does it stand in relation to Christianity as Christianity did to Judaism?”

“Somewhat.”

“Are you an interpreter of Jesus' teaching or have you presented that which is new to his teachings?”

“An interpreter thereof.”

“Is the textbook of Christian Science the word of God in the same sense as the Bible is?”

“All truth is of God and Christian Science is eternal truth, demonstrable, based on a fixed principle and rules, and is susceptible of proof.”

“Is ‘Science and Health, a Key to the Scriptures,’ a fulfillment of the New Testament promises of a latter day revelation?”

“It is.”

“Is Christian Science in antagonism to natural science?”

“No, not to natural spiritual science. There is no material science.”

“Does Christian Science discourage the study of natural science or any portion of it?”

“It is gained by study and rightness.”

“Does it deny the existence of disease germs or merely assert man's superiority over such forces?”

“It denies the existence thereof.”

“Does Christian Science expect its followers to live immediately as though entirely spiritualized beings?”

“No.”

“Is it proper for a Christian Scientist to disregard the laws of hygiene or merely to disregard them if circumstances make it necessary?”

“To disregard all that denies the allness of God's spirit and his laws.”

“May the Christian Scientist make use of physical culture, use especially nutritive foods or make use of fresh air treatment as aids to physical well being?”

“No, not necessarily.”

“Under any conceivable circumstances would a Christian Scientist make use of surgery?”

“Yes and no.”

“In case of infectious disease, would a Christian Scientist yield himself to the customary treatment of isolation and disinfection?”

“If the law demands it, yes.”

“Does a Christian Scientist regard poverty as a manifestation of disease?”

“No.”

“Is poverty a disease of society or of the individual?”

“Of both.”

“Can the individual, by the use of Christian Science, overcome a worldly defeat?”

“Yes.”

“If the world would abandon the study of disease and crime, and devote itself to the study of wealth, health and love, would criminals, cripples and poverty cease to exist?”

“They would.”

“Is there a doctrine taught by Christian Science that evil can be willed against another as well as good?”

“This doctrine is hypnotism. Christian Science can only produce good effects.”

“Has an evil mind power against a spiritual life?”

“Evil works against all good, if it works at all.”

“Do you regard death as a great world fear which the human race wills against itself?”

“Yes.”

“Does Christian Science advocate the abolishment of philanthropic institutions, as well as hospitals?”

“No.”

“Could society exist without jails and almshouses?”

“Not at present.”

Unionism in the Courts.

Little by little it is being impressed upon the labor unions that they are amenable to law and that they can and must be held legally responsible for the results of their acts. The fact that the unions are not incorporated has been an obstacle in the way of holding them to account in many cases. But now and then there is an instance in which this difficulty is surmounted. In one case not long ago, a corporation got judgment for damages in a suit against a labor union and collected the money by legal process from individuals who were members of the union. A non-union employe in a Massachusetts shoe-factory was discharged because he did not belong to the union. He brought suit for damages. In the course of the trial the employer testified that he had discharged the man because of a contract into which he had entered with the union binding him to employ only union men. He recovered damages and the Supreme Court of the state has affirmed the decision. In another case in New Jersey, a union hat-maker, whose card had been taken away for non-payment of dues and who had lost his place on that account, sued the union and recovered $300.

The Ohio Demand.

We think it is time for the political situation in Ohio to be changed. A Democratic governor who can overthrow the present boss rule in that state will be a real Godsend. It did not need Mr. Steffens' article in McClure's magazine to make us acquainted with the rule of Geo. B. Cox; and Governor Herrick's attitude toward the liquor question has put him out of court with a good many Republicans. The Democratic candidate is a Christian man of high integrity and we trust that, irrespective of political party and denominational affiliations, the Christian people of Ohio will see that their state shall be ruled in the interests of good, right and truth, rather than in that of the bosses.

Suggestions for the San Francisco Convention.

As the time approaches for our national convention at San Francisco our thoughts should be concentrated upon the things which should claim our attention in that great gathering. Of course there will be the usual reports both of the officers of the convention and of the committees. These should receive the most careful attention of those who are charged with making such reports, for much of the success of the convention depends upon the thoroughness with which its reports are worked out by the several committees having in charge its various interests. An ill-digested committee report may consume hours of time of the whole convention and finally either be rejected or referred back to the committee or passed in an unsatisfactory form.

But in addition to the routine work of the convention which, after all, is its important work, there are some matters claiming special attention about which the brethren should be thinking. One of these will be the time of holding these conventions. As we have already departed in this instance from the regular time the question is certain to be raised as to the wisdom of returning to the time fixed by the constitution. We have already discussed this matter in an editorial and have called for an expression of opinion from the brethren. So far it would seem there has been but little interest developed on the subject, or else our readers have endorsed the suggestions of our editorial. The chief suggestion on that subject was that the time should be located when it would accommodate the largest number of people, and that for this reason it should be placed in the latter part of June or early in September, just before or at the close of the vacation season. So far as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is concerned, the constitutional time suits us as well as or better than either of the months mentioned, but it is claimed, and we think with reason, that it interferes with the attendance of our college men, of preachers, and our business men, without whom we cannot hold a very successful convention.

Another important matter that will come before the San Francisco convention will be the closer unification of our national home missionary and state missionary societies and offerings. It has been recommended by both the Ohio and Missouri state conventions that the offerings for these two interests—state and national—be consolidated and that one day be selected for this joint offering to be divided upon an equitable basis. Since the work is essentially one there is no reason why there should not be a closer unification between our state societies and the national society, and there are cogent reasons why there should be a closer co operation. The more we can simplify our missionary machinery the more effective it is likely to be. This change, however, would involve a readjustment of days for our different general interests, and this is a question that needs the wisest judgment of our very best men and women. The problem is to be solved only by those who can see over the whole wide field and who are interested equally in the success of every department of our work—foreign and home missions, state missions, Christian Woman's Board of Missions, our educational interests and our benevolent work. No one of these must be overlooked or slighted. The problem of this adjustment will require time, consultation, and wise judgment.

Our suggestion for the San Francisco convention is that it appoint a large committee of representative men and women to take this whole question of the closer unification of our missionary societies, especially the state and national, and the readjustment of days for the offerings, under consideration for a year and submit its report to the next annual convention. This would avoid haste and give ample time for looking over the whole field and considering the question in all its bearings. Every religious body engaged in prosecuting its work along these different lines finds it necessary from time to time, in the light of its experience, and to meet the demands of new problems as they arise, to readjust its missionary machinery and methods to existing conditions. We must never suppose that we have reached perfection in our methods of work any more than in our theories and systems of thought. But these changes in methods and plans of work should be made only after mature consideration. Hence our suggestion for a year's time and for a large committee in order to a wise solution of this and other questions which, in the wisdom of the convention, may be referred to it.

"The Church of Christ."

This is the title of a notable book just issued from the presses of Funk & Wagnalls. If we mistake not, it will awaken a new interest and no little investigation and searching the scriptures. The publishers announce it as "A strong, remarkable and original work on the church from the view point of a layman of decided convictions and wide commercial and political experience. The author prefers to have the book brought out without any hint as to his identity—to have its contents considered entirely from the standpoint of their intrinsic worth and without any reference to the particular mind that produced them." This at once arouses our attention and speculation as to the authorship; and opening the volume we are immediately struck with the reverent, scholarly and Christian treatment of the great theme.

The author represents the Christian religion as original—unlike all other religions in its adaptation to all mankind, in its direct promises of eternal life, in its teaching concerning the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, in its offer of the forgiveness of sin, in its positive teaching and its missionary character. Book first treats of the history of pardon, and book second the evidence of pardon, and the church as an organization. Beginning with the kingdom of heaven, the writer considers the confession of Peter and the church of Christ; the greatness and authority of Jesus as a teacher; the Christ as the word; his passion; the supper and the communion; the three revelations or dispensations; the establishment of the church, Pentecost, the first gospel sermon and its results; the right division of the word of God; the great salvation; the preaching of Peter and John, Stephen and Philip; the province of miracles in the establishment of the church; then the conversions, the place of baptism and the divine confession; the work of Paul, and the call of the Gentiles; the answer to the question, "What shall I do to be saved?" and the operation of the Holy Spirit in conversion; the missionary work of the church; the first council in Jerusalem, and its decree; Paul's missionary journeys, his work at Thessalonica, Athens, Corinth, Rome, and the conversions under his preaching.

Part second discusses the assurance of pardon, the scripture terms as the only way of pardon; the promises, and the testimony of the Spirit over against that of the senses; the church as an organization with bishops or elders and deacons and evangelists; the ordinances of the Lord's day, the Lord's supper, and the Lord's baptism, and their monumental significance; the congregational polity, co-operation and extension, and the duties of church membership; apostasy, Christian unity, the basis of unity, the sin of division and wrong of creeds; denominationalism; the uniqueness of Jesus among all religious teachers. This is a beautiful volume of 366 pages.

It will be seen the book covers a wide scope. It is written in a very succinct and satisfactory style, however, its positions well buttressed by scripture texts and illustrated with scripture examples. Some of its teaching will, no doubt, meet with criticism, but its clearness and candor and eminent Christian spirit must commend it to most readers of every school of religious thought as a suggestive and valuable contribution to the literature on this subject. Whoever its author may be, it is evident at once that he is a devout student of the Holy Scriptures and a genuine lover of his kind. An impartial and serious examination of this volume will, we are satisfied, aid in the solution of the most trying and tremendous problems which confront our modern church. The claim that the church of Christ should be one and identical in organization, teaching, and practice with the New Testament church before the beginning of a creed, sect, or party; and that such unity, according to Christ's own word, is essential to its complete and final triumph, and must bring in the glad day when the kingdoms of the world shall become our Lord's kingdom, is surely a mighty one and worthy of the prayerful consideration of all lovers of the Christ. Our unknown author has done a good service and we trust he will meet with a wide reading. F. D. P.

Notes and Comments.

In these summer days the spiritual life is in grave danger. Its deadliest foe, says the Epworth Herald, is neglect.

This is the last call to the churches to respond to Brother Muckley's appeal, and report at once to him whether they will promise to take this year a collection for the church extension fund. The figures indicated on another page show that we are far short of the 2,000 churches which it was hoped would report in time to have their promises announced at the general convention in San Francisco. There is time for the churches still to report to Brother Muckley, but they must not delay in the matter. Send a post card at once, brethren, to 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., to reach him not later than August 2. Church extension must have a fund of half a million.

In a paper on "The Doctrine of Public Worship," the writer, Rev. F. K. Freestone, contending that the multiplicity of interests in life to-day is a contributory cause for the lack of church-going, emphasizes what is in our judgment the one thing needful. It is true, as he observes, that many have lost the old quiet ways in the din of many pursuits and the distractions of many cares. Brighter services and better sermons have been suggested as remedies, but while these are to be desired, as Mr. Freestone says, we rather need to inculcate a truer church idea, a keener conception of the church as the best means of realizing the higher truths and sympathies of religion.

The efforts of the saloonists and gamblers of St. Louis county to get around the closing orders are very persistent. It would be well if the people of the state would once for all make up their minds that, to quote Dr. Hillis, all the destroyings of God look forward unto some high form of saving. Is the closing of evil resorts a means of the saving of our youth? If it is, then we should make it very emphatic that we propose to back up the governor in his efforts to make the law supreme.

"I have more faith in the power of one missionary to uplift a nation than in the power of all the armies of the world to make one man better," says Mr. W. J. Bryan. Whatever one may think of that leader's political and financial views those who read the signs of the times religiously will agree with the Nebraskan's firm stand on behalf of missions and his statement that religion is not meant simply to save men in heaven, but it is also intended to teach them what this life really means.

The Presbyterian Banner quotes a remark from John Fiske, who said that "evolution is essentially Calvinistic." The Banner says of this remark, "We accept this conclusion and believe it to be strictly true of that form of the doctrine of evolution which is properly termed theistic. Science exhibits the gradual unfolding of a plan that must have originated in the divine mind." If that is the true idea of Calvinism, then we are all Calvinists! We are sure evolution is Methodistic, for method is evolution's strong forte. Perhaps in this way we can popularize evolution, after all, and make it orthodox.

More of the humanizing element and less of the lexicographer is what religion needs to-day. By which we do not mean that there is no place for the scholar or for the emphasis of doctrine. But the church is realizing the need and the education of its leaders is growing less academic. To understand humanity and apply the great truths of the great Teacher to its needs is the essential requirement in the ministry of to-day. The scholar who can discover the fine points of Greek roots has his place, but the man in the pulpit must have the capacity and the opportunity to benefit by the research of the scholar yet must himself know humanity better than Hebrew grammar. We might spend our lives in debate and accomplish nothing that would materially benefit the world.

This word concerning the true idea of education by Dr. Van Dyke of Princeton university, in an address before the University of California, is needed against a possible over-emphasis of the utilitarian idea of education:

> The hope of the democracy lies in the spread of education. The more important education is, the more necessary it becomes to have the right ideals.
> The marketable ideal of education would train a man chiefly in order to make him able to sell his work for larger wages. It would develop him from childhood up for some particular trade or business. It would try to make him merely a lawyer or a doctor, or an electrician or a merchant, or a carpenter or a preacher, instead of, first of all, making him a well-minded man. This marketable ideal is a mistake in a democracy, because it narrows men's thoughts, dwarfs their character and divides them into classes and guilds which can not understand one another because they have no common ground of sympathy. Broad manhood is what a democracy needs.

The Central Christian Advocate remarks: "When people say that we are not to interpret the Bible, but to believe it, they either use words which have no meaning or they are proposing to us to surrender that right of private judgment which, at heavy cost, we won from Rome at the time of the Reformation." There is a good deal of shallow demagoguery in the use of that and similar expressions, but it is quite as often the result of ignorance. The Bible is an ancient book, written by orientals to orientals, in highly tropical language, in tongues that are no longer currently spoken, and referring to usages and customs which are obsolete or unknown to occidentals. While the Way of Life is so plain that a wayfaring man need not err therein it propounds problems and suggests truths and principles that require the best scholarship and the best trained intellects. This is why it is absolutely impracticable to insist on uniformity of thought and thorough agreement in opinion on all questions of criticism and interpretation, as a condition of union and fellowship.

Our good brother, J. W. McGarvey, in his department of Biblical Criticism in the Christian Standard, says: "Nothing is made plainer in the scriptures than that Jesus did become the Son of God by being born of the Virgin Mary. The relation is not 'an eternal one growing out of the divine nature,' for it would be the height of absurdity to say God was by his nature from all eternity the father of Jesus Christ." What Professor McGarvey here calls the "height of absurdity" is the matured thought of the wisest thinkers and ablest scholars in the church. The position is that the manifestations in time of God as Father, Son and Holy Spirit, are but the expression of a triunity of nature, in terms of human speech, which existed in eternity. That is, the fatherhood of God is an essential part of the divine nature revealed to us in Jesus Christ but existing always. But it is evident that the idea of fatherhood cannot be older than that of sonship, for they are correlative terms, and the one implies the other. We are greatly surprised, therefore, to read such a statement from the pen of so mature a mind and so competent a scholar as Professor McGarvey. We are forced to the conclusion that he has not directed his thought very carefully to this particular subject.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Pentwater Musings.

For the past week the Easy Chair has been enjoying the novel experience of pioneer life. It has been a taste of boyhood days and has brought back memories of the long ago. On the fifteenth day of the seventh month, in the year of our Lord, 1905, the same being Saturday, the ancient Sabbath and the day preceding the Lord's day, we moved into our new cottage which is but the rear part of the cottage that is to be. The accommodations are scant and the furnishings few and simple, but it would be difficult to find a king's palace whose royal inmates enjoy its superb luxuries and splendid appointments so much as we have enjoyed this rude cottage here among the pines and hemlocks on the shore of Lake Michigan. We have been taking our meals from the top of a trunk which has served as our dining table until yesterday when our carpenter finished a new table for us. He has also fitted up a number of shelves in the cozy little kitchen, and now we are feeling a little uppish! The pride of the place, however, is our new well, sunk just in rear at the edge of the kitchen porch, which goes down sixty-eight feet through the sand and brings up the crystal water, pure and cold, making a drink excelling the mythical ambrosia of the gods. "The Pioneer" has three rooms fronting the lake, with a kitchen and porch in the rear. In this humble habitat we are living and working and enjoying life.

Not since the days we toiled in the harvest field or split rails, have we performed harder physical labor than during the past few days in cutting a hole in the wilderness and in clearing out a breathing space. The undergrowth had to be cleared out, trees trimmed, dead and useless trees felled, brush piled, roadways marked out and cleared. While this is very hard work if well followed, it is also very fascinating because it brings the instantaneous reward of enabling one to see what he has accomplished. One's best judgment, too, is called into constant exercise in choosing which trees and saplings are to be left and which are to be cut down. Here the law of the survival of the fittest holds good. The less healthy, the less beautiful and shapely, are hewn down, while the larger, more prosperous and symmetrical are spared. It is hard for a lover of trees to cut down even an ornery one but some must go for the benefit of those that remain, and to make room for the free passage of air. One can but believe that these beautiful trees here by the lake shore, many of them hidden hitherto from approach by a dense undergrowth, were planted here for the service of man. In trimming out the undergrowth of brush and in giving them a chance to be seen and admired, we feel that we are but carrying out the divine purpose. And after all it is this fact that gives zest and dignity to all labor.

The Easy Chair readers must not imagine from what we have said about the wilderness immediately surrounding the cottage that we are separated entirely from the world amd cut off from associations with our fellowmen. Our park lies immediately south of the settlement known as the Oceana Beach Company, and is connected with it by a splendid plank walk which we have just completed along the lake front half way up the side of the hills overlooking the lake. It is only about three or four minutes' walk to the excellent Club House of the Oceana Beach Company, which serves excellent meals and accommodates a limited number of guests, at most reasonable rates. A walk of eight or ten minutes from our cottage brings us around back to the little lake where we may row or ferry across to the village of Pentwater where all our simple needs can be supplied. There are churches, schools, and all the appurtenances belonging to an advanced civilization. If the point of a larger accessibility be raised, we are only a comfortable night's ride from Chicago by boat, or about the same time by rail around the lake over the Pere Marquette Railway. The Easy Chair has examined many of the resorts up and down the shores of Lake Michigan but nowhere has he found conditions so favorable for quiet resting and recreation, with the essential elements of pure air, cool breezes, pure water, nor more splendid woodland or lake views.

The weather for the past few days has been decidedly warm for Michigan, but the breeze coming over the lake has made it delightfully cool on the lake shore. To-day, however, we have a change. A cool, brisk wind is blowing from the northwest, and the white-caps are visible clean out to the distant sky-line. To use our favorite simile, Neptune has again spread his green meadows and his drove of white sheep are gamboling on the pastures of the deep. It is such a day as puts new life and energy into a man and makes him feel capable of doing his best. Indeed, there is a bit too much sharpness in the air to make it comfortable to sit, even in the Easy Chair on the lake front, and hence we have climbed the hill in rear of the cottage and descended a few paces the eastern slope, in order to get the benefit of the forenoon sun and to be sheltered from the northwest wind. Here the outlook before us is not the watery domain of Neptune, but wooded hills and valleys with here and there tall sentinel pines, belonging to the first generation, which for some reason have escaped the lumberman's ax and are standing guard over the younger generation of pines, oaks, beech, and hemlocks which are coming on to take their place, for it is with trees as it is with man, one generation goeth and another cometh.

We have just received the Christian-Evangelist of July 20. We have been taking that paper for many years, and what is more important, we read a great deal that is in it. We really like it very much in spite of its imperfections and shortcomings. The editors and publishers have been much disappointed in the delay in getting the linotype machine for typesetting, which was ordered some time ago. This makes the type look a little worn, but this defect will soon be remedied, for when our new machines arrive we will have new type every week. But returning to the issue of July 20, through which we have just glanced, there is much in it that is inspiring and helpful. Passing by the editorial department which can always be taken for granted, we were deeply interested in "The Church of the Future" by Brother Durban, our London correspondent; with "Personality in Education," by President Aylsworth, of Cotner; with "An Endeavor for Millions," by Dr. Clark, of Christian Endeavor fame; with the splendid report of the Baltimore convention, by our staff correspondent, F. D. Power; with "Prayer and its Answer," by Cephas Shelburne; with "The Social Test of Theology," by George A. Bellamy; and with "Reasons Why We Should Contribute to Church Extension" by J. H. Shepard. These, with the news department and the faces of some of our western workers, make up a number that is very satisfying and inspiring. Bro. P. C. MacFarlane's winsome forecast of the great communion service at San Francisco will create a stronger desire to visit that great convention. Altogether, the Christian-Evangelist seems to be prospering well in the absence of its Editor-in-chief!

Teach Us the Way.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

Teach us the way, O Lord of Light,
Thou in whom darkness cannot be!
Make plain our path unto our sight;
Make all the shadows 'round us flee.

Teach us the way! In vain we seek
To find the path apart from Thee:
Teach us the way! For we are weak
And blind and helpless; hear our plea!

Teach us the way! 'Tis Thou alone
Canst point us to the distant goal:
If Thou shouldst fail, the dark unknown
Would wreck us, Pilot of the soul!

Why No Young Men for the Ministry

By Dr. E. T. Davis

"How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? How shall they hear without a preacher?"—Paul.

As an army without officers, so is a religious body without ministers. As a great people we are drifting toward this perilous condition. With few exceptions the day for the uneducated minister, like the uneducated lawyer or physician, is past. When I speak of a minister I mean an educated one, as the influence of the uneducated minister in any community is too little to be counted in so great a work as compared with that of the educated man.

The fact that we feel the need of student aid funds added to our already free Bible-schools shows how much we need to attract young men in this direction. The fact that the number of young men preparing for the ministry is growing smaller every year, and the number of churches larger, with that other fact that many of our ministers even up to middle age are giving it up for secular work, ought to awaken us, for no religious body will long be stronger than its ministers. To put the subject mildly, the pulpit is decidedly an undesirable position for the average Christian young man.

Aside from the struggle for an eternal home, the highest and holiest ambition a young man ever has is to build and beautify a home for his loved ones. The Swede, Norwegian, German and all other foreigners leave their native land, friends, and everything dear to their heart, and cross the great ocean to come to a strange country among strange people, all because they can hope for a little home of their own, where they may live independent and happy and lay up something for sickness and old age, for—

"Mid pleasures and palaces,
Though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble,
There's no place like home."

A few years ago I asked nearly a dozen young business and professional men why more young men did not enter the ministry. Their answers were in substance about the same, viz., there was too little assurance of ever having a home, even for old age. Young men realize to-day, as never before, that to make a financial failure in life is to make a complete failure in the eyes of the world, and in the sight of God it is little better, for "He that provideth not for those of his own household, has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." The man who has too little love and ambition to build a home for his own family, will do little toward building up the family of God, and the man who is so situated that he cannot build a home for his own on this side of the grave, is in a poor position to train others to build one for the other side of it. If any man on earth needs a model home in his business, it is the Christian minister whose whole work is to get others to build for eternity as well as time.

Some years ago, I found in the statistical report for the past ten years, given by G. A. Hoffmann in the Central Christian Register, that our colleges had made an average gain in college property, endowment, and faculty of about 75 per cent, in number of students 80 per cent, but in young men preparing for the ministry we had no gain but an actual loss of 20 per cent. This loss meant that between 700 and 800 young men, who ought to have been studying for the ministry, were somewhere else. Where were they? Go to our colleges of law, medicine, dentistry and business, and you will find them. Do these young men think it more honorable to expound the law of man than the law of God? More needful to heal the body that in a few years will turn to dust than the soul that shall live forever? If not, why do they choose these professions and shun the ministry?

I spent four of the past five years in the university medical college at Kansas City. During these four years we had an average of nearly 250 students each year. I think fully one-half of these students were working their way through college. Some of them would leave the lecture room at 11:30, and go down town and wait in restaurants during noon hour; some got up at 4 o'clock to deliver morning papers in the cold and storm if necessary, they worked nights and after lecture hours, every place and time and at everything they could get, to earn a few dollars. The tuition in our medical colleges is from $80 to $250 per year; yet there were more than 26,000 students in our medical colleges of the United States last year. I suppose one-half of all these are working to pay a great part of their way, and some all of it; the medical colleges of Missouri alone had more than 2,000 students last year. These young men will do this work and pay a high tuition rather than accept a course in a Bible college free. Why? Because they know when they get through they can settle down in almost any city or town for a lifetime, and if they are true to their profession, they have a good assurance of a living, a home and plenty laid up for sickness and old age, while the average man, after being graduated from a Bible college, spends the remainder of his life dragging his family around from place to place with very little assurance of either. What condition is the average minister in who is compelled to stop work at 50 or even 60 years of age? Compare him with the average lawyer, doctor, or even farmer. If a young man can enter some secular work, build a home for his loved ones, live in comfort, lay by something for sickness and old age, live happy all his life, and go to heaven when he dies, what inducement is there for him to enter the ministry, break up housekeeping every year or two, and move to clean up some other house, settle down again, only to break up and move again about the time he gets well acquainted, and look forward to the humiliated and dependent position the average old minister is in today? The right answer to this question will fill both our Bible colleges and our pulpits.

A year or two ago only two men out of all our college graduates volunteered for the foreign field; is this surprising? If our boys do not desire a pulpit amid their friends and relatives in their own land, how can we expect them to desire one on the other side of the globe among the heathen? While our colleges are to prepare young people for all positions in life, their great work should be to train young men for that highest and holiest of all callings, the Christian ministry. But it is a notable fact that the great body of our best young men is shunning the ministry for almost all other honorable callings.

A man who never had enough ambition to learn a trade or get a high school education may be willing to go out and "work for the Master," as he puts it, for the collections or whatever the church wishes to give him. That class of men is usually willing to do almost any work for the same price, and the churches that are calling for a man who is willing to work and sacrifice and trust the Lord for support, will get this very class of men just as long as they want to call for them.

It would be amusing, if it were not so serious, the way some of our best ministers shy around this subject as though they had no definite idea what is keeping our men out of the ministry. Who in Missouri knows more of the conditions of churches and ministers than Brother Abbott? Brother Abbott has a line on this subject; it is brim full of common business sense as well as the practical religion of Jesus Christ. He says, "If our churches would raise the salaries of our ministers to a living basis, it would do much to encourage young men to enter the ministry." That is good practical business as well as religious sense. Paul says that God has ordained that "they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel," not might live of it. Would you like to urge your boy into a profession where the average man was not even paid a living for his services and education, to say nothing of laying up

The Power of a Great Passion

By Stephen J. Corey

We are wrong when we put Christianity on the defensive. The genius of the religion of Christ is conquest. Conquest born of an irresistible passion. That passion is devotion to Christ embodied in a burning zeal to save the world. Here is the great need of the church to-day. Let a passionate longing for the evangelization of the world fill the hearts of God's people and their onward march would be irresistible. This passion is needed for the preservation of the church, as well as its victory.

What was the power that preserved and made efficient the earlier church? It was the missionary spirit. Without it the work of Paul would have been a perfect failure. Think of his rapid journeys from place to place, organizing little bands of disciples, made up of slaves, ignorant idolaters, and a strange conglomeration of all classes. They were uncouth, untrained, half civilized. What kept them together? What kept the churches in unity? What made these little companies mighty forces in their respective communities? It was the mighty power of missions. They went everywhere preaching the word. They were on fire for lost souls. They believed in the universal conquest of the gospel. It was "the expulsive power of a new affection," which kept free the channels of the Holy Spirit and pushed them out into heroic service.

To organize churches to-day, in this enlightened age, and leave them as Paul did, would be in many cases suicidal. And why? Because so few Christians are on fire to spread the faith they espouse. They have not the expulsive and impelling power of a new missionary affection. The greatest need of the church to-day for purging purposes is the missionary spirit. What will drive worldliness out of the church? Missions. What will put avarice and covetousness in their graves? Missions. What will solve the problem of meeting the masses? Missions. A church on fire for the saving of souls is irresistible. A church of two hundred members, each one of which is praying and striving for the salvation of the whole world, will turn a city upside down in a single year.

The great cry of our church is for money—money to do the Lord's work. But we put the cart before the horse. What we need is the spirit of world-wide missions in the church, and the money will come. Sometimes we feel that we have to extract money from the people by appeals. God speed the day when extraction will not be necessary, but only the statement of the great need. It is almost a travesty on Christianity to be obliged to beg Christian people to give money to save the world. Paul writes of the Macedonian churches that "according to their power, yea, beyond their power, they gave of their own accord, beseeching us with much entreaty." If the people besought the missionary societies to receive, instead of its being necessary for the societies to beseech them to give, the evangelization of the world would speedily be accomplished.

Hospitality is a great word in many states of the east. Have you never heard them tell how it is in Kentucky and Missouri and Virginia? Have you not heard them say how it is not in California? "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers." Our visitors will scatter out. And they will size us up, after all, according to the way we treat them. If western hospitality is ever to become proverbial somebody must set the pace in that direction. Shall we?—Pacific Christian.

The Social Test of Theology*

By Geo. A. Bellamy

Again, this social theology develops the positive, aggressive, constructive Christian. There are a great many church members who are content with themselves because they have attended prayer service, given to missions, supported the church and kept, in the main, the commandments. The Pharisees of Christ's time, and the old-time Puritans of our own time, are good examples of this class. "They try to be good by not doing wrong, and are just as good as trying not to be bad can make them." They never rise to heights of heroic service and righteousness, while frequently they actually retard the progress of the more progressive in the church who feel the need of positive, aggressive efforts in combating the evils of our time. Kipling, in his most virile and searching way, pours out his contempt on these neutrals who do no good, and try to do no wrong.

Our new social conscience does not permit men to be content with their inactive lives. It comes like a stimulant driving men on to larger and larger service for their fellow men; for those who are touched by it are not content to enjoy luxury while men with dark thoughts beg for work, and helpless women slave in sweaters' dens, and the life withers out of the poor, starved babies. It does not permit men to wink at the evils of the day, satisfied that the future will settle all injustices for the poor who suffer here on earth.

Again, in the test of this new theology, we find it offers a richer growth of righteous character. Character comes only through mutual self-giving. The soul and character of man are not molded, sweetened and nurtured by just reading, thinking and preaching; by shutting oneself off from others in monasteries; by wishing, praying, and singing. The monastery did not develop the highest type of Christian character. It drew men away from the problems of life. It made them less sympathetic; often bitter against their fellows. It developed an egotistic sanctity, unwholesome and inconsistent with the highest ideals of Christian manhood. Character is not worked up in us at our will. It does not spring up out of luxury. It develops through struggle and sacrifice, and is the gradual growth through years of service, of self-control, sympathy and love.

The social theology makes all life religious. "I came," said Christ, "to save the world." Not any department, not any one phase of life, but the whole world. He did not fence off religion into a separate part and come that he might save that realm. That Christ came to save amusements, customs, governments, arts, industries, and homes, is an idea that many Christian people have not entertained, often they have regarded these things alien and hostile to the kingdom of God. True, he said, "My kingdom is not of this world." That is, the laws of his kingdom, love, kindness, mercy, justice, are not the laws of this world. The laws of this world, malice, greed and jealousy, indifference to suffering and to duty, are not of his kingdom, to be sure, but while the laws of his kingdom are not of this world, they are in this world working mightily for its purification. As the principles and laws of his kingdom permeate this world will the kingdom of God be established, and no sooner. He came not to get men into heaven, but heaven into men.

Our more progressive church and social agencies are erecting great edifices not alone to the glory of God, but also to promote the dignity and divineness of the common life. The gymnasium is gaining a place in religious life because it promotes health and strength—sacred possessions. The fresh air movement, which takes thousands of God's children out into the country, is religious because it acquaints them with God in his wonderful works of art, preserves their health and builds their character. The bringing of neighborhood people together in friendly, fraternal relations is religious because out of it spring love, friendship and service. Classes in manual training are religious because they make intelligent, skillful men, able to support their homes. Cooking and sewing classes are religious because they help woman to her high and holy calling in the home, creating health and cheerful dispositions, preventing disease and quarrels and the frequenting of the saloon by the members of the family. What could be more religious than these agencies creating God-likeness and stimulating men and women to the highest life? What could be a greater test of the divineness of such activities than their results so forcibly manifest? To conceive of the Christian life as a thing of itself apart from other life is inconsistent with social theology and does violence to our highest interpretations of life.

Christ thought that everything should be tested by its fruits, and Paul says in his letter to the Galatians that the one infallible test of the working of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, goodness, temperance, faith. So the result of the social theology, although not clearly defined in the minds of many, and as yet without a systematic statement of its principles, is none the less real and is marked by its many fruits, fruits which have in them a permanent and spiritual force.

One reason why so many of the churches have been compelled to move out of the down-town districts is because their doctrine cannot stand the test. It is not broad and deep enough to solve the problems of life for the growing youth in the crowded parts of our cities, where the youth of the community has only the street for a playground and where families are crowded together without any idea of comfort. In our own neighborhood at Hiram House, since the opening of the work, churches have had to close their doors while we have been burdened with a larger attendance than we could take care of. For instance, notice the power for good of the playground, only one of our social factors. Notice its contrast with the life in the street where thousands of our future citizens are growing up. The forces which educate with such fatal precision on the street are: Fight for self, force rule, lawlessness, insult, revenge, cheating and lying. These forces reap their own harvest, which is realized in the tramp, the skilled thief, the hanger-on at the saloon and the ward politician.

On the playground you have the contrast; for the vicious, lawless life of the gangs, destructive of honor and character, there is substituted, under good leadership, wholesome games and play. It is the team versus the gang; it is side vs. self; it is obedience and order vs. lawlessness; it is play vs. fight; it is just leadership vs. the bully; it is honesty, courtesy and arbitration vs. falsehood, insult and revenge. The playground reaps its harvest in good athletes, young men who have the idea of justice and courtesy, whose ideals have been raised above the low standard of the street. While the outgrowth of the substitute is character—a permanent spiritual force. It costs us $2,500 a year to run the playground; but there is less lying, stealing, gambling, destruction of property and fewer arrests. Thus all these social agencies which create higher ideals and build character certainly have the fruits of the Spirit, and are in thorough accord with the lesson from the great dramatic judgment scene portrayed by Christ where the one infallible test is service.

This new theology has as its object a revelation of the life of God as it is being worked out in the soul of man and in society. It is evidenced in the deepened sense of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; in extending and intensifying the sense of sin and giving an enlarged appreciation of the functions of wholesome amusements; in developing the positive, aggressive, constructive Christian whose new service in life results in an enlargement and enrichment of character.

Objections to Faith Healing

First, the scientist considers the act of faith healing as a degradation of his God. He rises from every fresh contemplation of the wondrous work of the Creator and Upholder with a deeper conviction of the impartial and omnipresent reign of law, in all realms. A God of order and system is humiliated by a doctrine which presents him as setting aside the laws of health in answer to the prayers of a few faith healers. The sorrow and cruelty attendant on such teaching fill the scientist with regret, while the unworthy conception of the Ruler of the universe calls out his protest against the profanation.

Next the lawyer, even though he be but a student, having read no more than "Greenleaf on Evidence," or his "Testimony of the Four Evangelists," objects decidedly to acceptance of flimsy testimony as to the presence of Christ in the alleged cases. An undisputed instance of cure of a disease or disability, which has passed the rigorous scientific investigation of Christ's healing, as in the ninth chapter of John, does not emerge. Nor is there one which is not surpassed by the cures effected by faith in patent medicines.

What kind of a weak and flabby Christ is this, who limits his healing to nervous disorders which he feebly cures after repeated trials, and utterly breaks down before a lesion of the body or even a case of strabismus? Your physician can remove a cataract, cure cross eyes, set a broken leg in a few minutes; your Christ cannot do any one in ten years. Your lawyer can tell you, at once, that it is illogical and that it carries all the grievous results of accepting error to ascribe to an absent and wholly suppositious cause that which can be accounted for by a present and easily understood influence. Here the psychologist steps in to say that the mind's power over the body is so unaccountable and so great as to border on the miraculous.

On an alarm of fire, a servant picked up a trunk weighing 200 pounds and carried it downstairs. After the excitement she could not lift it. An insane man can break chains and require eight men to subdue him. French criminals slept in beds where cholera patients had died and remained immune. They were placed in clean beds, but told that cholera patients had died in them. Every one took the disease; some died. Hypnotists enable their dupes to walk when they are afflicted with rheumatism and they cannot walk outside of that influence.

This Christ who heals for Mormons, Dowie, the Holy Rollers and Christian Scientists can do no more than Shelton, Werner, Schlatter and other scamps do for their victims. Nor anything stranger than the annals of abnormal psychology continually present.

Every wise physician knows that faith in him will cure disease as quickly and as thoroughly as faith in Christ. He can match your cures with others as remarkable. He can discount the effect of medicine, in cases where there is no lesion, but only a hysterical condition of the body needing nothing but the soothing of the nerves and rest for recovery. To a hard-headed reasoning man there is no proof that Christ has abrogated law, set aside the laws of health, suspended the sentence, "what a man sows that shall he reap," and entered into competition where he is surpassed by patent medicines and by skillful physicians.

The theologian, in the name of humanity, has a word to say. The complete success of faith healers in the church would result in the unquestionable work of the twelve and the seventy. Such a result would be a most terrible calamity to this sinning, sobbing earth. It would bring woes innumerable.

Suppose we had the power to cure all manner of pain. Imagine a boy who, after repeated warnings, had eaten green fruit, had surfeited himself with sweets and, with his hand on his heart (or six inches below), was groaning with pain; would we tell him, "Prayer and faith will remove your pain"? Or would we let him suffer till nature brought relief, or hot medicine set up a counter irritation?

Suppose a woman has given herself to fashionable society and turned night into day and her stomach into a reservoir for late and indigestible meals; is faith cure to be found in prayer, on which condition she will be healed as sound as before?

A man absorbed in the pursuit of gain, doing legitimate business, works sixteen hours a day till he is utterly broken down; will a prayer wash away his physical sin?

Further, the ape, the tiger, the hog, the peacock within us are not cast out, except by the furnace and the harrow. Moreover, if the Christ be a healer of disease, by miracle to-day, those who thus come touch merely the hem of his garment; they enter not into his life. The visit of the Son of God is obscured to any one who looks to him for such paltry blessing. Between a life of constant invalidism and one of uninterrupted health, the former is preferable. This is a mystery which could be explained.

Degrade the Christ to the level of a statesman, directing the nation; reduce him to the attitude of a teacher of political economy, sanctioning some form of taxation or the tariff; bring him down to be the chief Socialist; call him a police judge who will round up all of men's disputes in a great judgment day; in every case you have tarnished his glory, missed the end of his sojourn among us, and misled men as to the richest gift he has to bestow. But do not, oh, for suffering humanity's sake, do not make him a substitute for a drug store, do not present him as a feeble, dabbling doctor, who may cure and who may not, who cannot cure a serious, acute disease, but who may, after weeks of trial, do as well for a nervous disorder as a second rate physician can do.

Disappointment and sorrow follow close on the heels of every faith healer, and cruelty emerges when parents consistently believe the delusion and permit their children to suffer and to die sooner than to show lack of confidence in the power of Christ to heal by a miracle, regardless of the laws of healing.

Surely we ought not to countenance such a mistake, though held in sincerity, and by good Christian persons. It is an error, deficient in scriptural, scientific and factual foundation.

A Lunch Fit For a King.

An active and successful young lady tells her food experience:

"Some three years ago I suffered from nervous prostration, induced by continuous brain strain and improper food, added to a great grief.

"I was ordered to give up my work, as there was great danger of my mind failing me altogether. My stomach was in bad condition (nervous dyspepsia, I think now) and when Grape-Nuts food was recommanded to me, I had no faith in it. However, I tried it, and soon found a marked improvement in my condition as the result. I had been troubled with deathly faint spells, and had been compelled to use a stimulant to revive me. I found, however, that by eating Grape-Nuts at such times I was relieved as satisfactorily as by the use of stimulants, and suffered no bad effects, which was a great gain. As to my other troubles—nervous prostration, dyspepsia, etc.—the Grape-Nuts diet soon cured them.

"I wish especially to call the attention of office girls to the great benefit I derived from the use of Grape-Nuts as a noon luncheon. I was thoroughly tired of cheap restaurants and ordinary lunches, and so made the experiment of taking a package of Grape-Nuts food with me, and then slipping out at noon and getting a nickel's worth of sweet cream to add to it. I found that this simple dish, finished off with an apple, peach, orange, or a bunch of grapes, made a lunch fit for a king, and one that agreed with me perfectly.

"I throve so on my Grape-Nuts diet that I did not have to give up my work at all, and in the two years have had only four lost days charged up against me.

"Let me add that your suggestions in the little book, 'Road to Wellville,' are, in my opinion, invaluable, especially to women." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A New Phase of the Immigration Question

By J. P. Lichtenberger

New York City presents a unique situation in reference to the question of immigration. We have two great sources, by water and land.

That which comes to us from across the seas has received most of our attention. When the word "immigration" is used, the mind almost instinctively turns to the vast multitude of foreigners landing daily at Ellis Island from the Transatlantic steamship lines. This class has received much attention, and has been minutely studied and analyzed. It is strongly Jewish and Roman Catholic. It means little for Protestant Christianity. It demands of the church and the nation serious consideration. It threatens to change the character of our civilization. What can be done to check the undesirable elements? Can this vast aggregation be assimilated by our population? What is the duty of the Protestant church toward "the stranger within our gates"? These are the questions that arise.

While our attention is thus being absorbed, there is another large and constant stream of immigration pouring, almost unnoticed, into our city by the various railroad lines. My purpose is to call attention to this multitude and secure interest in it. It is largely, dominantly, American and Protestant. It includes all classes and ages, but it consists chiefly of the young, energetic people of the rural districts and smaller cities who are seeking the better economic opportunity of the metropolis. They are coming from Christian homes and from the churches where many are active workers and faithful Christians. Their arrival is unheralded. They are absorbed with the novelties and attractions of the great city; they are busy seeking employment or adjusting themselves to the new environment; they are uncertain how long they will remain; they do not know the location of their churches; they wish to float about for a while and see the great churches and hear the great preachers before uniting with any church; they are strangers, and no one knows whether they go to church at all, so that their influence is not what it was at home, etc. So multitudes come and drift about for a time, and by and by are lost not only to their churches, but to Christianity, and are added to the great mass of the churchless, worshipless, godless of our city.

It is a common opinion frequently expressed that there are more Protestant Christians in New York unaffiliated with any church than the combined membership of all the churches. This class of immigrants should receive more attention by our churches. From it is one of the chief sources of recruits for our work.

What are we as a people doing for this class? Very little. Do we not have a duty to perform here? Is not this condition of importance as a part of our "scattered Disciples" problem? If the Disciples coming to New York should unite at once with our churches, we should have in a short time great churches that would attract the attention of this great city.

A few things that will contribute to this result:

It is seldom that members of our churches throughout the country depart for the city without the knowledge of our pastors. The address is easily obtained, often given to the pastor. If these names and addresses were forwarded at once to one of our city pastors, it would insure a reception for the newcomer and an introduction to one of our churches immediately upon their arrival. This would help much.

Again, pastors are often reluctant to dismiss from their churches their good workers and even advise, sometimes, those going away to retain their membership in the home churches. Almost every printed church directory contains the names of non-resident members, address, New York. This is often due to the above fact. If persons were urged to take letters and were directed to a church in the city, and the pastor apprised of that fact, it would save money to the church and to the cause of Christ.

Our churches in Greater New York are noted for their cordiality to strangers. There are churches in the city that are formal and cold, no doubt, and which do not greet strangers cordially, but they are not churches of the Disciples of Christ. Our brethren are always most cordially welcomed. Those coming from out of the city are sure of a warm welcome and a kindly greeting.

Victory for Home Missions.

We learn from the office that the American Christian Missionary Society has received $5,000 on the annuity plan, from one who does not desire the name published. The annuitant will receive six per cent interest on the money all of his lifetime, and at the death of the annuitant it becomes a named memorial fund. Our Home Board will keep a missionary preaching the gospel through all the years.

Victory for home missions is in the air. All indications point to the greatest year we have ever had in our home missionary work. More churches have contributed to the offering, and more work has been done than ever before in our history.

Why No Young Men for the Ministry?

against sickness and old age? Do you think he would look forward with much pleasure to the ministerial relief fund to supply the needs of his family in old age? If you cannot urge your own boy into this work, how can you urge some other brother's boy into it?

Unless a young man could provide for old age without depending on the church to do it, I would not even advise, much less urge, him to enter the ministry. If I had a thousand lives to live here, I would not give one of them to the ministry without that provision; with it I would gladly give them all in telling that wonderful story that never grows old.

MENTAL ACCURACY

Greatly Improved by Leaving off Coffee.

The manager of an extensive creamery in Wis. states that while a regular coffee drinker, he found it injurious to his health and a hindrance to the performance of his business duties.

"I cannot say," he continues, "that I ever used coffee to excess, but I know that it did me harm, especially during the past few years.

"It impaired my digestion, gave me a distressing sense of fullness in the region of the stomach, causing a most painful and disquieting palpitation of the heart, and what is worse, it muddled my mental faculties so as to seriously injure my business efficiency.

"I concluded, about 8 months ago, that something would have to be done. I quit the use of the old kind of coffee, short off, and began to drink Postum Food Coffee. The cook didn't make it right at first—she didn't boil it long enough, and I did not find it palatable and quit using it and went back to the old kind of coffee and to the stomach trouble again. Then my wife took the matter in hand, and by following the directions on the box, faithfully, she had me drinking Postum for several days before I knew it. When I happened to remark that I was feeling much better than I had for a long time, she told me that I had been drinking Postum, and that accounted for it. Now we have no other kind of coffee on our table.

"My digestion has been perfectly restored, and with this improvement has come relief from the oppressive sense of fullness and palpitation of the heart that used to bother me so, and I note such a gain in mental strength and acuteness that I can attend to my office work with ease and pleasure and without making the mistakes that were so annoying to me while I was using the old kind of coffee.

"Postum Food Coffee is the greatest table drink of the times, in my humble estimation." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

An Experimental Campaign

Reading from right to left: Merritt Owen, Pastor Central Church; T. J. Legg, State Evangelist of Indiana; Edward McKinney, Singer and Helper; R. H. Fife, Evangelist; H. H. Saunders, Singer and Helper; J. M. Elam, Evangelist; P. A. Parsons, Singer and Helper; W. S. Buchanan, Pastor Tabernacle Church and Chairman Executive Committee.

As soon as it was decided to hold the tent campaign at Marion, Ind., the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST made arrangements to present to its readers some account of the meeting in its actual process, and in this issue we are enabled to publish photographs taken specially for us, and give a description of the actual operations, as well as that which led up to this campaign, which will be watched with special interest in that it is to an extent somewhat of a test of methods.

The first week was one of almost continuous rain. Yet the tents were dry and comfortable and the audiences increased daily. The preparations for the Marion campaign were very complete in every way, and the opinion of its managers on the subject will certainly be very helpful to those who contemplate similar campaigns. It is already demonstrated to those who are in charge that, whilst fair weather is most favorable to tent meetings, yet they can stand even the heavy rains, as in this case, and services under a tent on a warm summer evening are delightful.

It must be borne in mind that the Christian church in Marion is comparatively weak, and very much overshadowed by its religious neighbors. In fact the cause of the Disciples in Marion is weaker than in any other city of its size in Indiana. Religious prejudice is strong, and this evangelistic effort means a desperate struggle for the supremacy of the primitive gospel. The evangelists do not, therefore, expect an early ingathering; however, there were eight additions the first week. They are having a good hearing from the denominations, as well as non professors, and they are faithfully preaching the old-time gospel at every service. That they have succeeded in making a most favorable impression upon the city is shown from an editorial in the Marion News-Tribune of Tuesday morning, July 11:

"REVIVALS ARE DOING GOOD.

"It is a wholesome sign of the times when one sees the large crowds that nightly attend the revival meetings that are now being held in the tents in various parts of the city. A good many times when such meetings are held in some cities there is a certain element of the most irresponsible people who take it for granted that they may gather around in the vicinity of the tents and raise all kinds of disturbances and annoyances. They seem to think that it is more of a side show than anything else. But such is by no means the case in this city at the present time. Here we see a number of evangelists and singers who are giving their time to the work of showing the way of salvation. They appear earnest in their work. They are conducting their meetings on the same high level as those that are held in any church, and their audiences are evidently made up of the better class of thinking people. So far as has been learned there has not been a single instance of hoodlumism in the vicinity of either tent that would mar the success of the meetings. This is a good indication that the truths spoken are falling upon ears that are willing to receive them, and this means that much good will be done.

The Central Tent—R. H. Fife, preaching.

"Marion will be all the better for the holding of these revival meetings, and it is to be hoped that the people will give respectful ear to the men who are conducting them.

"And, by the way, it wouldn't hurt you to attend some of these meetings."

The tents have been arranged and equipped with the view to comfort and convenience, and they can accommodate any sized audience that might assemble, whether small or great.

HOW IT CAME ABOUT.

This campaign was suggested by W. S. Buchanan, the untiring and energetic pastor of the Tabernacle church, and with the co-operation of W. J. Wright, superintendent of evangelism, plans were perfected to hold simultaneous tent meetings in three of the most strategic points in the city where churches should be planted in the early future. The two congregations in the city, the Tabernacle church, of which W. S. Buchanan is the efficient pastor, and the Central, with its new pastor, Bro. Merritt Owens, late from Washington, N. C., have united heartily in the effort.

According to the suggestion of W. J. Wright, R. H. Fife, of Kansas City, Mo., was called to take general oversight. Brother Fife has not only had good success in the evangelistic field, but has made a very thorough study of simultaneous meetings and summer tent revivals. Plans were laid out in detail, and W. S. Buchanan saw that they were all faithfully executed. The meetings have been thoroughly announced and many of the preachers and members from the adjacent towns and country churches are in attendance to enjoy the meetings themselves and study the plans of the campaign. The evangelists and singers hold an occasional open air meeting on the streets near the public square, and large numbers are hearing the gospel.

W. S. Buchanan invited the pastors and churches of other religious bodies to join with the Christian churches in an interdenominational campaign, but when they refused our people undertook the campaign themselves. Some of the denominations are now concluding that it is very essential for them to start meetings also, and are procuring tents to set up in the same neighborhoods where ours are. However, it is intimated that our evangelists are not alarmed.

Our Budget

—The Tabernacle church at Ft. Worth, Tex., wants a pastor.

—M. P. Hayden has taken charge of the work at Browerville, Minn.

—Edward O. Sharp has just organized a congregation at Hillsboro, Ill.

—J. R. Perkins has announced that he will leave Huntsville, Mo., this fall.

—A. B. Cunningham has resigned as pastor of the church at Tiffin, Ohio.

—Another five years' pastorate is terminated by J. W. Porter's leaving Stanford for Chapin, Ill.

—John Treloar, late of Wheatland, Cal., has taken charge of the work at Monte Vista, Col.

—W. A. Wherry, of Tecumseh, O. T., has become minister of the church at Commerce, Texas.

—Ward Russell, pastor at Florence, Col., is spending the months of July and August in Europe.

—E. H. Williamson reports a good outlook at Brunswick, Mo., where he has just accepted a call.

—F. J. M. Appleman, late of Pictou, N. S., has taken charge of the work at Lubec, Me.

—The brethren at Princeton, Kan., where J. F. Power ministers, are painting and papering their church.

—M. P. Hegan is located at Frazee and Browerville, Minn., as missionary pastor under our home board.

—J. C. Todd is to leave Monroe City in October for a course at Yale, or Union theological seminary.

—Arthur N. Lindsay has just raised $1,095 in cash and paid off the debt of the church at New Franklin, Mo.

—Wm. Sumpter, recently of Nevada, has moved to Petoskey, Mich., to become missionary pastor of that church.

—The new church building at Truman, Minn., is nearing completion and will be dedicated by F. M. Rains.

—The Minnesota convention recommended the creation of a special fund to maintain a second evangelist in the field.

—Excavation has commenced for the new Drake university Bible building and it will be pushed vigorously to completion.

—T. W. Pinkerton, who has resigned as our missionary at Salt Lake City, will begin his work at Kenton, Ohio, Sept. 1.

—T. T. Thompson, of East Side, Denver, has had a bad siege of inflammatory rheumatism, but is now able to be about again.

—W. H. Knotts, of Kimball, married a wife and could not go to the Minnesota convention. Such is the report that reaches us.

—G. W. Buckner, of Macomb, where he has served five years successfully, goes to Carthage, Ill., while Robert Dungan succeeds him.

—J. J. Evans has given up the work of corresponding secretary of Oregon, and is succeeded by F. E. Billington, Cottage Grove, Oregon.

—C. K. Marshall, one of our well known ministers, has resigned at Tupelo, Miss. Here is a chance for some of our churches to secure a good man.

—John Simpson, though he has changed his residence to Cavendish, P. E. I. Canada, will preach for the church at New Glasgo for another year.

—Wm. F. Cowden, for so many years superintendent of missions under our home board, in the northwest, but who retired a year since, has gone to Alaska with Mrs. Cowden to visit their sons who are in business in Nome. They will return in September.

—R. M. Hopkins, one of our best Sunday-school men, has just made a drive of nearly two hundred miles through the needy sections of Kentucky.

—In our "Changes" last week W. H. Hedges was announced as going to Covington, Ky. It is Covington, Ind., to which Brother Hedges has removed.

—Our church at Loveland, Col., is planning to hold a revival early in the fall. A. O. Walker reports 92 additions since he took charge the last of March.

—There are five Disciples at the Harvard summer school of theology this year, while Pres. C. C. Rowlison is doing supply work in the university library.

—G. D. Edwards, of Nevada, Mo., is planning to sail for Honolulu immediately after the San Francisco convention. He becomes pastor of the church in Honolulu.

—The First church at Springfield, Ill., is holding a tent meeting. C. C. Morrison, the pastor, is doing the preaching, assisted by S. S. Jones in charge of the singing.

—J. M. Morris, until recently state evangelist of Washington under the support of the A. C. M. S., has resigned and become a teacher in Turner, Oregon.

—The Pacific Christian, in a paragraph about our San Francisco convention number, says: "The Christian-Evangelist's familiar pages are very homelike this week."

—We recently noted the calls for Chas. Reign Scoville and De Loss Smith. During the coming year Brother Scoville will give most of his time to the evangelistic field.

—The church at Platte City, Mo., knows how to do a good thing. It will send its pastor, Louis S. Cupp, to the California convention. Mrs. Cupp will go with him.

—J. G. Slayter, who begins his work as pastor of the East End church, Pittsburg, Pa., the first of August, is succeeded at Akron, Ohio, by George Darsie, of Massillon.

—G. F. Bradford is beginning his fourth year at Eureka, Kan. During this time the church has moved from fourth to first place in standing among the churches in Eureka.

—The Christian Century says that M. M. Nelson, of Rockford, Cal., pays for the little bulletin issued weekly by his church by working one day a week in the printing office.

—Harvey Baker Smith leaves Princeton, Ky., Aug. 1, for Oregon, on account of the health of his family. Thirteen have been added there since the meeting, making 70 in all.

—J. L. Haddock, recently state evangelist of Louisiana, has entered the field as general evangelist of the southern states. Mrs. Haddock accompanies him and sings at the meetings.

—Benj. L. Smith spent a recent Sunday in Marion, Ohio, in securing pledges for a new church house there. The result was quite a surprise to the church in the amount of pledges received.

—The congregation at Lyons, Kan., where Geo. E. Lyons ministers, has outgrown its present building and is engaged in erecting a new modern building, with a seating capacity of 1,000.

—D. M. Wetzel, minister of the Fulton avenue mission, Baltimore, has resigned to take effect the first of September. This mission is the special field of the Harlem avenue church of the A. C. M. S.

—The Fountain Park assembly's program will be found to be a good one. It is controlled by our brethren locally, and is not run for money-making. Particulars may be had from Geo. F. De Vol, minister of our church at Remington, Ind.

—A press dispatch announces the resignation of W. F. Shaw at Charleston, Ill., and his response to a call to the North Side church at Chicago, Ill., where Bruce Brown was.

—Philip W. Walthall will close his work at Covington, Ind., Sept. 1, to enter the evangelistic field. He solicits correspondence with churches desiring to hold meetings. Some dates are already arranged.

—The Tenth Legion of the Hammett Place Christian church gave a very delightful evening's entertainment last week, beginning its campaign for the raising of the money necessary to complete the new building.

—B. H. Lingenfelter has accepted the urgent invitation of the brethren at Fremont Station, Seattle, Wash., and will remain with them as their pastor. This is under the support of our board of home missions.

—L. P. Schooling, who is a graduate of the Missouri state university, and took work during his course in our Bible college, is now attending classes at at the University of Chicago, and ministering to the church at Joliet.

—E. R. Durfee, of Painesville, Ohio, held a very successful meeting with the East End mission, Cincinnati, Ohio, adding about 40 to the membership. This mission is building its church home. The meeting was held in a little upper hall.

—The Board of Church Extension has recently received the following annuities: $1,000 from a friend in Missouri; $500 from a friend in New York; and $100 from friends in Kansas. The last is the one hundred and forty-first gift to the annuity fund.

—We are glad to note that our little church at Evanston, of which W. D. Ward is pastor, has made the final payment on its $9,000 church. The building now used is situated to much better advantage for aggressive work than the building formerly occupied.

—We received, too late for an announcement in advance of the date on which the address was to be delivered, the information that M. M. Davis was to take part in the convention at Weleetka, Ind. Ter., with an address on "The Bible Burned—Then What?"

—We hear again serious complaints of a man who goes by the name of W. A. or R. E. L. Stanley. We have not space to go into particulars in this issue, but we advise all churches and ministers to be very careful of putting any trust in one who seems to be entirely unworthy of confidence.

—John T. Brown, of Kentucky, will sail from San Francisco, soon after the convention, for Australia, where he will evangelize and lecture for several months. After that he expects to make some travels in a number of the oriental countries and will probably be away from home over a year.

—A. W. Kokendoffer made us a call on his return from the sad duty of taking his wife's body to rest among her people in Kentucky. Brother Kokendoffer desires us to express his deep thanks to the many friends who have so graciously tendered the assurances of their sympathy in his bereavement.

—Plans are now being prepared for a fine church edifice at Huntington, Ind. It is intended to seat about 1,400 people, and the cost will be between thirty and forty thousand dollars. The growth of the church has demanded larger quarters. Our contributer, Cephas Shelburne, is the minister.

—David H. Shields informs us that the medical library of Dr. Anna Rakestraw, deceased, was shipped a few weeks ago to Brother Meigs at Nankin, China. The library was donated to the Foreign Society by her brother, of Angola, Ind., and by Sister Mary Smith, of Salina, Kan.

—Adam K. Adcock writes us from Jackson, O., that the pews of the church there were recently damaged by fire, but there are enough good ones left to seat a smaller church, say of 250 capacity. The ladies' aid expect to put in new pews, and they desire to sell the old ones on reasonable terms.

—W. F. Turner, of Joplin, Mo., reports that the church has taken Marcellus J. Ely and the mission of New Orleans as their special field under our home board. Brother Ely is the son of Simpson Ely. Arrangements have been made for Simpson Ely to hold a protracted meeting in New Orleans in October next.

—The church at Tampa, Fla., under the leadership of J. P. Rowlison, under the support of the A. C. M. S., has been doing wonders. They purchased a lot and built a very neat meeting house which was dedicated on July 2. The promise is for a strong church, and all is the result of our home missionary work.

—The church at Greenville, Tex., has already extended a unanimous call to J. W. Holsapple to remain not only next year, but indefinitely thereafter. Brother Holsapple's second year does not expire until Dec. 31, so it would seem that thus far he has given eminent satisfaction to the congregation in this live little Texas town.

—The little church at Albuquerque, New Mexico, under the leadership of E. E. Crawford, is making an heroic effort to build a church home. Some brethren have purchased a choice lot for $2,200, and are holding it in trust for the church. As soon as the church secures its lot, the Board of Extension will help them with their building.

—L. W. McCreary, of East St. Louis, reports the calling of C. O. Reynard, who has just graduated at Hiram, Ohio, as the living link evangelist of the East St. Louis church and the Fourth church of St. Louis, of which Brother Macfarland is pastor. Brother Reynard will need a new church in East St. Louis and a new church at Alton, Ill., within the year.

—H. H. Moninger has just closed his work at Steubenville, O., where he spent three years of happiness and where is gathered one of the largest Sunday-schools in the brotherhood—enrolling, we believe, about 1,100. Brother Moninger will be allied with the Christian Standard force. Hugh S. Darsie, Jr., will supply the Steubenville pulpit until a new pastor is secured.

—From the home office we learn that the report to be presented at San Francisco gives promise of being the best report ever presented to a national convention by the Christian Missionary Society. If the churches that have taken the offering for home missions, and have not yet remitted that offering, will send in their money between now and August 1, the promise of the best report will be redeemed.

—L. L. Carpenter has, by unanimous vote at the annual meeting of the congregation at Wabash, Ind, been made pastor emeritus in recognition of his long service and residence with this congregation. Favorable reports were presented from every department of the church work, and a basket dinner was enjoyed. Nearly $900 were raised by the pastor, E. F. Daugherty, for the work and the parsonage fund.

—W. S. St. Clair and M. A. Hart have just dedicated a new church at Hickory Grove, Mo. They raised $600 at the morning service, more than enough to pay the indebtedness, and Brother Hart preached the dedicatory sermon in the afternoon to a packed house, while he remains to hold a meeting. Everything was a success, and a basket dinner was a pleasant feature of the day.

—We cordially commend to the attention of our readers the appeal which Brother Snively makes on another page in behalf of our old people's home at Jacksonville. We would be glad if it were possible for us to make acknowledgment in the columns of the Christian-Evangelist of responses thereto but the demands on our space are such that this is impossible. Our homes are all in need of increased capacity.

—Peter Ainslie reports that the work of the Christian temple has progressed well, and that H. G. Spencer, the son of I. J. Spencer, of Lexington Ky., has accepted the call of the old Calhoun street church at Baltimore, the building vacated by Brother Ainslie's congregation. The effort will be made to build up a new congregation around Calhoun street. Brother Ainslie takes a needed vacation of four weeks.

—As briefly announced in our last week's issue, a new church has just been completed at Mannington, W. Va. It is of pressed brick and the property is valued at about $12,000. It is the product of Clarence Mitchell's evangelistic work during two summer vacations. Dr. J. M. Devore telegraphs us that this work has redeemed our plea from anti-ism and placed us in the front in that rich old city.

—The Colorado Christian Herald, in an editorial, after summarizing our own editorial on the time for holding the national convention, says: "The Herald wishes the change might be made from October, as that is one of the best months for evangelistic work. If practicable, we wish that time might be secured which would enable the various state organizations to have their missionary year uniform with the national year."

—In a recent account of the Iowa state convention, it was stated that $7,500 were raised to complete the fund for this building, "in pledges of $500 to $1,000." This was a mistake of the types. It was written "in pledges of $5.00 to $1,000." A very large number of $5 00 pledges were made, indicating that it is not only the wealthy who are interested in this movement so full of meaning and promise, but the rank and file as well.

—The church at Shelbyville, Ind., has granted its pastor, H. O. Pritchard, an eight months' leave of absence, during which time he will complete his course in the divinity school of Yale university. H. H. Harmon, for the past three years pastor of the Tabernacle Christian church at Columbus, Ind., will have charge of the work at Shelbyville, during Brother Pritchard's absence. Brother Harmon will at the same time do work at Butler university.

—We regret that a Budget note, intended to go in the same number in which the paper by Miss Virgie Campbell, published in our Home Circle pages last week, was omitted. This was intended to explain that Miss Campbell's paper, which was read at one of the sessions of the Missouri state convention, was called for unanimously by the convention to be published in some of our religious journals. Miss Campbell is the very efficient helper of Brother Abbott in the state board's office at Kansas City.

—We regret that we have not space in which to mention the features of the different assemblies whose announcements reach us. A full program of the many attractions at Chautauqua can be obtained by addressing L. L. Carpenter, Bethany Assembly, Brooklyn, Ind., while the Bethany Beach Assembly, which is now in session, and lasts until Aug. 18, is another gathering that is peculiarly associated with our church. Particulars can be obtained from A. E. Zeigler, Bethany Beach, Del. The Piedmont assembly will be held from July 28 to Aug. 6, one mile west of Gordonsville, Va., and C. R. Sine and his committee have a strong program, with C. A. Young, J. J. Haley and other good speakers to delight those who go.

—The paper recently known as the Christian Companion has once more taken a new name. It has been combined with the Watch Tower, and will be issued from the headquarters of the Christian Standard, under the title of The Christian Weekly. It is announced that the editorial work will be in the hands of Bro. J. B. Briney and John Brown, who have been conducting the Christian Companion, and H. C. Bowen, who has been editor of the Watch Tower. Brother Brown, as we indicate in another paragraph, is starting on a lengthy tour. The reason assigned for the consolidation is the increased difficulty in pubishing a religious journal on a paying basis, and the desire to present readers with a better paper at the same cost. It is hardly fair to pass any opinion upon our contemporary in its new form at present.

The Campaign for Two Thousand Contributors.

The time is short and preachers and churches should act at once, sending in cards promising to take the offering. Up to July 19, 775 churches have promised to take the offering. This number is quite a distance from the much desired 2,000 promises which we want for our annual report at San Francisco. We need 1,224 more promises. Shall we have them? The final proof for our annual report will be ready Wednesday, Aug. 2. All promises in by that time can be reported at San Francisco. If you have misplaced our mailing card sent, you buy a postal card and send your promise. Last year over 2,000 churches sent offerings to our Home Society, and nearly 3,000 to the Foreign Society. Surely these all should help us this year to reach the half million for Church Extension. This week Ohio and Illinois are ahead with 92 promises each, and Missouri is second, while Indiana is third.

In proportion to the number of churches in the state, Wyoming, New Jersey and Vermont lead, New Mexico is second, with Louisiana third.

The Joplin Party.

As official excursion manager for south Missouri and Arkansas the writer expects to take a party to the national convention, leaving here Aug. 7, joining special train via Santa Fe at Kansas City Aug. 8. Let all who expect to go this way notify me at once.

San Francisco Hotels.

No doubt many of those who are considering attendance on the international missionary convention of the Disciples of Christ for 1905 are asking: What about hotel facilities there? What kind of accommodations do they offer and to which of them shall we go?

It should first be stated in answer to these possible queries that San Francisco has a great host of family hotels and well equipped lodging houses, numbers of which are on the lists of the entertainment committee who will have a bureau duly established where information as to all of these can be furnished.

San Francisco, however, has certain notable hotels whose names are for the most part known wherever the English language is spoken, and a few words will be supplied below, not as an advertisement of the respective hostelries, but for the information of delegates.

The newest of San Francisco's great hotels is the St. Francis, situated on Powell street, opposite beautiful Union Square and in the same block with the convention halls, N. S. G. W. hall, and the First Congregational church. This magnificent building boasts that all its guest rooms are outside rooms from which is afforded an incomparable panorama of bay, mountains and rolling hills. Although a new hotel, this is already one of the most popular of the great hotels, perhaps because its rates are very reasonable considering the service furnished.

The great Palace hotel, with its 815 sleeping rooms and 500 bath rooms, has long claimed the pre-eminence among San Francisco's travelers' homes, a pre-eminence by the way, which the new St. Francis ventures to dispute. The Palace has stood for more than 20 years as the center of hotel life in the city. On its registers are to be found the names of many of the most eminent men of the Pacific coast and of the country, and many of them may be seen gossiping or reading in the spacious lounging room, into which the court, formerly used as a driveway, was converted upwards of two years ago. With its handsome furniture in rich, red upholstering, its magnificent palm growing from a large stone urn in the center, and the other tropical plants placed around in great profusion, it is a sight never to be forgotten. Every room in the hotel is steam heated as well as having an open fire—an advantage not always to be despised in San Francisco in August.

The Lick house is another hotel that has from bonanza days been very popular. Its management boasts that it has all the appointments of an up-to-date hotel, and declares that a stay under its roof is the best advertisement it can have.

One of the oldest and most famous hotels in California is the Occidental. Its name is singularly inappropriate, judging from its principal patronage. It should be called the Oriental, for it is the particular preference of missionaries, army and navy officers, and globe-trotters of all descriptions. In its corriders one will see uniforms of all descriptions, as well as all sorts of strange tailor's gear adorning the backs of men from Africa, India, China or almost anywhere else in the world that might be named. Without any doubt the registers of this hotel carry more clerical names than all the others of the city put together.

The California hotel also claims mention in such an article as this. About one year ago it was newly renovated throughout. New carpets, new inlaid floors, new china for the dining tables, a long distance telephone in each room, and a modern cuisine are among the attractions announced by its management.

Finally, brethren. remember to bring your spring wraps and leave your summer underclothing at home, for you will surely need something heavier. Have a stout pair of walking shoes with good thick soles, for the streets of San Francisco are not grass covered. If you expect to visit the northwest on your way to or from the convention, umbrellas and mackintoshes will be good company, but you will have no use for such things in California. If you happen to possess a pair of field glasses, bring them along; they will add much to the pleasure of your trip.

The Northwest Texas Camp Meeting.

The northwest Texas camp meeting will open August 2 at the "Jom Ranch" near the town of Throckmorton, Tex., and last 12 days. The big-hearted cattlemen of this district have declared that they are going to make this the "typical camp meeting." For some time they have had a force of men at work on the camp ground, preparing and beautifying it.

The camp grounds are located on O. J. Wood's ranch. He is the honored president of our association and it goes without saying in this country that he is not only a "cattle king,', but the camp meeting king of all the "Lone Star State." He has his policy as definitely outlined as any life insurance agent. He has hundreds of acres of land fenced off for the grazing of the campers' stock. They have a regular annually appointed camp marshal, who has charge of the entire grounds and sees that all abide by the camp meeting rules.

There are many tents on the grounds that are occupied by the ladies and as many men as can find room, but a large number of the men take a blanket and sleep on the ground with no covering save the beautiful canopy of heaven.

Brother Wood is building a town and school on his ranch of ten thousand acres, and to encourage the people to come in and educate their children is giving two and three acre lots to those who will build houses on them. There is no better place in Texas to spend "an outing."

President E. V. Zollars of Texas Christian university will lead the "camp meeting normal" and preach to the church. Mrs. J. L. Haddock will lead the personal workers. Prof. Talmage Stanley, "the champion boy cornetist," will conduct the chorus of three hundred voices. The writer is to again assist in the evangelistic work, this being the fourth year he has been co-operating in this capacity.

Brethren, come and receive that inspiration we catch from coming into contact with these large hearted ranchmen who leave their flocks and herds and go hundreds of miles to enjoy their annual spiritual feast and to unite in the effort to save souls.

If you are thinking of coming write to O. J. Wood, Throckmorton, Texas.

J. L. Haddock.

Eastern Delegates.

Those going from Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia, to our National Convention at San Francisco, should be ready to start on Tuesday, August 8, for St. Louis, where we will join the Christian-Evangelist Special. J. Murray Taylor.

What Would Louisiana Do without Church Extension?

The first and strongest answer to this question would be this: Remove church extension and you remove our cause from Louisiana. Since the beginning of the reformation spasmodic efforts have been made to enter Louisiana, but with practically no success. Even Alexander Campbell himself made strong effort to get our cause established in this great agricultural state. The trouble up to a few years ago was that we could not build houses for the little churches we organized. In the last few years Louisiana has been rapidly increasing in churches and membership.

We have entered Crowley, Jennings, Leesville, Morrow, Baton Rouge, Alexandria and Monroe. The method down here is to hold each convention at a new place every year. Our next convention will be held at Opelousas, a city of 7,000 population where we now have only a family or two who ever were members of the Christian church. The writer is instructed to go to Opelousas early next spring and begin a ten weeks' meeting, and hold it till the convention meets and let the convention close up the meeting. I am supposed to have organized the new church and made arrangements for the entertainment of the convention free of charge to any one, before the convention meets. Towards the close of the meeting, or near time for the convention I am supposed to make a canvass of the new church, and the town as well, for funds with which to buy a first class lot and build a church house. When the convention meets we are supposed to make a canvass of the convention for funds with which to augment the amount already raised towards building the house. By so doing we will reach the point where the Church Extension Board will be justifiable in granting us a loan to finish and make permanent the work we have begun.

This is the method launched by Claude L. Jones and which Brother Haddock has adhered to for the last three years. With the Church Extension Society and the American Christian Missionary Society we can build a church anywhere in America.

Having to leave our little congregations houseless was exactly what caused our forefathers to fail to make their work tell in Louisiana. What is true of Louisiana is true in Oklahoma and every other weak state and territory in the Union. Now, as small a thing as any preacher in the brotherhood could be asked to do would be to send Brother Muckley a postal card right away telling him that his church will take the offering on the first Lord's day in September. If all the preachers will do this a fair estimate can be made and the half million banner raised at the San Francisco convention.

John A. Stevens,
Superintendent of Louisiana Missions.
Alexandria, La.

Dedication at Eldora, Iowa.

The new $7,000 church building was dedicated on July 12. The primitive gospel was preached here to the first settlers in 1851. The congregation was organized in 1856. The old house was erected in 1866. In the late 60's and the 70's the congregation had a period of prosperity, followed by a period of depression which lasted for many years. The church is harmonious, patient, loyal, and now rejoices greatly that it has a beautiful and very convenient building in which to do its work. J. M. Hoffmann, evangelist for the Iowa C. W. B. M., had charge of the finances for the new building, and while he is a master of the art of church finance himself, he had Dean A. M. Haggard of Drake university present to assist in the dedication. So well had the work been done that there was only $1,500 to be raised. This amount was fully covered by cash and pledges. Nearly all the money was raised at home for the entire structure. The plans were made by Geo. W. Kramer, of New York. Eldora is a good field, and the congregation, we believe and hope, will now grow and prosper.

C. L. Hays.

The Old People's Home.

Hardly any other creature is so helpless as an old man, homeless, friendless, and sans money and health.

On account of the arrangement of the building, we are at present unable to receive brethren into our Old People's Home at Jacksonville, Ill. The admission committee has had to return many most pathetic appeals for homes with us made by brethren who years ago were towers of strength in the cause of primitive Christianity. They can no longer endure to reject all. Trusting in the generosity of the Disciples of Christ the executive board of the National Benevolent Association has ventured to accept plans for a $12,000 addition to its present capacity enabling us to receive brethren as well as more sisters to that beautiful home. Construction will begin at once.

We appeal to all in whose hearts are philanthropic impulses to help pay for this retreat for our indigent veterans of the cross. Money will be accepted for this work on the annuity plan, but we earnestly solicit outright gifts of sums both large and small. Write to the undersigned about memorial rooms, halls, and windows. The national board and all the brotherhood will greatly appreciate your fellowship in this ministry of love.

In behalf of deserving elder brothers and sisters, Geo. L. Sniveley.

An Experimental Campaign.

preaching, with H. H. Saunders, of Noblesville, Indiana, as singer and helper, is located only one block from the public square and is accessible to both the business and the residence part of the central district. The west tent is located in the growing residence district in the western part of the city where a Christian church should be planted at no distant future date. J. M. Elam of Russell avenue, Indianapolis, is the evangelist in charge at this tent with P. A. Parsons, of Hamilton, Ill., as singer and helper.

A third tent is placed in the growing south part of the city, where there should also be a church planted in the early future. This meeting is in charge of T. J. Legg, state evangelist of Indiana, with Edward McKinney, of Dorsey, Ill., as singer and helper. These are strong teams, and they are preaching and singing the gospel of the New Testament to the multitudes daily. Large numbers from other religious bodies are in regular attendance and apparently taking a deep interest in our plea for Christian unity by a return to apostolic Christianity.

Writing to us in the middle of last week R. H. Fife says: "We are having a great meeting, not in additions as yet, but in stirring up our own people and preaching the gospel to the masses. May I say through the Christian-Evangelist to those who are writing me for detailed accounts of the preparation for this campaign, that we are too busy now to give this out, but will in full at the close? We are trying experiments and our experience in this campaign may be helpful to the brotherhood.

"Last Saturday when the streets were crowded we chartered a large street car, put a banner on each side announcing our campaign, and with about 50 singers rode through all the principal streets and around the public square singing songs and announcing our meetings. We also hold street meetings at suitable times and accept every opportunity offered us to conduct services at colleges and places of business. Our men are making our plea for New Testament Christianity prominent. We are receiving all the courtesies from the people and press of the city that we could desire."

Up to the middle of the third week there have been 52 additions, 40 of them by primary obedience. On account of the tents being leased for only one month, it will be necessary to close this campaign next Lord's day, but it is the opinion of the evangelists that the meeting will be only fairly begun.

Have You
Rheumatism?

You Can Be Cured. FREE

A Scientific Discovery.

It is now possible to be cured of any form of rheumatism without having your stomach turned up-side down or being half choked to death, and every sufferer from rheumatism should welcome this marvelous discovery with open arms and give it an honest trial. The new remedy was discovered by John A. Smith, Milwaukee, Wis., who is generous enough to send it free to every sufferer who writes at once. It is a home treatment and will not keep you from your work.

As you know if you've tried them, every so-called rheumatic remedy on the market to-day, except this genuine cure, will cause you violent stomach pains, and some of them are so dangerous they will cause heart trouble. And the worst of it is they never cure. When a person has rheumatism the constitution is so run down that he should be very careful what he puts into his stomach.

It therefore gives me pleasure to present a remedy that will cure every form and variety of rheumatism. That remedy is

"GLORIA TONIC."

Before I decided to tell the world about the discovery of "Gloria Tonic" I had it tried on hospital patients, also on old and crippled persons with perfect success. But some people never will believe anything until they know it from experience, so the best and quickest way is for you to write me that you want to be cured and I will send you a box of "Gloria Tonic" free of cost. No matter what your form of rheumatism is—acute, chronic, muscular, inflammatory, sciatic, neuralgia, gout, lumbago, etc., "Gloria Tonic" will surely cure you. Do not mind if other remedies have failed you, nor mind if doctors say you are incurable. Mind no one but write me to-day sure. "Gloria Tonic" will stop those aches, pains, and inflammations, and cure you so that life will again be worth living. This offer is not for curiosity seekers but is made to rheumatics only. To them I will send a trial package of "Gloria Tonic" free.

Never before has a remedy been so highly endorsed as "Gloria Tonic." Among the eminent people who endorsed it are:

DR. G. QUINTERO, X. Medical Doctor and Surgeon of the University of Venezuela, whose indorsement of "Gloria Tonic" bears the official seal of the United States Consulate.

HON. EUGENE H. PLUMACHER, UNITED STATES CONSUL, Maracaiba.

STEVENSON MACADAM, F. I. C., F. C. S. of Analytical Laboratory Surgeons Hall Edinburg, Scotland.

L. L. RATHMAN, CALOOTE, South Australia.

THE EDITOR of the famous Medical Journal "Health," London, England, and many others.

So far this marvelous remedy has cured persons of upwards of 86 years of age, their suffering dating from 8 weeks to 52 years. It is put up in tablet form and is free from ACIDS and ALCOHOL.

If you are a sufferer send your name to-day and by return mail you will receive "Gloria Tonic" and also the most elaborate book ever gotten up on the subject of Rheumatism, absolutely free. This book contains many drawings from actual life and will tell you all about your case. You get "Gloria Tonic" and this wonderful book at the same time, both free, so let me hear from you at once and soon you will be cured. Address: JOHN A. SMITH, 1508 Gloria Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Minnesota Convention.

The forty-eighth annual convention of the Minnesota Christian missionary society was held at Mankato. It was generally agreed that it was the best convention ever held in the state by our people, though not as largely attended as it was hoped it would be, but the spirit of the convention made up for any lack of numbers. E. A. Orr and his church made every preparation, and their welcome was most cordial to all the delegates. All the speeches deserve special mention, but the demands on your columns preclude this. John C. Harris, of Madelia, responded to Brother Orr's address of welcome. R. W. Abberley gave us a fine presidential speech. The reports of the corresponding secretary and treasurer showed a healthy growth during the year. An interesting discussion followed Claris Yeuell's address on "The Bible-school and Missions." Geo. W. Muckley gave us a spiritual feast in his sermon, and presented church extension in a most practical and helpful way. "Minnesota as a Mission Field," by E. C. Nicholson, and "Obligation of the Church to our Foreign Population," by P. E. Mastrom, and "The Foreign Missions," by F. M. Rains, were all much enjoyed. In the Bible-school session, "How to Hold a Successful Rally Day," was discussed by B. V. Black, and "The Relation of the Bible-school to the Church," by Geo. W. Wise. Brother Clemens, of Illinois, presented the work of the Benevolent Association, and a fitting climax to the morning session came in a sermon by A. D. Harmon. The "Tithing Question" was a practical talk by J. M. Dixon, and our new state evangelist, C. R. Neel, gave us his views on the work of the evangelist. The closing address of the convention was by Fred Kline, on "The Deepening of the Spiritual Life in the Churches." The new officers are: M. R. Waters, president; A. D. Harmon, vice-president; Chas. Oliver, treasurer; C. B. Osgood, superintendent of Christian Endeavor; Fred Kline, superintendent of Sunday-school work. The convention will meet next year at the First church, St. Paul, where for some time C. R. Neel has been in charge. He has begun his work as state evangelist, by holding a meeting at Austin. In September he will assist C. B. Osgood in a meeting at Winona.

Florida.

The First church of Jacksonville has finally been able to complete the interior of their beautiful building with the exception of the pipe organ, which they hope to install soon. They now have the most beautiful and complete plant owned by our people south of Kentucky.

Tampa has dedicated the chapel of her new building. It is of white brick with red trimmings, with handsome colonial porch over front entrance. It is furnished with golden oak pews, handsome pulpit chairs, etc.; aisles and pulpit carpeted, and convenient robing rooms adjoining the baptistry. One peculiar feature of dedication day was, no attempt was made to raise money. The property is worth $5,500, and the Church Extension Board is the only creditor, having loaned $1,000 to complete the building. Its seating capacity of 300 is ample for the present needs of the congregation.

E. H. Rayner, of Kissimmee, is in the north soliciting funds for the completion of their building. They need $1,000. Theirs is a needy field, and if Pastor Rayner comes to you, do not refuse him aid.

The state board is keeping three evangelists in the field through the sweltering heat of a Florida summer. Evangelists White and Chisholm have organized a congregation at Perry, and Evangelist Cox is about ready for organization at Lakeland.

Florida is coming to her own so far as our people are concerned. If you are a preacher with a mind to work, and not merely "a bird of passage" wanting to spend the winter in Florida, it might pay you to write me.

J. P. Rowlison, Cor. Sec'y.

Items from North Carolina.

All roads lead to Wilson, for pupils who wish to enter college and get the best and most thorough course of training in the southeast.

Atlantic Christian college has recently closed a most encouraging and successful year's work, and the prospects for a greatly increased enrollment for the coming year are very bright.

Dr. J. J. Harper, the president of the Atlantic Christian college, is spending the vacation season among the "boys and girls" seeking to lead them to the "hub" of the southeast.

J. Boyd Jones, the corresponding secretary of the North Carolina Christian missionary convention, and pastor of the church at Wilson, has just closed a splendid meeting at Macclesfield, N. C., where there was no church of any order. Mr. Jones organized a church from the number of converts, and purchased a lot upon which the congregation will build at once.

In the absence of Preston Bell Hall, the beloved pastor of the Kinston church at Baltimore, attending the great Christian Endeavor convention, R. A. Smith, state evangelist, supplied the Kinston pulpit July 9. Kinston church doubled its last year's offering for state missions.

D. W. Arnold has resigned the pastorates of Wilson's Mills and Dunn. We understand that Brother Arnold is to go to Bethany to accept work there. Brother Arnold was a student during the past few years at Atlantic Christian college.

There is a great need of preachers in eastern North Carolina, and any brethren who wish to work among some of the best people in the land, at a moderate but living income, will please address J. Boyd Jones, the corresponding secretary, at Wilson, N. C., or the writer at Rocky Mount, N. C.

The church at Plymouth has been desirous of locating a pastor for several months. This is a most delightful town, church and people. The work is at present cared for by the state evangelist.

We greatly regret that illness has taken Elder Peter Swain from the ranks of the preaching brethren for the last few months. We pray for his speedy and permanent recovery. He is the prince of country preachers. He ministered to the churchers at Zion's Chapel and Saints' Delight.

The writer took charge of the newly organized church at Rocky Mount about the middle of June, in addition to his work as state evangelist. The Methodist Protestant church has been rented temporarily, and a sufficient sum has been subscribed to purchase a splendid lot in a good residence locality. The congregation contemplates erecting a brick chapel in the near future.

North Carolina is a needy field. It has people. It needs preachers. The state missionary society can use double the amount of funds to permanent advantage. The American Christian Missionary Society wants to help North Carolina. Therefore remember North Carolina, and take up the belated offering for home missions.

Raymond A. Smith,
State evangelist of N. C.
Rocky Mount, N. C.

Notes from the Sunny South.

Wilson and Lintt are in a successful meeting at McComb City, Miss. Over 30 additions to date. W. W. Phares, corresponding secretary for Mississippi and minister of the McComb church, is taking medical treatment in New Orleans and is rapidly gaining strength.

Bro. A. C. Harris, of Montgomery, Ala., is the new minister at the First Christian church in New Orleans. Brother Harris has had several years' experience as a minister in Montgomery and is actively taking hold of the work here.

The Soniat avenue Christian church have called Simpson Ely to hold a meeting for them in November.

Judge Thornton, the patriarchal president of our state board, recently inspected the two churches in this city. His presence was a benediction.

The Hammond, La., church gave $23 to foreign missions on children's day. Brother Lanehart is minister. He is planning for a missionary rally at Hammond on the fifth Lord's day in July.

Brother Gorsuch, of the Third church, Memphis, visited friends here in June and preached for me at one service.

The Soniat avenue Bible-school offering for children's day amounted to $18.

Bro. W. F. Turner, of the First Christian church at Joplin, Mo., writes that his congregation has unanimously chosen me as their "living link" representative on the home field. This is an honor which is very gratifying to me.

June 30 closed my first six months as minister for the Soniat avenue Christian church. There were 24 added to the church, nine baptisms. Over $325 was raised for missionary and benevolent purposes, in addition to the regular expenses.

Cannot our national conventions discover some scheme by which we may resurrect the "dead" Christians in our great cities? New Orleans has scores of them who, so we're told, were "whole teams," "splendid workers," when "up north." Now they have the sleeping-sickness. If we could only bury them it wouldn't be so bad! If you don't want your friends to get the sleeping-sickness when they come down here, send us their names and their addresses—and their church letters.

Marcellus R. Ely.

Just closed a meeting with seventeen baptisms and two reclaimed. This gives them a membership of over one hundred. They have a neat little church home free from debt. H. J. Rader, a scattered Disciple, came to the writer while pastor in Leipsic, and asked him to come and preach for them in the school house, which he did with grand results. Homer C. Boblitt, the minister at Leipsic, will preach for them on Sunday afternoons. Under the leadership of Brother Boblitt, the work at Leipsic is taking on new life. His audiences are increasing, and we look for great things from this church in the future. J. W. UNDERWOOD.

Western Pennsylvania Notes.

There was never a time when there were as many ministers in the pulpits of western Pennsylvania as at present. There are yet two fields where by the co-operation of two or three congregations a good support can be secured for a minister. There are thirteen mission points that are supported by the western Pennsylvania Christian missionary society, and every one of them reports a splendid growth. Two among the Polish population are under the care of Miss A. Christina Vasicek, whose support is furnished by the Christian Endeavorers of the district. Ridgway is a new point just being opened up by Evangelist J. A. Joyce. Every phase of the work is receiving impetus from the agitation and expectancy that is being aroused in the preparation for the great simultaneous revival in October. The list of churches that will join the movement is growing constantly and from the present outlook it bids fair to include all. It is the general plan to import evangelists from the successful ministers and evangelists of the other parts of the country, but some of the meetings will be held by home forces.

The Bible-schools have made a marked increase in attendance; some have gained 50 per cent, some 100 per cent, and a few 200 per cent, in the last nine months.

The annual convention of the churches of Christ of western Pennsylvania will meet at the Knoxville church, Pittsburg, F. M. Gordon, minister, the last Tuesday of September.

The corresponding secretary of the Church Extension Board, G. W. Muckley, of Kansas City, Mo., is asking for pledges from 2,000 churches to take the offering in September. This is a very reasonable request to make from 11,000 congregations, and this number could be easily doubled; yet when we consider that only 1,269 churches contributed anything last year, this will be a great victory if it is accomplished. Every church in western Pennsylvania should share the fellowship of this important work. There is good prospect that the fund will reach the total of one-half a million dollars this year. This is not large enough to meet the demands. Hundreds of appeals are still unanswered because the funds are too little to go around.

Wanted—a financial agent for Dexter Christian college. Address, R. A. Sisler, Dexter, Mo.

Edward Clutter, Tecumseh, Neb., can hold meetings or supply during August.

F. M. O'Neal, singing evangelist, 842 W. Florida St., Springfield, Mo., is open for engagements during August and September.

J. F. Sloan may be had during August by churches within reasonable distance of Topeka, Kan., for one or more Lord's days. Address, 529 Western avenue.

A man of some experience can obtain preaching near Athens, O., and do some college work if desired. Apply to T. L. Lowe.

E. T. Powell, Norfolk, Va., can put any of our schools or colleges into communication with a refined, cultured brother who would make a good principal.

H. A. Thompson, Liberty Center, O., desires to get into communicatton with a pastorless church in a small town or in the country.

Those wanting a singer and choir director, may write W. S. Slater, Plain View, Minn.

Mrs. Bessie Zlisinger, Plain View, Minn., who has had twelve years' experience as teacher of piano and vocal music, desires a change and would accept a position as organist where there will be opportunities for teaching.

The church at Lathrop, Mo., wants a good singing evangelist to assist in a meeting beginning Oct. 1. Address J. G. Creason.

C. H. Devoe, evangelist, Rochester, Ind., and H K. Shields, singer, are now ready to make dates.

Virtes Williams, Stillwater, Okla., is ready to hold meetings or serve as pastor.

H. H. Saunders, Noblesville, Ind., has all his dates for 1905 taken up except the month of September. He is ready to engage for that month and for meetings in 1906.

Miss Mayme Eisenbarger, gospel singer, of Bethany, Mo., is making engagements ahead, and has open dates for September and November.

Another Campaign in Texas

Richard S. Martin, Evangelist.

The growth and development of the Christian church is one of the marvels of modern history. Its members number over one million and a quarter, and they are laboring to restore the New Testament church, having already established 10,000 congregations in the United States with missions and missionaries in nearly all the known world.

This movement in a single century has increased more rapidly than any religious movement. From 1890 to 1900 the increase was 84 per cent. Why have so many identified themselves with this movement? No doubt it is because they emphasize the following important principles:

1. A faithful declaration of the word of God as all sufficient for Christian faith and practice, without the aid or addition of any human creed.
2. The divine sonship of Jesus as the central truth of the Christian system as the only necessary confession leading to Christian baptism and church membership.
3. The indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the life of the obedient believer.
4. The immersion of the penitent believer for the remission of sins, but not as a regeneratory act.
5. The union of Christian believers as in apostolic days. Not a unity of opinion, but a unity of faith.
6. The two divine ordinances of the New Testament—baptism and the Lord's supper—the latter of which is a memorial feast in which all Christians may unite and from which we have no right to exclude any sincere follower of Christ.

A great meeting has just been inaugurated at San Angelo, Tex., to advocate the principles set forth above. It is to last, if conditions are favorable, for a month, and will be conducted by the pastor of the church, S. T. Shore, and the Martin family. This well known musical family has held several great meetings for the brotherhood, including Sumter, S. C., where there were 126 confessions; Kinston, N. C., where 150 converts came in 15 days, and in a 50 days' campaign in one state some 300 responded to the appeals of Richard S. Martin, the evangelist. The family is composed of the father, who is one of the oldest evangelists in the field; Mrs. Martin, vocalist; Edna Martin, who is musical director; Elbert and Genevieve, who are violinists, and Nonie, who is pianist. It is "one family in one work." Its members form one of the strongest evangelistic combinations in the religious world of to-day. Their permanent address is Gen. Del., Chicago, Ill., while the national scope of their work takes them into all states. They are now planning a great campaign in Europe for 1906.

S. T. Shore is minister of the First Christian church of San Angelo, serving his third year, during which time he has endeared himself to the church and citizens and increased the membership from 65 to 140. He is a graduate of both the literary and Bible department of Drake university, and has so ably prepared for the present campaign that success is assured. He is a close student and ably presents the New Testament plea and makes pronounced the cause we present in this great and growing section.

The results thus far in this campaign are greater than expected. The largest crowds that have ever greeted an evangelist have listened with profound interest from the beginning. We are hoping and praying for large results. The people will know the New Testament plea—the "Divine plea" when our campaign is completed.

Clear, Strong, Scriptural, Satisfying.

"The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, is a timely and well prepared volume. It is clear and strong, scriptural and satisfying. Such studies are the paramount need of our time. There are three ways of knowing Christ: "After the flesh," which reduces him to the level of ordinary humanity and makes him altogether such a one as ourselves; superstitiously, after the manner of monks and ecclesiastics of medieval times, and by the Spirit. "No man can say that Jesus is Lord but by the Holy Spirit." The church, above all things, needs to say, "Jesus is Lord." The nation, the individual, needs most of all to say, "Jesus is Lord." It is short, yet it is the whole gospel, and the saving health of this age and of all ages: "Jesus is Lord." The Holy Spirit reveals the Master. This excellent contribution to the literature on this subject will be found helpful to any reverent student of the personality, wisdom, and modes of activity of the Spirit of God.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ILLINOIS.

Carbondale, July 17.—Four added yesterday here, one a Chinaman trained by Brother Brandt, of St. Louis.—A. M. Growden.

Armington, July 17.—Offering for home missions taken yesterday. Raised over $50, which is over four times the offering of last year. One confession at morning service, two by letter not previously reported. Geo. B. Ranshaw gave us a fine address Lord's day morning, July 9. His visit did much good.—L. E. Chase, minister.

Chicago Heights, July 17.—One added yesterday by statement. The pastor is also the proud possessor of a fine nine pound boy.—Harry E. Tucker.

Hillsboro, July 10.—Closed our meeting last night with 77 added, church organized, and a good strong preacher located for one-half time. Address, Lawrence Wright, for fall and winter meetings (permanent address, Des Moines, Ia.). We hold our next meeting in Illinois.—Lawrence and Edward Wright.

Jacksonville, July 15.—Held a two weeks' meeting at Martinton recently with 23 additions. Paul V. Archibald, of Morocco, Ind., led in song. He is one of our best. Charles C. Hill, of Eureka, one of our ablest young men, is the regular preacher. He was with us throughout the campaign, and proved to be a most congenial and competent co-worker.—C. A. Burton.

IOWA.

Charles City, July 17.—Three added yesterday—two by primary obedience, one by statement. One by primary obedience July 9, also.—G. A. Hess.

KANSAS.

Garden City, July 18.—One baptism at Santa Fe at my last appointment.—V. L. Goodrich.

Wellington, July 14.—One baptism at prayer-meeting last night. We have had four other additions not previously reported. The work here is in a prosperous condition.—H. M. Barnett.

Salina, July 15.—We have had 20 additions, 15 by letter and five by baptism, since last report. In this number was a young man from a sister church, who will preach his first sermon Sunday at Scott City, Kan. He has had seven years of college training, and appears to be a "stick of good timber." F. M. Brooke is his name.—David H. Shields, minister.

LOUISIANA.

Alexandria, July 10.—After closing the Shreveport meeting, we went up to Clarendon, Ark., to hold a little meeting we had promised before accepting the Louisiana work. The meeting was rained out from start to finish. The few fair nights were ruined by the vacancies caused by previous rains. We had but seven or eight additions in all, and only two baptisms. We did a good work, however, in reviving the building enterprise and raising the necessary money to put the workmen to hauling the machinery on the ground with which to manufacture the stone-cement blocks out of which to build the church, just as soon as the tent is removed. These brethren never had a house of worship, but will soon rejoice in being at home in their own house for the first time. We are back in Louisiana and at work. Will report progress as we make it.—John A. Stevens.

MARYLAND.

Jerusalem, July 10.—Here I am at Jerusalem at last. I came by way of Joppa, Shilo and Jerico, but in spite of all these Oriental names, I find myself still in America, in "Maryland, My Maryland." We began a meeting here last night; received one into fellowship at H street last Lord's day. Now for San Francisco!—J. Murray Taylor.

MISSOURI.

Brunswick, July 17.—Work starts fine. Five confessions yesterday. More to follow.—E. H. Williamson, pastor.

St. Louis, July 13.—There were two confessions at the Fourth church Sunday night and one last night at prayer-meeting.—E. T. McFarland.

Lee's Summit, July 17.—One was added by commendation and two by confession and baptism at Bro. Joseph Lowe's farewell appointment yesterday.—Thos. R. Thornton, clerk.

Larussell, July 17.—Closed a very successful meeting here last evening with nine accessions. This is a new town on the Iron Mountain R. R. We will erect the first church building. Our congregation was organized May 1 and now numbers 27 good, honest members. F. M. O'Neal led the singing.—Joseph Gaylor, state evangelist.

Carrollton, July 17.—Since our last report three by confession, three by letter united with the church at Linneus, and one added here at Milan yesterday by letter. We are having a meeting for a few nights here. July 24 we begin a meeting near Sheldon.—J. J. Limerick.

Richland.—There was one conversion at this place at regular services last month. The church has been painted, and papered inside, and we have new carpet for the platform and aisles. We raised money and painted the church at Dixon on the outside and papered the inside, and have money to build a walk in front of the building. Last Sunday was a great day at Crocker. We had dinner on the ground, and three services. There were five confessions at night, and two more at the water the next day, where all seven were baptized. There was a baptism at that place some days before, not reported. A Junior Endeavor has been organized, and we hope to be able to report a C. W. B. M. in the near future. Sister Fullen visited our county the first of the month in the interest of the ladies' work. While she came before we had time to arrange for her as we should had we known the exact time to announce for her, yet she has sown some good seed.—J. R. Blunt.

OHIO.

Jackson, July 18.—Two added at our regular service Sunday evening, July 16.—Adam K. Adcock.

OKLAHOMA.

El Reno, July 18.—We began here on July 16. Two additions by statement.

Oklahoma City, July 17.—Seven received into the First church yesterday, making 12 since Sept. 1. Work moving grandly on. This is a great field. It looks now as if I would not find time to take a vacation this summer.—Sherman B. Moore.

Perkins, July 17.—Six immersed at Vinco yesterday. Vinco is a new organization and a fine little church with a first-class choir.—J. W. Garner.

TENNESSEE.

Jellico, July 17.—One added by statement yesterday. Many such to be reached here. Committees are at work for our new building. We will raise $2,000 on the ground, ask for $2,000 outside, and borrow $1,000.—Wren J. Grinstead.

TEXAS.

Houston, July 10.—Three more additions at the Second church yesterday.—D. F. Sellards.

CRESCENT FRUIT CIDER
THE—DELICIOUS—NEW SUMMER—DRINK.
TASTES like the juice of the finest, fresh, ripe fruit. Made in four flavors; Orange, Raspberry, Wild Cherry, and Mixed Fruit. Pure as from the finest fruits reduced to powdered form, all ready to dissolve in water; prepared in an instant, no trouble. Send 10c for a trial package, enough to make a gallon of the liquid, or 25c and we will mail you a package each of all four flavors. Agents Wanted; our selling plan is a big success. Address COLUMBIA MFG. CO., Dept. E., Schaffer, Mich.

San Antonio, July 14.—We had four confessions last night in our Mexican mission. This makes nine additions in all since I took up the work one month ago. This is a great home mission field. The field is ripe. We need schools for training workers.—W. M. Taylor.

Detroit, July 17.—Three additions to the Central congregation at our regular services yesterday.—S. P. Benbrook, minister.

Greenville, July 17.—Two additions yesterday.—J. W. Holsapple.

Pilot Point, July 17.—Evangelist Simpson Ely, of Joplin, Mo., closed a two weeks' meeting last night. This was one of the most profitable meetings ever held in this place. Long will the community feel the power and influence of Brother Ely's teaching and conduct, during his sojourn in our midst.—J. P. Adcock.

Graham, July 11.—Evangelists Jas. L. Haddock and Talmage Stanley have just closed a three weeks' meeting with the church in Graham. There were 24 additions and the work was strengthened in many ways. Graham and the surrounding country was stirred with the plain gospel preaching as never before and the plea of our people is better understood in this country. The large tabernacle which was in the court yard, was full at almost every service, and the interest was intense from the very beginning. Over twice the amount of money necessary to defray the expenses of the meeting was raised by voluntary contributions, and people are still bringing money as an expression of their appreciation of the work of these godly men.—A. C. Parker, minister.

Beaumont, July 14.—The work here moves along nicely. Five confessions and one by statement since last report.—J. B. Holmes.

VIRGINIA.

Portsmouth, July 15.—The great crowds continue to attend our monster tent. This is pioneer work entirely among conservative eastern people. An organization is assured for next Sunday. Our tent seats 1,800, and it is frequently packed. At no time have we had a small audience. This town of 25,000 prides itself on its culture and "first families," and is said to be for our people the harvest in Virginia.—Herbert Yeuell, evangelist.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Wheeling.—At the Island church, two by letter last Lord's day, and one confession; two baptisms and one confession two weeks ago; more in prospect. We are saving souls in spite of warm weather. Prayer-meeting, Bible-school, ladies' aid society and Christian Endeavor, all booming under the impetus of consecrated and enthusiastic workers in charge of these separate interests of the congregational life.—C. Manly Rice, minister.

WASHINGTON.

Takoma, July 10.—Work starts off well; one more has just come, making nine added since arrival.—W. A. Moore.

BERRY.

James Alexander Berry died June 10. He had just retired for the night. Ten minutes after retiring the death angel took him without a struggle. He was in his usual health during the day. In the morning, before my leaving for Boone county, we had talked together for an hour or more about the interests of the kingdom. Brother Berry was born in Millersburg, Callaway county, Mo., March 24, 1830. He passed his seventy-fifth milestone March 24. His ancestors were Scotch-Irish, and some of the peculiar traits of his posterity he retained in a remarkable degree. His early education was obtained in the old log school house at a time when, as Edward Eggleston quaintly puts it, "The teacher always struck his best licks." He entered the State university at Columbia at the age of 19, and continued in school till the close of the first semester of the year of his graduation, when all his means were gone. Compelled to leave the institution and teach school to supply his empty purse, about this time he became a Christian and was baptized by D. P. Henderson. In less than a year from his baptism he was ordained to the ministry by T. W. Allen. During his teaching career he also preached the unsearchable riches of Christ whenever an opportunity offered. His teaching career was confined to the academy at Middle Grove, Monroe county, for about six years, when the civil war began and the academy was closed. At the close of the war he gave himself wholly to the ministry. His first charge was Jacksonville, Randolph county, where he remained till 1869, when he came to Moberly and organized the church here during this year. He continued preaching for the congregation for about five years. The church grew rapidly during his ministry. He was, at the end of this period, called to the old Eighth and Mound street church in St. Louis, which he served four years. From thence he was called to Carrollton, Ill. He served this congregation eleven years and returned to his first love, as he often expressed it, which was Randolph county, Mo. He preached for the congregation at Huntsville on his return six years. From Huntsville he moved to Ashland, Boone county, and served this congregation five years. From there he came back to Randolph county, and made his home in Moberly to the day he was called to his home on high. This includes a ministry of 52 years. And no one knows, except J. A. Berry and the Lord, the toils, the burdens borne and the sacrifices of this good man for the cause of the Master which lay so near his heart. During this long ministry he labored much in the missionary field, holding meetings in many places in Missouri and adjoining states. When I first came to the state, 35 years ago, and while preaching for the church in Mexico, I was called to Huntsville to assist Brother Berry, who was preaching there, in a meeting. It was then I learned to know his ability as a preacher; and then it was I learned to love him for his companionable spirit and his unselfish devotion to the Lord's cause. He was then considered by his preaching brethren one of the most efficient evangelists in the state. He has kept no record of protracted meetings held and additions made where he has labored. But those who followed him in his ministry best put the number above 2,000. Sister Berry has found one book containing a record of marriages, numbering 369. She says there is another book of marriages containing as many, if not more than the one found. His funeral preaching was probably more extensive than that of any other preacher in the state. And the reason is found in the fact that he has been identified with the people through a ministry of more than half a century. Nearly all knew him and loved him. The loss of such a character, so genial, so hopeful, and such a true model for imitation, cannot be estimated. His sermons were never raspy or pessimistic, but always optimistic, hopeful and edifying. Those who heard his eloquent appeal to live a better, a purer, a higher life, went away feeling deep in their hearts that they must, they would, be better men and women. The great Missouri brotherhood of Disciples will miss him in their annnal conventions. He has been chairman of the obituary committee for a number of years. Personally the writer of this will feel the absence of our brother. We lived within a block of each other. We have known and loved each other as Christians and fellow laborers for 35 years. And since his residence in Moberly we have been bosom companions—scarcely a day passing without talking over the vital things of the kingdom. But the separation on earth has come. Soon I will follow; and among the first I hope to meet close to the throne is James Alexander Berry.

RIDGE.

Mrs. Florence Dell Ridge, wife of Earl S. Ridge, and daughter of Prof. and Mrs. A. F. Smith, departed this life on May 24, 1905, aged 24 years and five months. Sister Dell became a Christian very early in life, and her beautiful character was a joy and inspiration to all who knew her. She was married Oct. 8, 1902, and left a broken-hearted husband and sweet young baby, with her parents and brothers, to mourn her loss. Her pure spirit is with the Lord, and she awaits the coming of those whom she so fondly loved and so unselfishly served in church and home. W. F. R.

STAFFORD.

Died at his home, Atlantic, Ia., April 21, 1905, Wm. C. Stafford, age 70 years, four months and 28 days. The deceased leaves an aged wife and one son, besides a host of friends, to mourn his death.

JONATHAN; A Tragedy. By Thomas Ewing, Jr. (Funk & Wagnalls Pub. Co., New York and London. Price $1.00, net.)

One of the noblest characters of Old Testament history was Jonathan, son of Saul and friend of David. From the glimpse which the Bible gives of him, he was broad-minded, unselfish, and capable of the very strongest friendship, and possessing high ideals. The author of this tragedy has made use of such Biblical material as there is and has filled out the details where they were lacking so as to place Jonathan in his true light. The work possesses real poetic and dramatic ability. The Biblical material is used to fine effect, and nothing is introduced that is out of harmony with the Biblical facts. The story unfolds itself so naturally and so vividly under the graphic touches of the author that it holds the attention of the readers from beginning to end, and makes that old story of Jonathan and David and Saul live again, with all the mighty lessons which it contains for every age.

A BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS, for the government of the church of Christ. Organized according to law, on April 6, 1830. Zion: Published by W. W. Phelps & Co., 1833.

By the courtesy of R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Ky., we are in receipt of a copy of this rare book, issued by the Mormons soon after the publication of the Book of Mormon. It is deemed a most important weapon in the hands of the adversaries of this modern abomination. Its pretended "revelations" are a real revelation of the inwardness and hypocrisy, of this whole scheme of Mormonism. A mob destroyed the first edition of this work at Independence, Mo., in 1832; only a few copies were saved. One of these has been procured at great cost, and from it an edition of 500 copies has been printed for the use of those who desire some of the inside facts of Mormonism. It sells at the price of one dollar. Those who live in communities infested by Mormonism ought to have a copy of this book, that they may understand what sort of pretended revelations it is seeking to palm off on the people. Brother Neal is making a gallant fight against this aggressive evil and deserves the co-operation of good people everywhere.

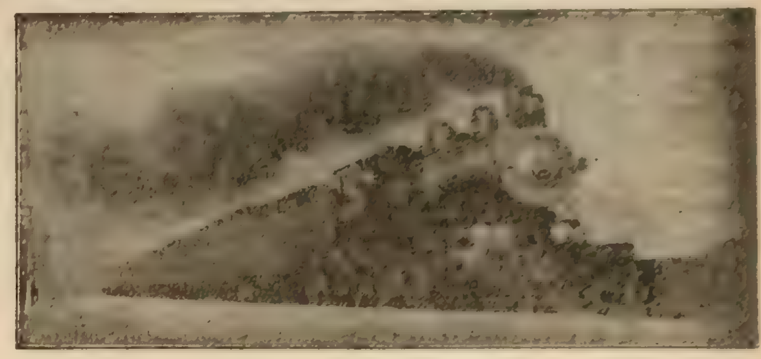
The Christian-Evangelist Special—Important

This splendid train will leave St. Louis at 9 p. m., August 9. We will be joined in Kansas City by additional delegates, a number of which are headed by A. W. Kokendoffer and T. A. Abbott, and at St. Joseph we shall have quite a number of additional delegates. There will be others join us at different towns along the line, and at Oxford, Neb., S. D. Dutcher and W. B. Clemmer will join us with their parties.



Before we leave St. Louis, we shall have, in addition to those joining us from St. Louis and vicinity, a party of at least fifteen, headed by J. Murray Taylor, Washington, D. C. Also a party of as many more, headed by John C. Warner, from Indiana. Others will join us here from Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, New York, Virginia, West Virginia, Illinois, and other states. Now, we have a few matters to present to you which are of vital importance.

First. Your ticket for railroad fare should be bought at or near your home. It should read from St. Louis or Kansas City, over the Burlington to Denver, then the Midland to Salt Lake, from there over the Salt Lake and Los Angeles (San Pedro). Then over the Southern Pacific to Portland. If you continue with us east, it should be over the Northern Pacific to Billings, and then over the Burlington to St. Louis or Kansas City, or Omaha, or any other point from which you start.

Second. These tickets are good for ninety days.

Third. We provide you with tourist sleepers, two in lower and one in upper berth, at $6.00 for each person. This includes stops at Colorado Springs, Salt Lake and other places to Los Angeles. From Los Angeles to San Francisco we travel in day coaches.

Fourth. We will stop for meals at hotels with the exception of breakfast and dinner on San Pedro line. These two meals will be served in the dining car. The eleven meals provided for will cost you fifty cents each and only two will be served per day. Most of these meals would cost you seventy-five cents, but by arranging ahead we get them for fifty.

Fifth. Now is the time for you to register for sleeper and meals. This will cost you $11.50, and you will eat your first meal at Oxford, Neb., and the last at San Francisco. No further arrangements have been made. You will provide your noon lunch, as only two meals per day are provided for.

Sixth. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special will bear a magnificent company of people. It will do you good to enjoy the fellowship of such an excursion. For this reason we ask you to send on your registration fee at once and let us assign you your berth and also provide for your meals as above, should you wish the meals.

JOSIAH'S GOOD REIGN.—2 Chron. 34:1-13.

Memory verses, 1-3.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth.—Eccl. 12:1.

After the death of Manasseh, his son Amon reigned for two years until put to death by conspirators who themselves became the victims of a popular uprising. The outcome of this turbulent interlude was that Josiah, the grandson of Manasseh, was put upon the throne at the age of eight. The pendulum was ready to swing back toward a more wholesome national life and better religious conditions. The reign of Manasseh, as we saw in the last lesson, had witnessed one of the periodical reversions to more or less complete idolatry and, whatever may have been the extent of Manasseh's reform in his old age, his son Amon evidently inherited his father's wickedness rather than his repentance.

But idolatry, as usual, bred disorder and chaos. Regicide was followed by the murder of the conspirators. Perhaps these disturbances suggested to the people that the idolatrous conduct of the nation tended to produce civil discord. The preaching of the prophet Zephaniah at the time may have been a potent factor in turning the tide. Jeremiah's influence must also have been felt very early in the course of Josiah's reforming movement, for we read (2 Chron. 34:3) that in the twelfth year of his reign, Josiah began his active work of reformation, while Jeremiah's call as a prophet (Jer. 1:2) came in the thirteenth year of Josiah. Moreover, the great Empire of Assyria, which had held the rod over Judah for so long, and from which Isaiah had prophesied deliverance in the name of Jehovah, was actually beginning to shrink and tremble before the other world-powers. Judah no longer paid tribute, and it may be that the restoration of their freedom confirmed their faith in Jehovah's power.

However that may be, Josiah's reform movement seemed to meet a ready response from the people. At the age of sixteen "he began to seek after the God of David his father," and at twenty he began to destroy the high places and the symbols of idolatrous worship, and of the impure worship of Jehovah.

It is perhaps not possible to determine with certainty how much of his work was a removal of abuses which had crept into Israel's worship and how much was the lifting of it to a new and higher plane under the influence of the spiritual teaching of the prophets. It is entirely evident that the problem was not nearly so simple as the mere choice between the service of Jehovah and of other gods. Whatever may have been the view of the most spiritual of Israel's teachers in early days, it is clear that the mass of the people had never risen above the use of images, in their worship. The problem in Josiah's time was not only to win them back to the worship of Jehovah, but to accomplish an effective purification of the worship by separating from it all of those practices and symbols, high places, pillars and images which they had used in the worship of Jehovah, very much as the surrounding tribes had used them in the worship of their gods.

The destruction of the high places involved increased emphasis upon the sanctuary at Jerusalem, which led in turn to the repair of the temple. This, again, led to the discovery of "the book of the law," and that to further reforms of which the next lesson will treat.

FIRST FRUITS FOR GOD.—Lev. 23:9-14; Deut. 16:9-12.

For the Leader.

We are here this evening to take up in our meeting the study of a very important question. Shall we give to God our best? In theory we are all agreed, but in practice there is a question whether we are as sound as we are in our theories. Do we bring to God our best? Do we want him to be honored with the first fruits? We have heard the story of how the people of a certain charge used the largest potatoes for home use and for the market, and after this how they brought the little ones to the parsonage. Is that story overdrawn? In some places, I think not.

Now, if we had no light on the subject at all further than our own minds we would be ashamed to bring our God the last instead of the first, the small and the blemished. But the law of Moses was plain, as we see from the references, on this point. And we may be sure Christ would not be inferior to the law. He sets the spiritual, the eternal, first always. The kingdom of heaven, then the things of this earth. So we are asking if we find both the revelation and the practice on the side of giving God the first, the best. Let us search our hearts carefully.

For the Members.

1. The first fruits were the best in the Jewish reasoning. As the first rank portions of the field grew to the stage of ripening, the heart of the Hebrew farmer was glad. He rejoiced. He looked forward to the festival in his church that would mark the ripening of the first of the field. Now that it was ripe, there must be time taken to be religious before the hand of mammon should be laid upon the sheaf. So a sheaf was cut. It was taken to the priest. He offered it as an offering for the man who brought it. There was the thought that this was from God, and that God must be thanked and honored with the offering of the first of the field. So should we to-day bring our offerings of the first to God for his blessings upon us.

2. Why should we give the best we have to God? Why? Indeed that is a question that suggests its own answer, yet many have not found the joys that reside in its realization. God made man the best of all creatures upon the earth. He gave him dominion over all. He sent his prophets and law-givers to instruct and lead his people. These men were princes among men. No more royal men ever lived and died for the races of men than were the prophets. God gave the best in this way. Then when one was wanting to make an atonement for the prophets, even, he sent the fairest of them all, his only begotten Son. He came among us. It is said that God placed all the fullness of the Godhead in him. There was no divine attribute of power that the Son did not possess. It was all in him. No man was so fair. No man was so merciful. No man was so powerful in saving from sin. None ever graced the human body, or filled the measure of the divine, with such ease and grace as he. The very best. When there was no servant left, God sent his only Son.

3. Now he calls upon all that is noble in me to respond to the call. He challenges me to do the heroic. What an opportunity this is for me to meet this great love! How I should leap forward to the beginning of this task—this work he has given me! He has conferred great honor upon me above all other intelligences, in that he calls me to this high plane to walk with him and to be like him. Shall I sulk in my tent, and go not out when he calls me to this glad duty? No, never. I must be up, for my Lord is calling. He wants me to come. I shall get up early to cut the first ripe sheaf. It shall come to him with the dew of the early morn still upon it. In the quiet of the first hours of the day will I bring it. No one has been so good to me as my Father. The best he has always given me, and the best and the first will I always give him. Praise the Lord, that he has made it. And may he give me a long life in which to bring the best to him. May he let me be influential with my fellows that I may win them to the gospel way.

PETER IN CHRIST'S SCHOOL.—John 13:1-11; 21:15-19.

Teacher and Disciple. The very terms chosen by Jesus to express the relation between himself and his followers are those of the school. He is the Teacher, we are learners. His service is a heavenly discipline, and his truth makes us wise unto salvation. (2 Tim. 3:14-17.) No man comes to him except he has been taught of God. (John 6:44, 45.) To do his will is to grow in the knowledge and assurance of divine things. (John 7:17.)

The Teacher. In this heavenly school, the Teacher is perfectly fitted for his work, because: 1. He loves his pupils. (John 13:1.) Love is the best of all equipments for imparting instruction. Affection quickens all the powers of mind and heart. It establishes direct connection with the learner. It gives him confidence in the teacher. It creates enthusiasm in their mutual pursuit of truth. 2. He knows what he is to teach. (John 13:3; 3:11; Col. 2:1-3.) No doubtful experiments in this school. The instructor need appeal to no higher authority than himself, for he came from God, dwells in the bosom of God, shares the secrets of God, is endued with the Spirit of God without measure. 3. Is willing to serve. (John 13:4, 5.) He is not content with telling the truth, he must live it in the presence of his disciples. He must embody every principle of righteousness that his religion inculcates. Since what the world needs most is humble, loving service, he will himself render such service, and thus doubly enforce the lesson. He performs the lowly office of the slave, in washing the feet of his guests, that they in turn may become "bond slaves of Jesus Christ," ready to live or die for a sinful world.

Peter, the Disciple. This impulsive fisherman of Galilee becomes an ardent and apt pupil in the Master's school. In the incidents of our lesson we see him learning: 1. To trust his Teacher. (John 13:7.) The pupil is impatient because he cannot know everything at the start. It is hard to climb slowly up the slope of wisdom's mount. Why can we not leap to the summit at a single bound? But not even the Lord himself can tell us all his truth at once. The "milk of the word" must prepare us for the stronger meat that only mature life can assimilate. (1 Pet. 2:1, 2; Heb. 5:12-14.) 2. To obey his Teacher. (John 13:8, 9.) It is often harder for us to consent to let another minister to our needs than to do something ourselves. Peter was unwilling to let his Master serve him, not knowing that the Christ must first cleanse and save the sinner before the sinner can render him service in return. Men sometimes refuse to obey the gospel because they feel no need of being saved, while at the same time they are willing to do what they call Christian work. The perfect service can come only from a pure heart. 3. To become a servant of men. (John 13:12-17.) When the soul receives the water of life from Jesus Christ, it at once becomes a living fountain, sending forth that water to other thirsting ones. (John 7.37-39.) The legalistic spirit that would make of this beautiful act of Jesus a church ordinance, that of "feet washing," has missed entirely its significance. It was a social ministry for the home, a simple act of hospitality fitted to the customs of the times. (See 1 Tim. 5:9, 10.) Its lesson is embodied in every loving act of kindness, every simple ministry of love. 4. To return his love in deeds rather than words. (John 21:15-19.) Peter had been very ready to declare his love for the Master, but equally prompt to deny him, when tested. (John 13:36-38; 18:15-17.) But the good Teacher, who knew how sore was the heart of poor Peter over his downfall, gave him opportunity to reiterate his declaration of love, and then told him how nobly he should afterwards atone for his denial by giving his life in testimony of his faith. And in a few days this timid disciple braved the anger of the multitude, while he charged them with the murder of the Son of God. His lesson was well learned.

A Notre Dame Lady's Appeal.

To all knowing sufferers of rheumatism, whether muscular or of the joints, sciatica, lumbagos, backache, pains in the kidneys or neuralgia pains, to write to her for a home treatment which has repeatedly cured all of these tortures. She feels it her duty to send it to all sufferers FREE. You cure yourself at home as thousands will testify—no change of climate being necessary. This simple discovery banishes uric acid from the blood, loosens the stiffened joints, purifies the blood, and brightens the eyes, giving elasticity and tone to the whole system. If the above interests you, for proof address Mrs. M. Summers, Box 183, Notre Dame, Ind.

Financial Opportunity

"Fortune knocks but once at every man's door" is a familiar quotation. Ten years ago I started in business on $50.00 capital. To-day I am incorporated under a special act of Legislature for $150,000, and some of my friends tell me my business ought to be capitalized for a million. I am a successful business man. My ten years' record shows that. If you want to make money, join me in my enterprise. A small amount of stock in my company is at your disposal. Write for my book, "Ten Years." It tells the story of my success. You can be successful too. Address The Mac Levy Company, Dept. 86, 63 Clark St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Editor, Christian-Evangelist:—Will some "scribe," who thinks the gift of healing still remains or is resident in the church, tell us where in the New Testament such power was manifest, except by the apostles or those upon whom the apostles bestowed such power? There is much injected into the scriptures. Men are not content to stop where they stop. We are great "twisters," especially about the Holy Spirit. E. J. Lampton.

The Gulf between the Common People and the Clergy.

Editor, Christian-Evangelist: — In the issue of the Christian-Evangelist of June 1, in the Editor's Easy Chair, we read, "A day of rest, we say, but not necessarily of inactivity." "Have we been in bondage to our daily tasks, or have we used them as means to our higher development?" "A day of sleepy indolence and wearisome ease to many others."

My mind goes back to a home upon a farm nearly fifty years ago. A family of nine gathered round the plain but plentiful board; a good substantial house was shared by all, and all the house was used. No carpet nor lace curtains decorated it and a little frail woman we all called mother kept time with the clock by the busy tread, tread, upon the bare floor as the meals were prepared and served, and bedtime found all weary but busy knitting, sewing, patching, the father repairing shoes, if in winter. To feed and clothe the family, live honestly and maintain the fertility of the farm took all the time and energies of all. While school days lasted those too young to work went to school, and the older ones in winter.

What did the day of rest mean in this home? What does it mean in many similar homes to-day? Beside me lives a man of toil; his daily bread depends upon his power to perform his daily toil. What is his Christian duty on this "day of rest"? Faithfulness to his employer, duty to his family, duty to himself. "Sleepy indolence!" It surely seems so to the clergy, because they preach it, but let them exchange places with us common people for just one week, and there will be less condemnation for "resting." Upon this day of "rest" the toiler, by either trade or toil, feels ill disposed to receive demands from self-made boards for given amounts; equally do we resent the refused privilege to rest upon this day of rest, and hope the day soon will dawn when we may serve God with freedom as in apostolic times.

P. Clawson.

[We are not surprised to find that the writer of the foregoing is not a regular reader of the Christian-Evangelist. Our readers would probably know that, as they do not speak of brethren appointed to manage our missionary work as "self-made boards," nor of their courteous requests for missionary offerings as "demands." Nor would a regular reader of our paper speak of his preaching brethren as "clergy."

It is needless to say that the Easy Chair paragraph referred to contained no "condemnation of rest," but was rather an appeal for rest. Our critic's attempt to defend "sleepy indolence" and "wearisome ease" on the Lord's day, is very lame, and his plea for the "dawning of the day when we may serve God with freedom, as in apostolic times," becomes rather ludicrous in the light of such an attempted defense. Imagine the apostles and the Christians of their day, spending the glorious Lord's day in drowsy indolence, and calling it "serving God"!

No one believes more in making the Lord's day a day of rest for the weary and toiling ones than we do, but we have learned that there is no rest for soul or body equal to that of lifting the mind and heart into the higher realms of thought and feeling, of worship and of fellowship with kindred spirits, on the Lord's day. Let us not mistake laziness for weariness, nor lounging for resting! The more of heaven one can crowd into his life of toil, the more rest will he find, and the better service will he render for God and his fellow men.—Editor.

Doesn't Follow Campbell.

The Editor, Christian-Evangelist:—I have received your nicely written book on "The Holy Spirit." I find you follow in the line of Dr. Richardson's work, rather than in the line of Brother Campbell, in his debate with Rice. Having held several discussions with the denominations on the subjects, I have taken the position of Brother Campbell, and felt very confident in my ability to maintain it. The position you take, as I understand it, is that of our Baptist brethren. If I am mistaken, please correct me. I am very desirous the subject may be fully canvassed, as its importance demands it. As I have given considerable attention to it in a book I have written, I could only ask that both your book and mine be carefully read.

Hamilton, Ill. J. Carroll Stark.

[Referring to the above kindly notice of the Editor's recent book on the Holy Spirit, we have only to say that the author was not concerned to follow either Dr. Richardson, which he does not in all points, nor Brother Campbell, which he does in most points, nor yet our Baptist brethren. He was concerned simply and solely with ascertaining what Jesus Christ himself and his apostles have taught concerning the personality, mission, and modes of activity of the Holy Spirit. How far he has succeeded in this is for others to say.—Editor.]

Out of Doors.

Just to be out of doors! So still! So green!
With unbreathed air, illimitable, clean,
With soft, sweet scent of happy growing things.
The leaves' soft flutter, sound of sudden wings,
The far faint hills, the water wide between.

Breast of the great earth-mother! Here we lean
With no conventions hard to intervene.
Content, with the contentment nature brings,
Just to be out of doors.

And under all the feeling half foreseen
Of what this lovely world will come to mean
To all of us when the uncounted strings
Are keyed aright, and one clear music rings
In all our hearts. Joy universal, keen,
Just to be out of doors.

It Is Sometimes the Man.

By Maurice Paul.

At a table in the centre of the room sat a young man. Writing materials were before him, the pen was in his hand, but he did not write. The shaded lamp threw its light on books, papers and magazines; yet he did not read. With chair tilted up, elbow on the table and pen against the paper, he was gazing fixedly at the wall. It was no pleasing picture he saw there, for seriousness sat on his countenance, and the ghost of sorrow or regret looked through the eyes.

"Yes, I'll do it." With this sudden exclamation the reverie is broken, the chair comes to a level, the pen is pushed along the paper, but the ink has dried and there is no word. One hasty dip and the words, "My dear Edith," are formed on the address-stamped paper. That is all.

Another reverie is broken by a beautiful St. Bernard, which had lain at his feet, rising at the sudden movement of his master's chair, poking his nose under the bent arm and wooing a caress. Action followed suggestion more quickly than thunder the lightning. The arm went around the dog's neck, and the now penless hand stroked the beautifully blazed muzzle. Something beyond instinct told the animal that his master was in trouble. He licked his hand.

"Yes, old man, I must do it. And you'll have a mistress to pet you."

He rose with the thought. So it was the old story that was troubling him. A vague restlessness, searching for something—what he did not know. Or perhaps it was unsuccessful love—the love which makes a man of deep and sensitive nature a trifler or a martyr.

But it was not love of woman that made Rex Walton suddenly push the dog away from him, rise from the chair, and pace restlessly up and down the room. Unused to such treatment the animal stood still, with lowered tail and a softness in the great brown eyes that was all affection.

At length, brushing up against him, Walton was once more aroused to his surroundings. As he patted the dog, a smile stole over his face, and he broke out,

"Yes, Lion, old fellow, it's my duty, and I'll do it."

Now he was the man of action. The battle had been severe, but determination was in every line of the face that again turned to the paper on the table. Grasping a pen, he did not even sit down; but bending over, wrote with a firm hand a few sentences:

My dear Edith:—Duty calls me south on Saturday. Of course I shall call, and I hope to find you at home. Please excuse this brevity and give my regards to all the family. Faithfully yours,

Wednesday evening. REX WALTON.

He read it over. "Yes, that will do. It explains nothing, but announces my coming. It is better so. Love puts the best construction on every action. She will be glad that I am coming, and that suffices. If I surprise her my task will be the easier."

Rex Walton and Edith Langdale had first met six years before. She was visiting at his father's house, and he had, of course, exerted himself to make her visit pleasant; all the more readily that the girl was attractive in face and figure and possessed qualities which, in Walton's eyes, were of great worth. An admirer of women, he yet knew little about them. Ignorance and the desire to please—those twin steeds that carry thousands to destruction—hurtled him along the flower-strewn path; Rex Walton made love, and Edith Langdale loved.

Had he been told of it, he would have denied it with indignation. When some months later he discovered the girl's secret, he was beside himself with remorse.

But to him action was a part of his being, and, under some evil spell, he wrote a letter which cut her to the heart. He did not love her, he told her, and did not suppose she ever thought he did. He liked her; her company was very agreeable; but his attentions had been chiefly due to the fact that she was a guest in the house. It was brutal, yet he did not mean it as such. The sooner she knew the truth, the better for her, he thought. In a few days he received her answer. Yes, she did reply, though before he read it he felt he deserved all the hard words she could say. But they were not many. She declined to accept his interpretation of her feelings. But she admitted she had been interested in him to a certain extent and insisted that he had given her good reason to think that he was much in love with her. She closed with some pointed advice—a note that was kind, dignified, womanly. But, oh, what tears it cost her, and what a wretched fellow he was!

Another letter from him went to her. It expressed his regret if he had given her cause to misunderstand him, and his deep sorrow for having taken so much for granted, for having so sorely wounded her. He asked that she would not banish him from her friendship, but give him a chance to regain her esteem and trust. She replied that she wished him no harm, but that the future must determine her actions. Upon his acknowledgment of the receipt of this, the correspondence ceased.

Twelve months later they were again thrown together. They met as friends, but there was a fencing reserve. Her virgin heart held prisoned a love neither anger nor shame had killed. He had wandered down the cheerless, gloomy path that led to the haunt of the misanthrope. But his pride put a smile on his face when he met her. His gentleness, his considerateness, his studied desire to do anything for her pleasure or welfare, were finally accepted on her part as signs of his real repentance, and a hopefulness, begotten of love, once more possessed her. She went back to her home, but found occasion to write to him. A correspondence ensued which gradually became regular. There was no allusion to the past, no word of sentiment. He wrote of their mutual friends, his work, his trials and difficulties, the seeming impossibilities of realizing some of his hopes. At intervals they met, but he was always very careful to do and say nothing that should lead her to suppose he had grown to love her other than as a sister. But if he did not love her neither did he seem able to care for any other woman. He went into society, but it did not take away the dull ache that had come into his heart, when it first came home to him that he had unintentionally won a noble woman's love. If he had only loved her, how proud he would have been, how fortunate to get Edith Langdale!

Five years after their first meeting, she passed through New York en route for a continental watering place. Her health had failed her. It was nervous exhaustion, so said the physician. Could the man of medicine have read the emotion of the heart as he did its beat, he would have said this was a case of Viola's love for the Duke. Rex Walton's diagnosis was better than the physician's. He was sure Edith still loved him. It was not difficult to learn that she took no interest in the society of other men, and that her parents had given up the thought of her ever marrying. A suspicion which he had long harbored, grew to a certainty. For five years he had carried this burden, more as a fear than a reality. But it had robbed him of the joy of life. Now a sharp issue was raised. He could never dare again to intimate that he did not love her. Were he to avoid her or refrain from writing, it would have the same effect.

Was there any way? No—stay! If he married her! Pshaw! He could not; it was folly! But the thought would not be shaken off. Again and again he found himself arguing that she need never know that love was dead in his heart; all he had to do was to be kind to her and considerate of her interests; there was no danger of another love possessing him.

In sight of the world it was a good match. Both his own and her family would approve it, though she would have to sacrifice if she became his wife, for he was not wealthy. Then he rebelled; it would be ungenerous to her, unfair to himself. Could he deceive her? But would it be deception? Was the lacking sentiment and passion needful? Thousands of men and women married without it and, so far as the world could tell, were happy. And if Edith loved and he did his duty to her—was not that all that was necessary? No! But what if he did not ask her to marry him? Ah, that was it. She would fret her life out—and he could save her. So he debated with himself. It was in one of these reveries that his decision was reached. He would ask Edith to be his wife.

When he reached her home on the Saturday evening, she welcomed him gladly, but it was not until they were alone in the garden that she asked: "What brings you here just now?"

He hesitated ere he replied: "Oh, business and—duty. And you, Edith, you—" he took her hand—"I've come to ask you if you'll marry me." His arm slipped around her waist unresisted, while she turned her eyes up to his.

"Rex, you have asked me to marry you. Do you love me, Rex, as a man ought to love the woman he would marry?"

Rex Walton could not tell a lie.

"I will try to make you a good husband, Edith. Do you not trust me?"

For answer she kissed him.

"There! I am a woman and I have shown my love; but if I have been weak, I will now be strong. Rex, I have given you my heart, but you have not given me yours. Sacrifice is not what I want. I want love. I will not marry you."

* * * * * *

Six weeks later Rex Walton placed a beautiful wreath upon the brown earth over Edith Langdale's body. And every year he plucks a white rose from the bush he planted on her grave. He has given her his heart.

A Festival Among the Gigantic Redwoods.

In the Country Calendar for July, W. H. Irwin writes as follows:

"Every August, on the Sunday night nearest full moon, the Bohemian Club of San Francisco packs up and travels to its own grove in the Californian woods, to hold a festival unique in this country, and, indeed, in the world—the 'Midsummer High Jinks' they call it. In brief, it consists of a big spectacle, with all accessories of poetry and music, in praise of the forest.

"In all the west there is no grove more beautiful. The only other which may be fairly compared to it is the Big Basin of Santa Cruz Mountains, lately set aside by the state of California as a forest reserve.

"You come to it suddenly. One step, and its glory is over you. There is no perspective; you cannot get far enough away from any one of these trees to see it as a whole. There they stand, a world of height above you, their pinnacles hidden by their topmost fringes of branches or lost in the sky.

"The light, if it is early morning or late afternoon, falls through them in slashes of silvery haze. That light effect, alternating bars of brightness and shadow streaming from the heavens, is part of the charm. Even these shadows are gigantic. It is a grove of the Titans.

"Against the range of hills the valley cleft comes to a sudden stop. There is an opening in the trees at this point. It runs up the hillside in the form of an inverted 'V.' This rises from the valley floor between two big trunks matched in size; and it ends some seventy-five yards up the slope in a triple giant, three trees in one. Smaller redwoods fringe this area; a trail runs irregularly down it, and heavy fern grows underfoot. This is the stage of the High Jinks whereof a Bohemian Club orator said once, 'God Almighty was our stage carpenter.'

"To this grove, then, the Bohemian Club comes in August, bringing its tents and its club service. The members who can possibly get away from the city for so long a time camp out there through a fortnight of fishing, swimming, long tramps across the hills, camp-fire story-telling. It all closes with the Jinks, over which author, actors, composer and supes have toiled for three months.

"Once, this performance was comparatively simple. Now, it is usually a drama—or rather, perhaps, a masque—written in verse by one of the club poets and set to orchestral music. Two conventionalities govern it—the enactors must be woodland folk; the theme must turn on the restoration of good fellowship through the death of Care.

"Great nights they are, those of the Jinks. No one pretends to go to bed. After the burning of the statue of Care, everybody goes first to supper and hears much untrammeled western oratory. Then, in a side canon or about the camp-fire, the club comedians present the 'Low Jinks,' usually a burlesque on the High. And around the camp-fire members and guests keep going all night, and finish at night with a dip in the river."

Will Niagara Run Dry?

Government engineers have estimated the normal discharge of Niagara river into Lake Ontario at 222,000 cubic feet per second. The total abstraction of water by the five power plants in operation and in process of construction is placed at about 48,800 cubic feet per second. Add to this the diversion caused by the Welland canal, running from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario, and the power development along this channel; that of the Chicago drainage canal, running from Lake Michigan to the Des Plaines river; that of the new barge canal, which will follow the line of the present Erie canal, from Buffalo to Savannah, and the possible diversion by the canal that is to be built under the so-called "Love charter," from La Salle to Devil's Hole, in the gorge below Whirlpool Rapids, and we have, according to the estimates of the engineers, a total diversion of water from the great lakes above the falls of about 67,400 cubic feet per second. And there is the possibility of great power development of the Chicago drainage canal, on the Illinois and Des Plaines rivers, and on the Kankakee river, in Indiana, all of which is now beyond human estimate.

The real danger to the falls will come from the granting of additional power franchises in the future. If such grants should get through the state legislature in defiance of public sentiment upon this question, it is not believed that they would receive the official sanction of the executive. There can be no mistake about the attitude of the people of New York, and of the entire country, regarding a further diversion of the waters of Niagara river for power purposes, for while the present diversion has had no appreciable effect upon the cataract itself, there is strong opposition to new power projects that will further diminish the volume of water flowing over the precipice.—American Monthly Review of Reviews.

The Railroad and the West.

The year of the meeting of the rails at Promontory Point was very near the culmination in America of that ancient industry which always foreruns agriculture. The long trail of the cowboys, beginning in southern Texas, has stretched gradually northward, until, when the Civil War began, the rancheros of the southwest were marketing their herds in the northern cities. With the close of the war, the northward movement set in again. In 1866, a quarter of a million cattle crossed the Red river; in 1871, six hundred thousand. Year by year the cowboys passed on to pastures and to markets farther north until they had crossed every one of the five transcontinental routes, and even entered the British provinces. Then, as one by one the railroads were thrust out westward into the plains and their branch lines forked out northward and southward, they gradually robbed the cowboy of his occupation. The most picturesque of distinctively American types grew rarer and rarer. The mustang gave place to the locomotive; the herdsman of the fenceless plains to the stockbreeder and the farmer. Still more prosaic figures followed, until all the principal industries, save only such as depend on a seacoast, had their representative where, within the decade, only the Indian and the buffalo had shared the plains with the cowboy and his cattle. The population of the entire region between the Mississippi and the Rockies rose from 4,161,000 in 1860 to 6,322,000 in 1870; the territory of Nebraska had become a state in 1867. Meanwhile, in the Pacific states, the total rose to 717,000. The center of population for the whole country had moved forty-two miles westward. In both regions, the years immediately following brought a still more rapid increase. And again, as before the war, the movement had its parallel to the southward. Texas gained 214,000 inhabitants during the decade; but the emigration into Texas from the older southern states was due quite as much to political as to purely economic and industrial causes.—William Garrott Brown, in the July Atlantic.

Gentleness as Power.

We passed the lawn of our neighbor today, and upon the lower step which led to the front entrance sat his two-year old little daughter with one chubby hand upon the collar of a brindled bulldog. The dog was trembling with excitement because two wandering curs had stopped to settle some little dispute right there and then, and were walking round each other with much bristling of backs and snapping of teeth and growling of voices. The bull-dog could have made short work of either, and was evidently more than willing to do so; but he felt that gentle touch upon his collar, and we knew that he could be trusted to control his natural passions. His eyes shone and his feet moved a little impatiently, but he made no movement to join in the prospective fray. It was a pretty picture of the triumph of gentleness over power. "A little child shall lead them," we said to ourselves, recalling the beautiful prophecy of Isaiah. We knew a man some years ago who was conscious of his slavery to one besetting sin. Nothing seemed to restrain him—neither shame nor self interest nor the reproof of conscience. But one day a boy child was born in his house, and from that hour he was a free man. "My boy shall never be ashamed of his father," he said. The dimpled fingers of a little girl will restrain the fierceness of a brute that loves her. They ought to save the father whom she loves.—The Interior.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Alway.

Little pink feet
  That have trotted all day,
Wee dimpled hands
  That are tired of play,
And teeth white as pearls,
And tousled gold curls
Your dad's queen of girls
  To-night and alway.

Now, and alway,
  Just dad's queen of girls!
Weary of play
  Your tousled gold curls,
Lie spread on my breast;
And sweetly to rest
As day reddens the West
  Drifts dad's best of girls.

Dear, for all time,
  For all time and alway,
When weary, come climb,
  As you climb, dear, to-day,
Up in your dad's lap
When wanting a nap
Or to ward off mishap,
  Or when weary of play.

Always to me,
  All your life to your dad,
Laughing with glee
  Or sorry and sad;
Bring all to me, dear,
Your bright days and drear,
Your joy and your fear,
  And make your dad glad.

The Advance Society.

Well, our orphan Charlie is now enjoying a vacation on the farm. He was sick before he left the orphan home. He wrote from St. Louis: "I think I will enjoy the visit very much. School was out Friday and I was sick in bed that day; I just got up yesterday. I have a little garden in the back yard with radishes big enough to eat and also lettuce. Is Felix still shedding?" (As Charlie was here last summer, he is well acquainted with Felix' habits, and was often shed on, as he sported with my old-gold pet. It may occur to my readers that school holds late in St. Louis; well, so it does; seems to take a long time there for people to learn something; and vegetables are late starters, too. On July 2, came this note from Charlie.) "I am now at Mrs. Ryman's farm. It has rained all day. I expect you are at the Christian Endeavor right now." (The reader will please make a note of my good habits.) "I had to stay in Osborn, Mo., yesterday. I came through Plattsburg, and it was raining there. I expect to have a good time here." Yesterday we were called up by telephone by Mrs. Ryman, whose address is Liberty, Mo. She says Charlie is taking life easy on the farm. When his month's visit is over there, he is to come to my town, and you will hear more about him, then. Speaking of Osborn, what do you think? That town invited our Sunday-school there for a picnic; gave us the park, free, made a barrel of ice water for us, put up our swings and waited on us, and stayed away while we ate our dinner. It was a fine trip on the sure-enough steam-cars—it's fifteen miles. And although it was a few days until the 4th of July, the town gave us permission to shoot off all the fireworks we pleased. Such a time as we had, buying firecrackers—and some of of them went off, too, and all the torpedoes did—delightful noise! But some firecrackers are exactly like some people that come to see you, for even if you light a match to one end of 'em, they won't go off. I wanted you to know that there was one town (I speak of Osborn) with enough kindness and brotherly love to invite another town's picnic to come and camp on them, when there wasn't a thing to be made out of it for them, except the sense of having made people happy. And it wasn't "our church" there who invited us, but all Osborn. You may say, "Why tell us about this? We weren't invited to your picnic!" It's because whenever I know of a man or a town doing work, and spending time and money, just to give happiness, and knowing they won't get a cent out of it, I want to tell it. That's why I am so proud of the Advance Society's work with our orphan and missionary. When you send a little change for them, it's giving just so much happiness to the world. Mrs. Mollie Berry Bland, a lady living not very far from Plattsburg, is keeping one of the orphans—a girl—on her farm this summer. Little Mary B. Bland, not long ago, was at Yellowstone Park, and while there, told some people about our Av. S. orphan, and the result was a good little collection. In the meantime, people are still keeping the Advance Society rules: 5 pages history, 30 lines poetry, a quotation from a standard author each week, a Bible verse daily, and a record of the work in a note-book. Anybody else want to join us?

H. Jasper Dewees, Girvin, N. W. T. (Now, who knows where that is?): "Here is 35 cents in U. S. stamps, 25 for Drusie, our missionary, and 10 cents for Charlie. Our Master said, 'Save the scraps, that nothing be left.' I have these stamps and can't use them here, and you may use them for the cause we love. The letters from far-away China are so nice and homelike! May the Lord bless all such spirit." Grace Everest, Oklahoma, Okla.: "I've just finished reading the Av. S. page, and I'm going to try to keep the rules again. I kept them 11 weeks once, then forgot my history. I was at the World's Fair in September. Inclosed find 50 cents for Charlie and Drusie Malott." Mrs. C. Irons, Inavale, Neb.: "I send $3—$2 for Drusie, $1 for Charlie. If you are not a preacher, I think you—" (Oh, thank you!) Mabel G. Damarell, Walnut, Kan.: "I am sending the tenth report, and my sister Cartie's second. You failed to acknowledge her first report, which was inclosed with my ninth. You Plattsburg people were right in sending one of your nice young ladies to Walnut last winter, but how about giving her to our Baptist preacher?" (If I should say there isn't much difference between us and the Baptists, lots of people mightn't like it, for people will get excited quicker over religion and the civil war than anything; so I'll not say a word.)

Here's a letter from Fayetteville, Ark., and it's written, I see, by an old schoolmate whom I haven't met since he went away from college. The letter begins, "Dear old Breck," (but he doesn't really mean that I am old, you understand—nothing could make a person more sensitive than to get a jolt like that!) "I am not calling you 'Rev.' For the last ten years I have had it on my mind to write you a letter to congratulate you on the work you have done—" (but it couldn't have been ten years, for I was a little fellow ten years ago, or almost one). "I have spent fourteen years in Montana, and five here." (If he doesn't look out, he'll make himself old in a minute! I think he must have been about twenty-five or thirty, maybe not so aged, when he was in college. So we have him forty-nine years old, at least. Ha, ha! Pshaw! I'm not thirty-six, myself. What's he talking about?) "I remember you often, and the few months I spent in Plattsburg, is the very green spot in my past. I wish for you every joy, and that you may live to bless the lives of many children" (I want no sweeter wish than that, Henry). "I have two children, a boy of eight and a girl of fourteen—" (I'd better have said "over fifty" at the start. My! You are getting along!) "My daughter started in with the Advance Society, but 'fell by the wayside.' I enclose a one-dollar William for the orphan and missionary. Give my love to your father and mother." (They remember you kindly. Never did I think when I was a little fellow in short trowsers, I imagine—that Henry Shivel, sitting with a rueful countenance on the bench trying to scare up some sort of answer to the teacher, would one day be helping to support an orphan and a missionary that I had "started"!) Here is another note from Grace Everest: "The Advance Society work grows more interesting each week. My youngest brother—ten—reads his Bible every day and lives up to the same quotation that I learn every week. He doesn't care for poetry or history though. (If he just had the interesting kind!—for some history and some poetry is as interesting as a story.) "I am very much interested in Drusie and Charlie. Isn't he about thirteen?" (That's his age.)

Wilhelmina Mosby, Denver, Col.: "Having kept the Advance Society rules twelve weeks, I would like to join. I have read 'With the Children' since its beginning, November 3, 1898, and have been greatly

HIMALYA
(THE KOLA COMPOUND)
The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific, proving that HAY-FEVER
—AND—
ASTHMA can be CURED.
Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Clossen, 126 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes. Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.
Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

interested in all its work. I have at last decided to send in my name, that I may become a member of a society that has grown so much in so short a time. I enclose my report. I would like to know the cost of an Advance Society pin, as I want to get one." (The gold pin is 90 cents.) Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo.: "It comes natural for me to keep the Advance Society rules now. I send my little mite for the orphan and the missionary. May they prove a great blessing to the society! I hope Charlie will enjoy his vacation." Sadie Pugsley, Woodbine, Ia.: "Enclosed please find my quarterly Advance Society report. It is surprising how hard it is to keep such simple rules long enough to get a report ready. I'm not going to tell you how often I've tried and failed in some little point. I enclose a small offering for our missionary; wish it were more. May God bless her in her work."

Drusie R. Malott, Tai-ming-fu, North China: "The letter for $10.65 Mexican, and the letter from May Speece, duly received. It is wonderful to me the interest the Advance Society manifests. I am receiving the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, for which I am grateful. I really enjoy the Advance Society very much. To the members, young and old, I send greetings in His name from China. My heart is full of joy and thanksgiving as I write. How I should like to talk to you face to face instead of writing! I'd have a message straight from the heart, for God has done many wonderful things for me, has led me to the 'uttermost parts,' and has cared for me, spirit, soul and body, and is now keeping and blessing me. I do praise the Lord that I have not been ill since last July 9, when I left Louisville. But that is not all. I'd bring a heart-piercing cry straight from these countless lost souls in China, that would haunt some of you as it does me. I have just returned from a little walk outside the city walls, among patches of green. How like pictures of the Orient! Flocks of sheep graze on the hillocks, the shepherds in their midst as in Bible times; patient oxen, sometimes alone, sometimes hitched to an Oriental ass; the numerous villages; the numerous cone-shaped graves dotting the land—all this reminds me that I am in Asia. From the city walls you can count ninety villages. Heathen temples are numerous. They are usually one-room mud buildings, sometimes just a clay or stone shrine on a hill, or 'high place.' While out walking we looked into a temple—a dirty, dusty room with hideous idols of mud, clay, wood and stone standing all around the wall, and paper idols stuck on doors and walls. The heathen are afraid to destroy any idol, for fear some evil will be sent on them. The idols are greatly feared. Why is the church so formal and so cold? Why are people afraid to cry to God in earnest, or praise him when he does answer prayer? Because they are wondering what others will think? Have they not grace enough to be a little peculiar? But those who are wholly his, ARE a peculiar people. Let me tell you a strange report that comes from Szu-Chuang: On the 26th of the 2nd moon, Chao Lien-Hsing went to Szu-Chuang as an evangelist. The people pushed him out of the village saying they did not want the foreigner's doctrine. Going a short way, he knelt down and prayed God to have mercy upon them and to send the Holy Spirit to turn them to Jesus. Late that night the noise of fire was heard in the idol temple, the door of which had been laid up with bricks, probably to protect the idols from the robbers of temples. They tore down the bricks and found the clay idols fallen to the floor and broken, and the ancestral tablet in flames. It was newly made with a picture of the devil painted on it to represent their ancestor." (Some of their kinfolks in this country!) "Another wooden idol was missing; it was afterward found head hown in the cesspool of another house. They say no man could have entered the house to destroy the temples. They were greatly frightened. Some said it was God punishing them, and they came to the chapel, brought Bibles, and asked Chao Lien-Hsing to pray for them. Others said it was the big idol of the city temple punishing them, and they carried presents to it and pathetically inquired of it who had destroyed their idols and what they must do. Good-by; each of you has a large share in my heart and prayers. May God use you to strengthen his stakes and lengthen his cords. Pray for me."

Business Notes.

"Gloria in Excelsis" has not come to stay, for they are going out now in goodly numbers to those wishing the song book of this century.

"What is Your Life?" by Russell, is one of the books to put into the hand of any young friend, especially one leaving home even for a time. Price, $1.00.

Have you read "The Simple Life," by Charles Wagner? Think of such a book at 50 cents postpaid, in good cloth binding, full of splendid, purest thought.

The devotional books, "Alone with God," "Heavenward Way," and "Half Hour Studies," are always in demand and always acceptable. In good silk cloth, 75 cents each.

Our Bible school buttons, with Scripture texts and scenes in the Life of Christ, at 15 cents a dozen, postpaid, are meeting with favor wherever used and will grow in use among our classes once trying them. Try a dozen.

In marriage certificates, booklets and such like, we are fully equipped and will take pleasure in sending you our circular, with full list of the stock on hand and prices of same. Command us in any way possible.

Have you seen the "Dime Album," with spaces in it for securely putting away ten dimes, and by which the children easily enlist their friends in raising funds for many good purposes? Price, 5 cents each, good for years.

Our Cradle Roll stock is complete; so that we can furnish any and all our schools with everything needed for this happy phase of interest.

We have another new supply of Reward Cards in stock, and will be glad to furnish our schools or teachers with a list of what we have in hand, prices ranging from 10 to 30 cents per package, postpaid. We keep the best.

Has your school used the red and blue buttons or has either of your Endeavor Societies tried them? We have them for both branches of the work, selling either red or blue, for either society or school, at 1 cent each in any quantity.

A friend induced us to sell him a book for about the cost, then sent us a local check for the amount, less than one dollar, so that in helping him we worsted ourselves. Do not send us local checks, but if you do, add 15 cents for collection.

Have you seen our "Attendance and Offering Card," by which the children are induced to come on time, and to make their offerings for the Master? They are 1 cent each and will triple the offerings in any school. Samples sent.

Our "Birthday Banks" are really handsome glass globes on which the margin is very small, but which we carry for the good of the schools; selling them at 35 and 50 cents and $1.35, postpaid, we will guarantee that you can get nothing nicer for the money from any publishing house.

"The Gospel of Matthew," by Peloubet, was put on the market to sell at $1.25, the author having arranged to write a commentary on the entire New Testament, and for teachers, too; but by some hitch, the work for the time being was discontinued, and the present book is offered you, postpaid, for 50 cents, making it worth your while to have it if only for reference.

We have had to make another shipment of "The Christian Worker's Bible and Christian Worker's Testament," but will be well stocked before these notes are read, and we can fill your order or give you any information.

Examine our vacation books in this column, for they are the rarest bargains we ever offered for the summer reading and we shall be glad to have our patrons take advantage of it.

"Do you keep 'The Christian Worker'?" inquires a friend from Brooklyn. No, we do not, it is too good a book to keep, but we are sending them out at 75 cents each and no one has ever complained of not getting the worth of his or her money. It is good for young ministers, or older ones, it is good for elders and deacons to have with them, and it is good for any one wishing information on the church and its organization, equipment, service and work. Any consecrated Christian is helped by it.

The boys and girls will soon be off for the summer, and will want some good reading to take along. We have "The Young Buglers," "By Pike and Dike," "The Young Midshipman" and "Through the Fray," also "The Bravest of the Brave," and such like books reduced from 75 to 35 cents. If the girls wish something special, we have "Six to Sixteen" and "Six Little Princes," and "Book of Golden Deeds," also "Wild Kitty" and "Our Bessie" and "Four Little Mischiefs" and "Esther," reduced from 75 to 35 cents.

For older folks: "If I Were King" and "The Resurrection," also "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Virginians," also "Gordon Keith" and "In the Palace of the King," also "The Right of Way" and "Captain Ravenshaw." All of the above are $1.50 books, selling at 60 cents, postpaid. Our stock is complete.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Party Loyalty.

The ethics of party loyalty is a topic which stands in need of serious and searching discussion in this country. We all believe in loyalty. We all despise a "quitter." But when is a quitter not a quitter and when does loyalty become slavery? A current case, not in itself of national importance, illustrates the problem. In the city of Indianapolis a few weeks ago two Republicans contested at the primaries for the Republican nomination for the mayoralty. One of them was a reputable and reliable business man who went into the fight upon the solicitation of a great many citizens who thought that the city needed the kind of mayor that he would make. The other is a man who has already served as mayor of the city to the great dissatisfaction of the good people generally, insomuch that a great wave of reform swept him and his party out of office two years ago and the respectable Republicans before this recent primary were almost solidly against him. The latter candidate won at the primaries. There are some suspicious circumstances in connection with it, but on the face of the returns he was overwhelmingly victorious over his respectable rival. Now the question is, what should be the attitude of those Republicans who denounced him before the primaries and worked for his opponent? In other words, is a man bound to abide by the result of a primary in which he participates? The doctrine has been stated as confidently as though it were the most fundamental axiom of politics, and a party organ in the same city has been printing, under the title "Good Republicanism," a series of statements from prominent men who were against the candidate before the primary but declare that they are heart and soul with him now. "Good Republicanism!" It is scarcely good sense, to say nothing of good Republicanism, and it is certainly not good morals. Take the case of a man who, before the primary, was denouncing the candidate for corrupt connection with the gas company and in general for a dishonest, unclean and inefficient administration, but after the primary comes out with a signed statement of his intention to support him and vote for him against an opponent of the opposite party who is confessedly honest and at least reasonably efficient. It is not good Republicanism. It is only a good opportunity to put oneself on record as willing to vote for a known rascal if a corrupt action of the party, or a corrupt man in the name of the party, shall give the word.

The End of the Strike.

The strike of the Chicago teamsters is now, theoretically as well as practically, at an end. It just petered out and stopped, and the losers capitulated after the fighting had stopped of its own accord. By the terms of the settlement, the strikers lose everything that they were contending for—if anybody knows exactly what that was. The employers agree to take back the strikers as they are needed, after providing for the non-union men who were brought in to take the places of the strikers. The strike was a complete and utter failure, as it deserved to be. There never was any rational issue or any reasonable excuse for the strike. The cause of sane unionism was endangered by it far more than the cause of the employers. It was not only begun without adequate justification, but its conduct was marked by abuses which destroyed any confidence which the unprejudiced observer might have had in its leadership at the beginning. Mr. Shea exhibited a complete absence of those qualities which make a great labor leader. The whole miserable business dragged itself on through folly and violence—neither altogether confined to one side in the contest—and ended in a fizzle. But it cost half a hundred lives, several hundred thousand dollars in lost wages and several million dollars in interrupted business, not to speak of an incalculable amount of suffering, anxiety and inconvenience to all parties concerned. Two days of rational arbitration, or even of conference, before the teamsters of Montgomery, Ward and company struck, would have saved it all.

The Record of Crime.

The Census Bureau has issued a bulletin giving a summary of the criminal statistics of the past twenty years. It is not a pleasing exhibit. Ignoring for the moment all but the most atrocious crimes of violence, we note that within these twenty years there have been 131,951 murders and homicides—that is to say, there have been, as we understand the statistics, that many convictions on these charges. The familiar dictum that "murder will out" may be correct in a general way, though nobody can prove it, since in the nature of the case the only cases that can be cited are those in which the murder actually did "out"; but it is certainly true that the number of murders for which there has been no conviction would be greater still. But in the same period the number of executions has been only 2,286, or about one out of 57 in proportion to the number of crimes. It seems from this that murder is scarcely to be classed as an extra-hazardous occupation. We may or may not believe in capital punishment, but at the present time that is the recognized punishment for murder in most of the states and the ratio between the number of capital crimes committed and the number of executions indicates in a general way the degree of efficiency in the enforcement of law.

But in spite of this unflattering showing in regard to crimes of violence, we are told that these do not represent the peculiar temptation or the peculiar sin of our time. The characteristic sin of the beginning of the twentieth century is not violence but perfidy. It has its root not in anger but in greed. It is amiable, good-tempered sin, without malice or wrath, and motived only by a desire to get possession, by the most genteel but also by the most effective means, of something which belongs to our neighbor. So the crime of the age finds its truest expression not in deeds of passion but in betrayal of trust. Such crimes it is almost impossible to reduce to statistics, but their number, if we could reckon them all, great and small, would be something terrifying.

"Fads and Fancies."

When the rich are crooked, the business of blackmail becomes highly lucrative. A large number of New York's social and financial leaders have been subscribing sums varying from $500 to $10,000 for copies of a very limited edition of a book to be called "Fads and Fancies." The book is to be made up of the things which the most prominent people in New York do not want to have printed, and the subscription price above-mentioned carries with it the assurance that the subscriber will not be mentioned in the volume, or at least that he will have the privilege of editing the part of the work which refers to him. It is anticipated that if the subscription list is large enough it will not be necessary to publish the book at all. In that case, everybody will be satisfied; the subscribers, because they will have gotten what they really paid for, which is silence; the publishers because they will then be able to save the expense of getting out the book, and their gross receipts and net profits will coincide. The incident suggests a good many things which might be said, but most of them are so obvious that they scarcely need saying and nearly all of them have already been said. The moral of it is that the man with a guilty conscience is an easy mark. He does not know to a certainty how much anyone may know about his record, but he knows that there is plenty to know. So he pays liberally to purchase the silence of a fellow who perhaps knows nothing at all except that he has a vague suspicion that there is a hidden skeleton in the wealthy one's closet which he would hate to have exhibited. It is as true on Wall street and Fifth avenue as it is in a sermon that the man who departs from the narrow path puts himself doubly in danger of his foes. The sage of Israel was wise when he prayed: "Lead me in a plain path, O Lord, because of mine enemies."

Preparations for Peace. As the time for the meeting of the Russian and Japanese peace envoys approaches, there are multiplied speculations as to the probable demands of Japan and the lengths to which Russia will be willing to go to purchase the peace which she so sorely needs. Of course, the envoys themselves are not talking for publication, but Mr. Sato, who is serving in a way as spokesman for the Japanese commission, gave an interview a few days ago in New York which sheds a little light on the subject, and the Japanese have exhibited such masterly ability to keep quiet during this war that one is justified in believing that Mr. Sato did not talk to the reporters without authorization and a definite purpose. He indicated unmistakably that Japan would demand an indemnity. It would be impossible for the commissioners to disregard the unanimous sentiment of the Japanese people which demands indemnity. He said they would be moderate and reasonable in their demands—though just what moderation is in such a case will depend very much upon the point of view—but hinted that, since it had been a very expensive war, costing Japan at the present time about a million dollars a day, the commissioners would have to take this fact into consideration in determining what would be a reasonable indemnity. This rather bold statement of the case was perhaps issued so that Russian sentiment would have a little time to be adjusting itself to the inevitable before the meeting of the commissioners. It is unquestionably a reasonable demand that Russia should pay an indemnity in cash besides whatever territorial concession shall be deemed equitable. The day has of course gone by when a victorious power can grind its enemy in the dust and demand from it the last degree of humiliation. According to modern usage, the powers do not allow combatants to fight to a finish, even when they are so disposed. But modern usage does sanction the demand for a money indemnity whereby the expenses of the war are thrown upon the side which, by the arbitrament of arms, is proven to be in the wrong. This war was not of Japan's seeking. It was brought about by Russia's refusal to carry out treaty obligations which, while they interested Japan primarily, were also a matter of concern to all the powers of Europe. It was not a war of aggression on the part of Japan. Russia's aggression made the war inevitable, and, since she has failed to make good her unlawful contention, Russia should pay the freight. Since Russia has lost her case in the court of war, it is just that the costs should be assessed against her.

The Open Door. Another part of Mr. Sato's interview is interesting and important. It is that in which he expresses Japan's attitude toward China. While all the powers of Europe have been jockeying for a favorable position before the peace negotiations begin and attempting to make their respective influences as potent as possible in the councils of Russia and Japan, China has been waiting on the doorstep, though she is the nation whose fate and fortune are most intimately concerned in the outcome. Mr. Sato makes it pretty plain that, in so far as he is entitled to speak for the attitude of his government, Japan is prepared to assume the responsibility of a quasi protectorate over China. His idea is that Japan should declare a sort of Monroe doctrine of the far East, somewhat less definite and decisive than our attitude with reference to the South American republics, but sufficiently explicit to guarantee the open door, or, as he felicitously phrases it, "equal opportunity." While he was speaking particularly of Manchuria, because the most imminent danger to the Chinese empire is localized there and because the present war has been especially concerned with the resistance of aggressions in that region, it would logically apply with equal force and justice to all parts of the Chinese empire which are threatened with invasion by the troops or for the interests of any European or American power. It is to be hoped that Japan really intends to take as large a view of her duty in the East, and as unselfish an attitude with regard to territorial aggrandizement, as Mr. Sato's interview indicates. But moderate as his statements seem to us to be, they have already drawn fire from the Russian press. It is being freely stated by newspapers in Russia that if this is Japan's program, the peace conference might as well end before it begins, for it would only be a truce, even if an apparent agreement should be reached.

The peace envoys, except M. De Witte, are already in the United States. The Japanese representatives, who came by way of the west, visited the President at Oyster Bay last week. De Witte, after a short stay in Paris, which gave time for a conference with the French government and a subsequent exchange of dispatches with St. Petersburg, has sailed and is expected to arrive at New York on August 5. All preparations have been made for the entertainment of the envoys at Portsmouth, N. H., where the conference is to be held, and it is expected that they will arrive there on August 7.

More Trouble. The Equitable is not yet through with its troubles. One of the large policy-holders, backed by several others, has filed a plea for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the Equitable and wind up its affairs, charging that the administration has been such that policy-holders have not been protected in their rights and that the reorganization provides no effective or permanent remedy. The purchase of a majority of the stock by Mr. Ryan creates a virtual monopoly, and the transfer of the voting control of this stock to three trustees is not legally binding and permanent in such a way as to prevent such monopoly. Of course the legal stability of the new organization ought to be fully tested, if it has not already been, but it seems to us—from the standpoint of the layman in insurance matters—that the new management ought to have an opportunity to prove itself before any new entanglements are woven around it. There is no doubt but that the Equitable has money enough to meet all of its liabilities. In fact, one of the chief complaints is that, by paying back too little to the policy-holders, it has accumulated an unnecessarily vast surplus. Some of the directors and officers have been using these funds, or the interest on them, to their own advantage rather than to the advantage of the policy-holders, but the funds are there and nothing which has yet come out indicates any danger of insolvency. The peril does not lie exactly in that direction. As it seems to the uninitiated, the proposition to have a receiver appointed will hardly better the situation. Meanwhile, the process of reorganization continues. Paul Morton, who was first appointed chairman of the board, has been elected president of the society, with a salary of $80,000 a year. This is a cut of twenty per cent in the salary of the office.

The Real Question.

The question raised in Brother Ely's criticism of the union of Baptists and Disciples at Monroe is, in the last analysis, whether our historic position on the subject of Christian union is scriptural and tenable, or whether it needs to be amended to make it safe and practicable. Our great leaders from the beginning have held that Paul's enumeration of the unities, embracing the "one Lord, one faith and one baptism," is the scriptural basis of unity. They never dreamed of the possibility of all Christians thinking alike and doing just alike on all questions. Get Christ in the heart, they have said, as Lord and Master, and he will drive out all that needs expulsion and bring in all that is essential to Christian life and duty. Brother Ely takes exception to that basis, and argues that there must be exact uniformity of opinion and usage concerning names and the frequency of observing the Lord's supper, as a condition of union. He claims this on the ground of loyalty to the word of God, and yet there is not a passage in the New Testament that justifies his position, while the whole spirit of the book is against the idea of producing or perpetuating divisions by punctiliousness about names and methods.

Brother Ely asks, "Should we for the sake of unity, abandon our plea for a biblical nomenclature or scriptural terminology?" No such question has been raised, except by Brother Ely. What biblical nomenclature is it proposed to abandon? Is the "Union Church in Christ," less biblical, for instance, than the "Union Avenue Christian Church" in St. Louis? Or the "First Christian Church"? As to "scriptural terminology," what about the Sunday-school, the superintendent, the Christian Endeavor society, the official board, corresponding secretaries, missionary societies, missionary conventions, etc., etc.? Why should our brother buckle on his armor against the one word "union," used to designate a glorious fact among the lovers of our Lord in Monroe, Wis., and pass by a hundred other words we constantly use, and scores of names, for which we claim no New Testament precedent? Rather let us ask, "Shall we for the sake of uniformity in things not vital to Christian character, perpetuate divisions against the prayer of our Lord, and the express teaching of his apostles? Would not this be "to strain at a gnat and swallow a camel"?

What Brother Ely says about using the name "Presbyterian" just as well as the word union because the term presbyter is scriptural, misses the mark. The word "Presbyterian" has come historically to signify not only a definite polity, and ecclesiasticism, but a certain system of theology. This objection does not apply to the name he criticises. Some of the other names proposed have neither fitness nor sense to recommend them. Brother Ely is trying to justify himself by a line of argument which his own better judgment cannot possibly endorse as sound. This matter of names has been distorted from its rightful and original place, in relation to union. One would suppose from what Brother Ely says that we had agreed upon a definite name by which to designate our churches. But such is not the case. "Churches of Christ," "Christian Churches," "Churches of this Reformation," "Churches devoted to the plea for New Testament Christianity," etc., are all used to designate our churches or distinguish them from others. Now and then when an attempt has been made to rob us of this liberty by fixing upon one name the effort has been repudiated. We refuse to be bound where the scriptures have left us free, and they do leave us free to use any name that honors Christ and expresses fact. Our brother must look deeper than the name to find the cause of the divisions and schisms in the church. Placing the hands of a clock in the right place doesn't regulate the time; the internal machinery must regulate the hands. "Are they innocent?" Brother Ely asks concerning certain ridiculous prefixes. Certainly not, and therefore should not be used. A name may express a fact, and the fact itself be wrong. The trouble is with the fact, not with the name. As long as the fact exists there will be a name for it.

Concerning the agreement of the two congregations coming together at Monroe, to divide their missionary offerings with the societies through which they formerly contributed, Brother Ely says: "Now, I have been simple enough to suppose when Baptists came into our churches, they were no longer Baptists, but simply Christians; and that henceforth, by their prayers, labors and money, they would promote the interests of the churches of Christ instead of the Baptist church." Brother Ely's simplicity sometimes goes much farther astray than in this supposition, but he forgets that this is not a case of individual Baptists coming into one of our churches, nor of individual Disciples going into a Baptist church, but of two local, independent churches agreeing to meet together and form one congregation with the understanding that their missionary offerings, for the time being, are to be divided with the missionary societies with which they formerly co-operated. The question is not whether this is a perfect union, but whether it is not a better condition than existed prior to their coming together, and does it not offer a better promise for the future. If Baptists are not Christians, and Baptist churches are not churches of Christ, this might not be; but if they are not that, then our talk of union with them is out of order.

As to the Lord's supper, Brother Ely totally misrepresents our position, but we hope unintentionally. We said nothing about basing its observance upon "feelings." We spoke of its conscientious observance, and affirmed that no other kind of observance would be acceptable to Christ. Coming to the Lord's table weekly, as the result of an agreement in order to form a union, rather than being drawn there from a sense of duty, and by the magnetic power of the cross, would be no proper observance of the Lord's supper. This is why, no doubt, the Lord left no command, so far as we know, that his disciples should meet weekly and observe the memorial supper in memory of him. "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink the cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come." We profoundly believe in the weekly observance, not because of any command, but for the same reason which prompted the early church to its weekly observance—the love of the Lord Jesus and the desire to honor his name. It would grieve the heart of the Lord to know that his disciples were divided on the question of how often they should observe this memorial institution.

We have given space to this discussion not for Bro. Ely's sake alone, but because we believe there is a tendency on the part of some to draw hard and fast lines where Christ has left us free. Indeed, one preacher writes us concerning this discussion, that he is grieved to see that the Editor of the Christian-Evangelist is now "destroying the faith which he once sought to establish"! His idea of "the faith" has dwindled down to a few shibboleths, which he, and others who think with him, would put into the basis of Christian unity. This tendency is no new thing, but has been manifest from the very beginning of our movement. Mr. Campbell himself, and especially Isaac Errett and the men of that type, who have opposed this tendency, have all been charged with "destroying the faith they once sought to establish"! But every thoughtful man in our ranks knows that the future success of our movement depends upon our resistance of this tendency, as well as upon our holding steadfastly to the great fundamental truths of Christianity.

The Herald and Presbyter speaks a good word and a true word, through one of its ministerial correspondents, in behalf of vacations, and we clip it as a hint to churches.

> But in this summer vacation how clear the mind is to wrestle with difficult problems, and to see ways of doing things that never were dreamed of before! It is too bad that every pastor cannot have a vacation. It is too bad that there are some churches that even think that he does not need one. They would be the gainers. When he has cleared out all the mustiness that has been gathering in his brain for months, and thrown off all the burdens that seemed hopeless to carry, and has let the wind blow through all the avenues and even the marshes of his brain for a few weeks, he is good for something, if he ever is.

Notes and Comments.

We have not too many reformers. And when one like Governor Folk or Governor Hanly appears there are some people who will say that their action is based on political ambition. That is a spirit that looks too much like an attempt to chill what a mean man does not love. We need more reformers and we need more men who sympathize with the man of action to make that sympathy effective.

The papers still continue to point their gibes at Thomas W. Lawson, and it must be admitted that there is something spectacular in the methods of the Boston millionaire. At the same time a very large part of the public at least is far more interested in the alleged facts reported by Mr. Lawson, which, so far as we have seen, no one has yet successfully refuted. If these statements are essentially true Mr. Lawson's personality and his future political ambition are very small matters in comparison with the momentous problem of how to correct the colossal abuses which he has uncovered in his series of articles and in his lectures. Any attempt to minimize these facts by personal abuse of Mr. Lawson is likely to be traced back to the same source whence these abuses have come.

The newspapers recently have contained full accounts of the bringing back to this country of the body of John Paul Jones, the naval hero whose deeds of valor a century ago have not been forgotten by the government he served. His remains have been brought back to his native land and buried, with all the honors the nation could bestow, in Annapolis, the seat of our naval academy. If earthly governments are thus careful to honor the bodies of their faithful servants will God be less careful with the spirits of those who have been his faithful servants here when they have passed from their earthly tenements of clay? Is it not reasonable to expect that so gracious a God and so kind a Father would reclothe these spirits with immortal bodies and honor them as his faithful children by glorifying them, and crowning them with immortality? So the gospel teaches and so we believe.

The Journal and Messenger contains a very complimentary notice of the work on "The Holy Spirit" by the Editor of this paper, but accounts for its evangelical character by the fact that the author was "once a Baptist" and "has never been able to divest himself of ideas and convictions imbibed while yet in Baptist relations." We would not say a word in derogation of the great Baptist body which has stood, and yet stands, for so much that is vital and fundamental in New Testament Christianity, but as a matter of historic accuracy the author of the book mentioned left the Baptists while he was yet a boy, and all his theology, and all that he knows about the subject of the Holy Spirit, which is very limited, he has learned during his connection with the Disciples of Christ. Nor does he know of a sentiment in the book that is out of harmony with the essential and fundamental principles of our reformatory movement, in which the author of that book and the Editor of this paper believes with all his heart, as the most vital and important religious movement in Christendom to-day.

The question of laity rights is again exercising the Methodist mind. Only a little while ago there was a strong fight made to keep the general conference as a parliament for ministers only. Last year the man of the pew, however, sat in council with the minister and now the Central Christian Advocate is insisting that the laity has rights in the church exactly equal to those of the ministry, even declaring that in the early age of Christianity laymen preached, administered baptism, and presided at the Lord's supper, and all "invidious distinctions" in favor of the ministry entered the church in later and more degenerate times. We are not as a brotherhood troubled with much "clericalism." Wherein that spirit is much manifested it rather has for its object the desire to sit in judgment upon some other minister or editor. On the contrary we rather welcome the "lay" element to take part in the Lord's work and it is to develop this part of the forces that the Business Men's Association has been started. Undoubtedly the time will come when the Methodist lay members will control the church and the church will be the better in that day.

The daily papers have been making a great ado about the alleged "attack" on the Bible by Prof. H. L. Willett of the University of Chicago. He was reported to have severely criticised the Bible for its fragmentariness and its inartistic character as literature. Knowing the tendency of reporters of daily papers to extort something heretical out of the statements of religious lecturers, especially of the University of Chicago, we have waited for the correction. The Baptist Standard of July 22 contains the correction by its reporter who was personally present at the lecture, heard it, and examined the notes from which the lecture was delivered. He says:

> The facts briefly stated are as follows: In referring to the relation of the monuments to the Bible, Prof. Willett said that the purpose of the Old Testament writings was religious and not historical, and that many historical facts were not included in the Biblical narratives, whose purpose was not simply to tell the history, but to emphasize such features of that history as had religious significance. Many of the facts thus omitted have been supplied by the monuments and tablets discovered in neighboring countries such as Babylonia, Assyria, Moab and Egypt. He further stated that the inscriptions corroborated much of the historical data found in the Old Testament. Far from stating that the Bible is inartistic, Professor Willett made no reference to any of its literary qualities, his subject lying quite in a different field. The reckless character of the report as it appeared in the Record-Herald and was copied by other papers seems inexcusable when the facts are known.

Current Religious Thought.

President Hyde of Bowdoin in his commencement address, speaking of the function of criticism, says:

> Criticism is moral vaccination to avert more serious disease. No man is safe without it. Russia suppressed criticism; and routed armies, sunken fleets, ruined credit and threatened revolution are the results. Life insurance companies contrived to escape the searching criticism to which savings banks are subjected; and, as a result, one who until recently was a high officer and owner of a majority of the stock of a great life insurance company stands before the world charged with forms of double dealing which amount to the systematic pilfering of dimes and nickels from thousands of widows and orphans whom he had contracted to protect. Criticism is of three kinds: First, that of the public, which knows little or nothing of the facts. The second is self-criticism. The third is the criticism of the Lord, that comes from measuring one's conduct by the perfect standard of justice and good will. The man who cares much for the first kind of criticism is a coward and a slave. The man who is concerned only about the second is a fanatic and a crank. The man who is sensitive to the third becomes a hero and a power.

A book has been published from the pen of Wilbur F. Sheridan, which is addressed especially to Methodists. The author pertinently asks why soul-winning should be confined to a single month of the year. Of course that does not apply to the case of the Disciples. And yet the following, from the Northwestern Christian Advocate, is as good for us as for Methodists:

> In view of the three-quarter million of half-pagan foreigners who are every year being poured in upon us, and of the modern Huns and Vandals that are being bred in our city slums, and of the new generation of children which every decade brings to us to be trained and transformed, and in view also of the intense zeal of the score of modern "isms" which are competing with evangelical Christianity, there is imperative need of a mightier and more aggressive evangelism than we have ever known. And that evangelism, to meet at all adequately the crying need, must be an all-the-year-round evangelism. If this be true, the only possible agency is the pastor. He and he alone holds the key to the situation, for only he reaches the entire field and reaches it all the time.

> If our scholars shall not have liberty to tell the church and its young clergy the whole truth and nothing but the truth, then they will assuredly learn it from the antagonists of the church without and be taunted afterwards, perhaps, for their agreement with infidels.—Western Christian Advocate.

Pentwater Musings.

During the past two weeks, we have had a succession of golden summer days, relieved from any excessive heat by the cool lake breeze. In a word, it has been just such weather as summer resorters going north, wish to find. The outgoings of the morning and of the evening, have been glorious beyond description. Morning sunrise, evening sunset and noonday splendor have vied with each other in filling the earth with glory and beauty, and in making manifest the wisdom and goodness of God. While our little cottage, "The Pioneer," has been the scene of a good deal of activity within and without, we have taken enough time from our work to look out upon the beauties of our surroundings, and watch the changing colors of the lake and note the great steamers pass to and fro in the distance, and the white sails of the sailing vessels that glisten in the sunlight like the wings of the albatross. Sufficient has been accomplished now in the way of preliminary work to enable us to take a little more rest and quiet during the few days of our sojourn here before leaving for the San Francisco convention. Toward that great gathering all eyes and hearts are now turning with earnest prayer and expectation.

During the past week, the first roadway has been opened in Garrison Park, between Lake Michigan and Lake Pentwater. As this road connects the two lakes, it will probably be known as "Interlake Road." It is a beautiful winding roadway following, for the most part, a ravine whose sides are thickly clothed with trees. This road brings us in direct touch with the town of Pentwater, whose market wagons can drive to our door. Other roadways will soon be opened following the ravines that lead up through the center of the park to the summit of a high hill that commands a magnificent view of both lakes, of the town of Pentwater, of Ludington on the north, Point Sable on the south, and a vast area of farming country to the east. Here there are locations to suit a variety of tastes. Those who wish the highest summit with the widest sweep of vision; or those who prefer a quiet, secluded place in the valley or on a gentle knoll between the high hills; or those who would like an eastern front to greet the rising sun as it comes over Lake Pentwater; or those who prefer the Lake Michigan side with its wider view and the sonorous music of the resounding waves—all these, with their variety of tastes, may be accommodated in the diversity which nature offers here. The peculiarity of it all is that each one will feel that his is the best location in the park, and for him this will be true. It is a blessed thing when each one of us can feel that his place in the world is the very best place for him, and that his particular work is the best work in all the world for him to do.

It is a constant source of surprise to the natives of any region that people will come from a distance to their place and erect houses in which to live for a part of the year. They have been born and reared there, and they see nothing about it to attract people from the city. One of the carpenters working on our cottage said to us the other day he could not see why, for the life of him, people wanted to come and live upon these hills; that he wouldn't live in a cottage here for two months in the year, if anyone would give him the cottage! We can well understand how he would feel that way. There would be but little change for him between the village of Pentwater and these lakeside hills. And then there is a certain side of life which, of course, does not appeal to him. He probably belongs to that prosaic class to whom a "primrose growing on the brink," or anywhere else, is but a primrose and nothing more. There are those to whom the solemn stillness of the deep-shaded woods, the crimson and saffron hues of evening sunsets, the majestic movements of the storm-clouds, the grace and beauty of trees and flowers, the music of birds, of singing rivulets and lapping waves, make their appeal in vain. These things are food and drink for the æsthetic nature, but in such persons the æsthetic has become atrophied.

"Day unto day uttereth speech,
And night unto night showeth knowledge."

One must live largely out of doors and close to the heart of nature, to appreciate this and many other passages of the Bible. Shut up within the four walls of a house, or cut off from the view of the heavens by sky-scrapers and dense clouds of smoke, one has small opportunity of receiving the messages which these silent messengers of the heavens declare. The stars blaze out with rare effulgence in these northern skies. Last night a party of us St. Louisans had a bonfire on the beach in front of the "The Pioneer," and as we sat in the sand telling stories to interest the younger members of the party and singing some of the old songs, the scene would have made a picture worthy of an artist. The great lake stretching out before us to the dim and distant horizon, its waves lapping gently at our feet; the starry heavens above us looking down with their great and shining eyes, and the glow of the bonfire on the faces of the party, were some of the features of this picture from real life. The roasting of the marshmallows and the popping of the popcorn, which are important elements of a bonfire party, also entered into the perfection of the picture. As we sang some of the old familiar songs we used to sing down on the sands at Macatawa Park, some of the party saw in this little gathering, the prophecy of future beach meetings on Sunday evenings, as a feature of life at Garrison Park.

As the apostle John looked out from the rocky isle of Patmos over the stormy sea that separated him from the mainland and his brethren, he said of that glorious future into which he was looking, "And there shall be no more sea!" But the great inland sea that rolls before us as we look out westward to-day does not seem to be a barrier of separation, but a highway of travel and a bond of unity between the different sections of our great country. The unbroken view which it furnishes seems to bring nearer the great states that lie beyond it. One's imagination readily takes up the scene where the eye can no further penetrate, until the Golden Gate of the Pacific seems to be just out there beyond our vision. In a few days the tribes of our Israel will be tending thither to one of our great annual conventions. It is a long distance for many to travel and there are rivers, plains and mountain ranges to cross in order to reach the place of assembling, but the power of the uplifted cross, the constraining love of Christ, and the overmastering desire to extend his kingdom over all the earth, will draw hundreds of thousands from their distant homes to that great convention whose one central and absorbing topic is how we may help Jesus Christ win the conquest of the whole world. It is only as we go thither in the spirit of consecration to Christ's supreme purpose, that we shall make that convention of Christian workers an occasion of glorifying the name of our God, and of promoting the reign of Jesus Christ, our Lord, over all the earth. But going in that spirit and looking unto him for power and guidance, we shall see and hear and accomplish mighty things for the spread of New Testament Christianity and scriptural holiness throughout this and other lands.

LAST WORDS.

Christian-Evangelist Special.

If you have not registered do so at once. If you cannot register before time to start write us that you are coming. We shall have a train of seven coaches all for the convention and will be able to take you in. Come on. Be here on August 9; Kansas City, 8:30 a. m., August 10.

Seven Thousand Years Ago

By William Durban

I have been going right back to such a remote period of antiquity as would have made dear old Archbishop Usher stagger. Somebody has piloted me back to a time when our fathers used to imagine that the globe was still immersed in darkest chaos. My good conductor was one of the most erudite of living archeologists, Prof. Flinders Petrie, who every winter for many years past has gone to the old oriental Bible lands to excavate and to explore with pick and spade, coming back to England each summer, partly to display the results of the winter's toil, partly to plunge into a few months of arduous literary work, writing his successive books on the subjects in which he is one of the first of experts. At University college he arranges each July an exhibition in which are shown in fascinating array the relics which he conveys on camel back from the desert to the coast and then brings with him to England. The results are astounding. Let me note some of the things which a few days ago he told me. I spent a long morning with him in the midst of his priceless treasures.

Did Jacob Dream at Bethel?

Dr. Petrie last winter went not to Egypt but to the Arabian desert, and there, at Sarabit-el-khadem, in the Sinai range, five days' camel ride from Sinai proper, at an altitude of 2,000 feet above the sea level, he made a marvelous discovery. He had heard of a strange collection of ruins in that locality, so he took with him from the south a large party of Arab and Egyptian diggers, a train of camels to carry provisions for two and a half months, and several competent assistants. Three days' journey from the famous convent of St. Catherine he came to his destination. What did he find? Nothing else than a real Semitic temple, in the midst of a great circle of Bethel pillars, set up not later than B. C. 4,500. These pillars were in many cases beautifully inscribed. They were set up by pilgrims who came to the temple erected to the Egyptian goddess Hathor, the object of these worshipers being to seek oracular dreams and visions. Many little stone shelters were near the pillars. In front of the temple was a great space over 100 feet long, covered with a bed of ashes 18 inches deep. This had been used, evidently, for a very long period for offering burnt sacrifices. Said Dr. Petrie, "You see this exactly agrees with the Genesis narrative of Jacob at Bethel. When the young wanderer had dreamed as recorded, he said on awakening, 'I have had a heavenly vision. I must erect a memorial pillar,' and he did so. It was a very ancient custom, but it was entirely Semitic."

Prehistoric Civilization.

This Semitic, yet Egyptian, temple wonderfully corroborates the Pentateuch. For it was full of all sorts of fine works of the most ancient art. The offerings found in the great cave constituting the holiest portion of the shrine included great numbers of ornaments, bangles, sistra, wands, etc. The approximate date when the temple was constructed is infallibly fixed by the inscriptions and the carvings giving the names of various kings, such as Senefru, Amenhotep, etc. The great fabric had been added to by various monarchs during an immense period of not less than 3,000 years. The kings and queens of successive great dynasties had contributed to these additions. Now, why did Egyptian expeditions visit this remote mountain solitude? Simply because the region was very rich in turquoises, and the Egyptian kings and queens constantly worked the mines for the precious and lovely gems. And when the Egyptians had erected the shrine, to it evidently came multitudes of worshipers with their tribal customs, especially members of the great Semitic race. So here we have a wonderful shrine, the oldest discovered in the world, of Egyptian construction, but with these curious Semitic circles of the Bethel pillars.

During the last few years the opinions of archeologists have been greatly modified. Not long since the idea generally prevailed that in the time of the Bible Pharaohs the civilization had attained a culminating pitch of culture. It is mainly owing to the researches of Professor Petrie and his colleagues that the conclusion is now certainly reached that, on the contrary, that civilization was then in a very decadent condition. It had long before reached a wonderful height, but a process of devolution had set in. The art, the science, the philosophy, the morality of the Egyptians had been greatly superior ages before the time when we come on the Pharaohs of the days of Moses. They had been a great literary nation. The notion that writing was hardly practiced in the time of Moses was some years ago quite fashionable. The Tel el-Amarna tablets exploded it.

Professor Petrie handed me a picture. It was a photo of the stele of Meneptah, the Pharaoh of the Exodus. Now, that stele is one of the most important bits of stone in the world. For on it is engraved a priceless record. It contains the phrase, "People of Israel." This is the oldest monument on earth mentioning the Israelites. Do we want any more powerful evidence of the authenticity of the documents embedded in the Pentateuch? "I do not want to prove anything," observed Dr. Petrie. "That is not my province nor my business. I want to ascertain the real facts. But I am bound to say that contemporary monuments infallibly confirm the pentateuchal documents. No matter how those documents were compiled, how they came to be put into the books, the facts are corroborated in the most determinate manner by the indisputable evidence of these stones, stele, inscriptions and carving. And the further back we go the more wonderful the evidence becomes."

Concerning Our Churches.

I wish to reserve a little of my space once more to give a little chronicle of our own church history. You have among you as I write these lines several of our preachers who are, to our loss and your gain, to be henceforth your preachers. They have toiled here faithfully for years. I refer to our Brethren Mitchell, Bates and Todd. May America locate them happily! Also Bro. Leslie W. Morgan is for a few weeks on your side, unfortunately called over to see his sick father. Some of our church pulpits are thus vacant. If the right men can be found as successors the work will go well forward, for solid labor has been put in. Leslie Morgan undertakes to leave Southampton and to succeed E. M. Todd at Hornsey, where the latter succeeded me after my ten years of pastoral application. Thus do changes ensue. But I understand that our ministry is after all not subject to such frequent mutations as is your ordinary American pastorate. Only the vacancies have happened to occur in several places simultaneously. There is no restlessness in the English churches. If they can induce men to stay with them they like continuity. But America seems to have a way of drawing her children back to her bosom after lending them to us awhile.

Above the Town.

By R. L. Handley.

Above the town we climbed the hilly height,
And, turning, saw the city, at our feet,
With vision clear, in sunny morning light,
Of every tower and steeple, every street.

From heights of love God give us vision clear,
'Neath smoke-wreathed towers the needs of men to see;
The hungry souls, the stumbling feet too near
The brink of sin; out-groping hands for Thee.

Where ran the busy ways a sound arose
Of many voices. Grind of wheel and whir
Of factory we heard; the noise of those
Who toil; the clamor of the market's stir.

God give us, too, the moan of pain to hear,
And suffering for sin; the plea for Bread
Of Life; the wail of sorrow, cry of fear;
The prayer to light from darkness to be led.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Who does not know Chautauqua and the Chautauqua idea? The modest little settlement on the lake is known the world over and its influence is wholesome and blessed. Its message and its mission have been well suited to the times. Physical, mental, social, moral and spiritual culture for all, everywhere, without exception, it has aimed for, and every one, open-hearted and open-minded to receive it, has found its benefit. Education was the thought. "Chautauqua," says Dr. Vincent, "stretches over the land a magnificent temple, broad as the continent, lofty as the heavens, into which homes, churches, schools and shops may build themselves as parts of a splendid university in which people of all ages and conditions may be enrolled as students." It is an everyday college, in which people who never enjoyed any other college, like Shakespeare, Franklin, Irving, Whittier, Greeley and Lincoln, and hosts who have had college privileges, may work out their education. It is a great school for out-of-school people. Think of an enrollment of 25,000 readers, 11,500 of whom are housekeepers and the greater number between twenty and eighty years! Think of over 100,000 since the beginning!

Chautauqua used to be "Fair Point" on Chautauqua Lake, a lovely body of water 700 feet above Lake Erie, which is only a mile away, about twenty miles long and a couple of miles wide. You go 400 miles north from the Dome and then about 50 miles south along the shores of Lake Erie through great vineyards and fertile farms and gardens—a country which blossoms like the rose. Like so many good things it started in a camp meeting. The first Assembly opened as a Sunday-school Institute, two weeks of lectures, normal lessons, conferences, sermons, and devotional meetings, with recreation in concerts, fireworks and fishing and boating. The people dwelt in "tabernacles." It was in 1874. Normal training, with the purpose of improving methods of biblical instruction in the Sunday-school and the family was the primary end of that first meeting—the study of the word and of the works of God is the larger conception.

Lewis Miller and John H. Vincent were the originators of the Chautauqua Institution. The whole world owes them a debt. It was a broad and catholic idea. At the very outset denominational lines were almost entirely obliterated, and people of all communions asked to participate. Denominational headquarters for nearly all religious bodies are there, and these have their meetings, not, of course, conflicting with the hours in the main auditorium. Out of the little beginning of '74 has come a marvelous growth. The movement is like a great banyan tree. There are the Chautauqua Sunday-school Normal Department, the Chautauqua Teachers' Retreat, the Chautauqua Teachers' Reading Union, the Chautauqua Schools of Languages, the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle, the Chatauqua Missionary Institute, the Chautauqua College of Liberal Arts, the School of Theology, Book-a-month Reading Circle, Town and Country Club, Society of Fine Arts, Young Folks' Reading Union, Boys' and Girls' Class, Temperance Classmates, Look-up Legion, Cadets, Musical Reading Circle, Press, and many others; and hundreds of Chautauquas, some of which are almost as famous as the mother Chautauqua, have sprung up, and even in foreign lands have they been planted. All these have grown out of this beginning on the shores of this beautiful little Como, fourteen hundred feet above the sea, set in the midst of green fields and forests up here in the Empire State of the new world.

Chautauqua comes to us from the Aborigines. "A bag tied in the middle," or "two moccasins tied together," or "a foggy place" they call its significance. They had a bad spell over it—Indians, Frenchmen, and Americans—before they licked it into its present shape. Jatteca, Chataconit, Tchadakoin, Tjadacoin, Chatakouin, Shatacoin, Jadaxqua, Jaddaqua, Chauddawkwa, Chataughque, Chautauque, have been its forms until the New York legislature settled on the present spelling. The Indian legend goes that a young maiden of a tribe encamped on its shores, having eaten of a root growing on the bank, which created great thirst, stooped to drink, and disappeared forever. Hence the name signifying "the place of easy death," or "where one vanishes away." Now it is the place of easy life, or where the world vanishes away. Among its woods, along the shores of its charming lake, in fellowship with its genial souls, communing with the manifold voices that speak there out of nature and books and men and women, one loses himself indeed in a sweet and restful life, "the world forgetting, by the world forgot." It is a place of ideas and inspirations. On its platform great words have been spoken. All the noted souls in the world of oratory, from Simpson and Errett and Joseph Cook and Talmage and Gough, and Frances Willard, Garfield and Grant and Roosevelt down, have been heard here. The Chautauqua salute, "the blooming of the white lilies," had its origin here in '77. On the occasion of a pantomimic lecture, the waving of a white handkerchief by the people in expression to a deaf man of their appreciation of his silent lecture was the rise of the Chautauqua salute.

To the little group of Disciples which annually gathers here the place of special interest is the Disciple headquarters. It is an attractive building with an assembly room and lodging rooms for guests. Here the School of Evangelism, organized by W. J. Wright, held its sessions twice daily July 9-19. The attendance was not large, but there were delegates from a dozen states, and the lectures were highly instructive and the spirit of the meeting excellent. Bishop Vincent honored us with his presence, and a number of ministers of other religious bodies. The apostolic teaching and methods were freely presented. With such men as A. B. Philputt, C. S. Medbury, and H. O. Breeden to do the work it must be well done. W. J. Wright presided and S. L. Darsie, S. M. Cooper, F. A. Bright, T. W. Phillips, Peter Ainslie, F. A. Wight and others participated in the discussions. All present felt greatly profited by the school, and we trust it is the beginning of a large and useful work under the new Board of Evangelism. H. O. Breeden's lecture on The Perils of Old Glory in the great amphitheatre was received with much enthusiasm.

In all respects we had a good time. The bells, the Tabernacle, the models of Palestine and Jerusalem, the fountain and statuary, the boats, the bathing, the music, the lectures, the concerts, the readings, the classes, the throngs of happy women and children, the robins and blackbirds, the old ladies knitting complacently in the auditorium during the noblest strains of music or eloquence, the folks that get up and leave the orator at the call of the sweeter tones of the dinner bell, and the rain, rain, rain, were all there. But who would not go and go again to such a charming place? It is worth the trip to sit down at Lloyd Darsie's table and eat muskallonges, the great North American pike, the genuine maskinonge, and hear him tell how big they are, and dangerous, and what a mercy to other fish to catch them!

July 19, the church at Hagerstown gave a farewell reception to Mr. and Mrs. Bruce L. Kershner, who leave soon for Manila, P. I. C. A. Kendrick presided, and addresses were made by W. S. Hoye, Rev. Dr. Owens, O. G. White. Mr. Kershner spoke feelingly of his connection with the Hagerstown brethren and of his work in the foreign field. Here he was reared and made his confession of faith in Christ, and is held in high esteem by all. C. A. Kendrick has just closed his fourth year of service as our Hagerstown pastor. In that time the church has raised $14,250 and $3,151 for missions and 130 have been added to its membership. J. I. Bitner, wife and daughter, will represent them at San Francisco.

A Voice From Greece

The little kingdom of Hellas is, in the eyes of the Greeks of to-day, only a small portion of Greece proper. Whatever country, be it island or mainland, has largely a Greek population, that is a part of Greece, though it be subject to foreign power. Thus Greece is divided into two parts, free Hellas and the enslaved Hellenes, as the Greek subjects of the Turkish empire pathetically designate themselves. The inhabitants of Crete are semi-emancipated, that is, under the protection of the powers, against whom they are now in revolt demanding political union with Greece. Turkish subjects are not free to renounce allegience to the sultan and leave their homes to become citizens of other countries. They are permitted to live abroad only on condition that they pay regularly their poll-tax and other assessments, for which resident members of the family are held responsible.

The total area of Greece is somewhat over 25,000 square miles, a little more than one-third the size of Missouri. Nearly one-sixth of the kingdom consists of islands. Only one-fifth of the land is under cultivation, and one-fifth is meadow, pasture and woods; while about three-fifths are waste mountain land. One-third of the whole belongs to the state.

The population of Greece was, at the last census (1896), 2,433,806, nearly equal to that of Missouri. Twelve cities have above 10,000 inhabitants, Athens having 128,735; Piræus, 43,160; Palras, 39,000; Volo, 23,000; Trikkala, 21,160.

The established religion of Greece is the Greek branch of the so-called orthodox church, being independent of the Russian hierarchy. The Roman Catholic church is recognized by the government and has over 26,000 communicants. For over fifty years there has been a Protestant mission at Athens. Under the leadership of the tireless veteran native Greek missionary, preacher and editor, Dr. Kalopathakes, who studied and worked in America when a young man, a Presbyterian church is organized at Athens. A small congregation is maintained at Piræus amid trials and persecution. It was only last year that the Greek government recognized this Protestant organization as a church and exempted its property from taxation in accordance with Greek law. Thus much has been fought for and won. Dr. Kalopathakes has the oversight of three or four other Presbyterian congregations of Greeks on Turkish territory.

Dr. Demetrios Kalopathakes has lately succeeded his father, who had long been agent for the British Bible society and superintended the work of numerous colporteurs of the Bible. These now sell as many as 20,000 copies per year. They may sell the Old Testament in modern Greek; but the modern version of the New Testament is condemned by the government as heretical, though it was made by orthodox professors at the university. Many Greeks, however, can read the simple language of the gospels in the ancient tongue, though the modern version would be much easier for them. This scattering of the simple word of God is sowing for future harvest.

Strange as it may seem, orthodox religion and patriotism are practically synonymous terms for the modern Greeks. They are taught by the priests, who are distinguished from the laymen by dress rather than by mother wit or education, to consider themselves the chosen of God, better than their non-orthodox neighbors. In fact they can not believe such persons Christians at all. The majority of the Greeks are not pious, though perhaps not irreverent or irreligious. They attend church services on special feast days, light a taper, kiss the images and cross themselves. Educated Greeks, who see the folly of the heathen superstitions and rites encouraged and practiced by the church and who themselves have little or no religious faith, nevertheless educate their children according to the orthodox faith. Otherwise they would be considered unpatriotic, disloyal to the cause of Hellenism; for the church was the sole representative of Hellenism during Turkish domination.

Theoretically the Greek government is tolerant of all religions. But the priests and the people are bigoted and intolerant and the government officers shut their eyes before acts of violence committed upon heretics. Such acts were the stoning of the church building at Piræus and the obstacles put in the way of the Bible agents.

No utterances derogatory to the orthodox faith and practices are tolerated. The government is ever ready to listen to complaints against Protestants. Thus in many respects Greece is a much more difficult field for Protestant missions than Turkey, whose government has no special reason for hearing complaints from orthodox Greeks.

Since coming to Greece last autumn, I have thought much of the need of a purer gospel among the Greeks and of the difficulty of presenting such gospel to the masses. The two young Greek ministers preaching for the churches in Athens and Piræus do not preach sermons that attract many people. Nor are they capable of leading a great evangelistic movement, though they have both studied in England. If some gifted young man would devote himself to missions among Greeks and would come here and study the situation and the language for a year or more, he might enter upon a great work for Christ in lands trodden of old by his own apostles. Living expenses are low. The climate is charming. The historical associations and the ruins of antiquity are interesting and inspiring. Will not some church send a "living link" to Greece? The way is not wholly unprepared for our simple plea for Christ. A few Greeks are already crying out against corruption in the church and the general dishonesty of the Greeks and are preaching a purer gospel sporadically. These forces need organization and direction.

It is my purpose to remain here a second year. If any church or individual in our brotherhood be interested in Greece as a field for missionary enterprise, I shall be delighted to answer inquiries, if I may, or to assist in planning the work.

With a prayer for God's blessing upon his work and most fraternal greetings to all, I am, as ever,

Yours for Christ,
CHAS. B. NEWCOMER.

A Missionary Convention in India

The missionaries of the Christian mission in India have recently met in their annual convention, in Damoh. For seven years it has not been my privilege to meet with this body of Christian workers. I want to tell you what I saw and felt.

I think I know conventions when I see them. For several years it has been my delight to meet with earnest and devoted servants of the one Master whom we all love and serve. No more earnest and consecrated and sweeter spirited men and women have I seen in any land in any convention. See them as they come in. There is the manly man, M. D. Adams, from Bilaspur. He has not seen his wife and children for over three years, but he has seen the dreadful plague face to face, and he is now fresh from caring for the sick and dying. There comes with him E. M. Gordon—a finer looking man you seldom see. No wonder he captured that fine looking, gold medaled doctor from Baroda. Afterwards they made Mungeli one of the best and most successful mission stations in all Central Provinces. Who is that striking figure with beaming face? It is Brother Menzies, and with him is Sister Menzies. They are from Rath, where sometimes they do not see a white face or hear the English language for months at a time.

And there come Brother and Sister Madsen, from Pendra Road. Mrs. Madsen used to be called Miss Bessie Farrar. She has changed her name, but not her nature, for she is concentrated sunshine. They are making a church of Christ out of the wildest kind of hill people from the jungles. Here is a story I forgot to tell at the convention. When I was in Indiana about Crawfordsville, the people would ask me if I knew Brother Grainger. When I told them I did, they would ask me in the most serious manner, "Do you really think that he is good enough for our Miss Plunkett?" And then when I went among Mr. Grainger's friends, they would ask me in the same way, "Do you really think that Miss Plunkett is good enough for our Grainger?" I want to answer all these anxious friends in the most delightful affirmative. It you could see their faithful and efficient work at Hurda and the high esteem in which they are held by all the missionaries, you would not only say that they are good enough for each other, but that they are good enough for any good work.

But time fails me to tell of all these loving and faithful ones. There is Miss Maddock, Miss Vance and Miss Lackey, of Deoghur. How delightful to see Dr. Drummond and Miss Thompson, of Hurda, Brother and Sister Elsam and Miss Elsie Gordon, of Bina, Brother and Sister Brown and Norman, from Jubbulpore, Brother and Sister Davis, of Maudha, Miss Frost and Dr. Smith, of Mahoba, Brother and Sister Stubbin, of Hatta, Miss Mills, of Bilaspur, the McGavrans, Riochs, Miss Franklin and Miss Clark, of Damoh, and all the new missionaries—Benlehrs, Monroes and Dr. Crosier. Happy? Come out to India as a missionary and learn the meaning of that word. There is another—a missionary to the missionaries and to India—Mrs. Gerould, of Cleveland, who contributed so much to the enjoyment of the entire convention. Her good work in and for India, and her words of encouragement, are beyond praise. We claim her as our missionary at large, and we shall expect to see her in India again. Her good example is worthy of imitation by many others, and it will not be in vain. May the Lord prolong her life many years and give through her the message of life to many thousands.

How can I close this review of the convention and leave out the babies and the children? If I did I would never expect to be elected president again. Why, McGavran would say, "And he never saw Grace, Don or Teddy." And Rioch would say, "Nor mine." And Concentrated Sunshine says, "Nor mine." And Grainger says, "Nor mine." And Gordon says, "Nor mine." And Stubbin says, "Nor mine." Well, they were all there—the happiest, sweetest, jolliest, noisiest lot you ever saw—and it did me good to hear them in any mood. God bless them every one.

Just a word here to the reader. If you do not like this kind of a report of a missionary convention, and want statistics and figures and all that, please get one of the annual reports from Brother McLean and satisfy yourself. They are there. The Missionary Tidings also indulges in such recreation occasionally. You might subscribe for that and the Missionary Intelligencer, which can help you to such dishes whenever you have a longing that way.

I want to tell you something else that I saw. I saw great improvement in the mission since I left India six years ago. Growth is apparent in many ways. There are more missionaries. There were thirty-nine present at this convention—the largest in the history of the mission—of whom thirteen were men. That is an inequality that the men of America should not allow to continue. New stations have been opened, converts have been made, churches have been established, and the faithful missionaries in famine and plague have been the means of saving thousands of lives. To have even the lowest seat among such a body of men and women is more honor than to be a member of the United States Senate. I rejoice in the calling wherewith we are called. May we by faithful, unselfish and loving service seek to be worthy of such a high calling.

A Buckeye in the Golden State

Seven months ago I left Bellaire, Ohio, to undertake the work of an evangelist in southern California. This engagement fulfilled, let me give the readers some account of my stewardship. The service has been pleasant, the co-operation of board, churches and ministers all that could be desired; and God has given the increase.

Meetings have been held in Riverside, Monrovia, Downey, Los Angeles (First church), Redlands, Fullerton, Pasadena, and Santa Ana. These seven meetings were held within a period of six and one-half months, or from December 1 to June 13, only two of them, Monrovia and Fullerton, where new churches were organized, continuing as long as one month, too short a time for the best results.

I have not the data before me for exact reports as to numbers, but approximately here are the figures: Riverside, 40 added in three and a half weeks, about 20 baptized. George Ringo is the accomplished and successful minister.

At Monrovia, in the full month of January, a new church was organized with about 40 members; a Sunday-school with 50 scholars; a lot bought for $800, and $400 raised to pay the first half; a preacher called—A. K. Wright, of Idaho—and his salary provided for. Prof. J. A. Carroll gave most excellent help in the music and in personal work.

Downey, with J. I. Myers, was next with two weeks' service, and 16 added—12 baptisms. In this meeting and to the end of my service Prof. J. Walter Wilson, of Indiana, was the singing evangelist, his efficient help as musical director and his fine stereopticon were large human factors in the fruits of all these meetings.

Then came the meeting in Los Angeles in which the First and Magnolia avenue churches united, and A. C. Smither and J. P. McKnight were yoke fellows indeed. Eighty-one accessions were made in 15 days, nearly half were baptized.

At Redlands with W. G. Conley we spent two weeks. It rained nearly every day, sometimes almost in torrents. Here there were 15 added. There is not a more diligent church and minister in the state.

Then came Fullerton for a full month and the Lord gave us the greatest victory. The plea for primitive Christianity was entirely new. We preached the gospel and taught the way of the Lord; 83 in all came forward; 75 signed the charter roll of the new church. A Bible-school of 75 scholars was organized and a Christian Endeavor with 31 at the first meeting. Half the members of the church attend the mid-week prayer-meeting, 35 were baptized in this meeting, including five Catholics.

Pasadena came next, and we were there nearly four weeks, with 61 added and over 30 of them baptized. The attendance here and in the First church, Los Angeles, was very large. The last meeting was with Leander Lane and the Santa Ana church. It lasted three weeks; 30 were added.

Los Angeles Homes.

The total number of accessions for the seven meetings was 370, about half by primary obedience, or two for each day of service.

I preached nearly every night for six months, much of the time of afternoons also, and often three times on Sunday. I did a great deal of calling and personal work in nearly all these meetings, yet the good Father blessed me with almost perfect health, and I gained about 20 pounds of flesh in the first five months, and lost half of it in the last meeting.

I want to add this word. Some choice spirits I have learned to know in these churches, whose friendship I shall prize and cherish as long as I live. I hope God will give us grace to meet in glory. All these churches and ministers have been very kind to me, and to the good people who entertained me do I owe especial gratitude.

I have been here three weeks to-day, with 11 accessions at Sunday meetings. This is one of southern California's strongest and best churches, having about 500 members, with an average Sunday-school attendance of about 250 for the past year. The C. W. B. M. has about 80 women, and the Junior and Intermediate Christian Endeavor Societies are in a flourishing condition. Bro. Frank M. Dowling has given five fruitful years here, and the condition of all departments of the church, after six months of supply preaching, speaks well for both church and minister. He is now resting in the Yosemite. He reports "marked improvement" in health, and it is hoped by all that he will be completely restored, and ready to push the work with his accustomed vigor and success after the close of his year's vacation—January 1.

I find some warm friends of the Christian-Evangelist in all these churches. Not nearly so many read it, or indeed any of our papers, as ought to do so. Where one of our good papers is taken and read there are found generally a minister's faithful supporters, and loyal friends of every general enterprise of the brotherhood. So the increase of the circulation of our religious journals ought to be one of the welcome duties of all our preachers.

Of course you are coming to San Francisco and I hope you are planning to come by the way of southern California, where we are planning a welcome for you. You must not miss seeing this sunny summer land, "where every prospect pleases," and where the church's motto might well be copied from one of the big stores of Los Angeles—"Watch us grow!" And the increase in churches and members of the primitive faith in southern California has been indeed remarkable.

Pasadena, Cal. Sumner T. Martin.

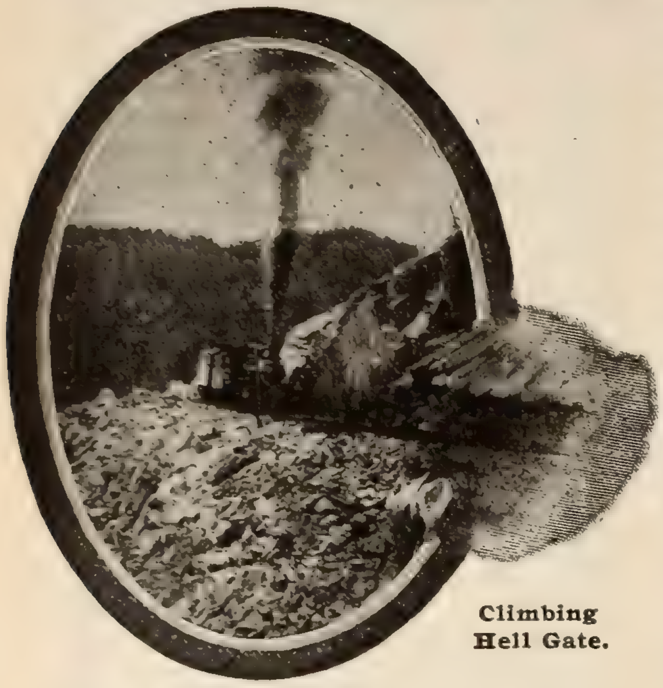
FOOT COMFORT

Obtained from Baths with Cuticura Soap and Anointings with Cuticura, the Great Skin Cure.

Soak the feet on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of Cuticura Soap. Dry and anoint freely with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure. Bandage lightly in old, soft cotton or linen. For itching, burning, and scaly eczema, rashes, inflammation and chafing of the feet or hands, for redness, roughness, cracks and fissures, with brittle, shapeless nails, and for tired, aching muscles and joints, this treatment is simply wonderful, frequently curing in a single night.

With the "Christian-Evangelist Special"

Colorado is rich in Indian lore. To the visitor to the centennial state there is nothing more pleasant than a trip through the Rockies when he is acquainted with some of the interesting traditions which linger around the rocks and in the canons which now echo with the shrill shriek of the locomotive. There is hardly a canon or a valley in the entire mountain region which has not its legend, and the tourist who lingers around any of the spots now famous as resorts for thousands each summer, is sure to hear from the old resident the stories of the early days when traveling was done by wagon and pack, the forerunners of the luxurious railway coaches of to-day.



Climbing Hell Gate.

No region in the entire state is more favored with these pretty Indian legends than is Ute Pass, through which runs an Indian trail, which, years ago, was the scene of many a bloody conflict. This same pass, once the favorite highway of the red man, is now the route of the Colorado Midland railway, and as the great engines pulling their load of human freight wend their way through the mountains, the very peaks themselves seem to hurl back in the echoes of the shrill whistle of the giant mogul defiance to those who have made the great Indian highway the line of a railroad.

No sooner does one reach the foothills of the mountains than these interesting stories of the legends commence; and once in the shadow of Pike's Peak, the visitor finds himself amidst the very hills where the legends obtained their birth. True, it may be, that some of the legends are not based on actual occurrences, but then in a legend who cares for the naked truth? Facts are cold at the best, and the beauty of the legend is often spoiled by too close investigation, and thus it is that the stories of the tribes who once lived in the Rocky mountains have descended from generation to generation and with each telling they have gained in interest.

Of all the legends connected with Ute Pass probably the most interesting is that which is told concerning the famous Manitou Springs. These springs, famous everywhere because of the healing powers of their waters, are located just at the entrance of Ute Pass. When these springs were discovered is not written in history, but according to the stories of the red man they were known at a time when Indians everywhere spoke the same language and when peace prevailed among all and the bloody tribal wars were unknown. Every nation allowed the stranger to hunt and profit in its lands. Time came, however, when this was not the rule, and according to the legend of the red man a quarrel between two hunters of different nations, who met one day at the springs of Manitou, where both had gone to quench their thirst, caused tribal wars to begin, and it was a bit of jealousy which led to the quarrel.

Leadville and Mount Massive.

A little stream of water flowed from the spring and trickling over the rocks it fell splashing into the river which finds its way down Ute Pass. One hunter drank from the spring itself, while the other, tired by his exertions, threw himself on the ground and plunged his face into the running water of the stream. The latter had been unsuccessful in the hunt, while the other carried with him a large, fat buck as the trophy of the chase. This angered the other and he became jealous. The successful hunter drank deep and long at the spring and then he raised in his hand a portion of the water, and holding it up to the sun, reversed his hand, and let the water fall to the ground—a libation to the Great Spirit who had vouchsafed him a successful hunt, and a token of thankfulness for the water with which he had quenched his thirst.

This action only served to arouse the unsuccessful hunter more than ever, as he then remembered that he had neglected to give thanks to the Great Spirit, and then, so the story of the Indians runs, the Evil Spirit entered the heart of the unsuccessful hunter, and he at once sought some method of provoking a quarrel with the stranger.

Waco-mish was bursting with rage, but being a coward, he did not dare to strike the calm Shoshone. Again the Shoshone stooped to drink in the spring, but no sooner had he knelt at the spring, than the subtle warrior of the Comanches sprang upon him, and forcing his head into the water held his victim down until he no longer struggled, and he fell over into the spring drowned and dead.

Buena Vista and the Collegiate Range.

Over the body stood the murderer, and no sooner was the deed of blood consummated, than bitter remorse took possession of his mind, where before had reigned the fiercest passion and vindictive hate. Mechanically he dragged the body a few paces from the spring, but almost at the moment he had done this a remarkable thing occurred. As soon as the head of the murdered Indian was drawn from the spring, the water became suddenly and strangely disturbed. Bubbles sprang up from the bottom, and rising to the surface, escaped in hissing gas. A tiny vapory cloud arose, and gradually dissolving, displayed to the eyes of the trembling

The Los Angeles Churches

Because our national convention will be held in San Francisco, August 17-24, many Disciples are facing westward for the summer. No intelligent Disciple will visit the coast without coming to Los Angeles, which is one of the most interesting cities of the Golden State. It stands easily in the lead of all cities on the coast in the strength and number of her churches. It is because of this that I venture to call your attention to her various churches.

THE FIRST CHURCH.

This is the oldest church in the city and easily the strongest and most influential church in Los Angeles, and for that matter, on the Pacific coast. It has just passed its thirtieth birthday and is in the vigor of a strong manhood. She owns the largest, handsomest and most commodious church among the Disciples in the city. She has probably contributed more to the missionary work of the brotherhood in the past ten years than any other two churches on the coast combined. She enters this year the living link churches in foreign mission fields. Her recent history is her best. Within the last year she has erected a handsome $3,500.00 pipe organ, given $2,000 00 for missionary purposes, besides presenting her youngest child, the Magnolia avenue church, with a $1,500.00 lot, and has added to her membership 250 persons. The writer will soon finish his fifteenth year as pastor of this church, during which time 1,600 persons have been added to her membership.

THE EAST LOS ANGELES CHURCH.

This is the oldest child of the First church and is about fourteen years of age, having been organized from the members of a mission which the First church conducted in East Los Angeles, before the church was organized. This church has had a sad history, because of internal discord and struggle over methods of work. Her sad days have passed, and with a membership of about 150 persons under the able ministry of J. W. Smith, with an Endeavor society and fellowship with the great brotherhood in missionary work, the congregation faces a bright future.

Some two years ago the anti-organ, anti-missionary society element withdrew from that congregation and established a church where such disturbing questions are never introduced. There is quite a number of these good brethren and they are very happy in their fellowship.

The Magnolia Avenue Church.

THE CENTRAL CHURCH.

The Central Christian church is of about the same age as the East Los Angeles congregation, and is an outgrowth from the first church, and has had a tempestuous history part of the time. It meets in a building owned by its pastor, Bro. D. A. Wagner, located on 30th and Maple streets, and has a membership of about seventy-five. Brother Wagner believes in divine healing, the second blessing and sanctification. He is a devout man of God and is leading his people into the paths of righteousness. His church supports two missionaries in the Azores.

A. C. Smither, Pastor of First Church.

THE BROADWAY CHURCH.

This congregation was begun by the East Los Angeles church, under the leadership of Bro. B. F. Coulter, though, as I now remember, a majority of its charter membership was given by the First church. This congregation has many unique features. Its pastor, Brother Coulter, is a leading dry goods merchant of this city, worth perhaps half a million dollars, and owns the property in which his church worships. He also owns another church building in which his brother-in-law, T. D. Garvin, preached the last few years of his life. Besides furnishing the church building and preaching without salary, Brother Coulter contributes most liberally to the support of this church. Unfortunately this church has no fellowship with our other churches in the general missionary work at home or abroad. They control their own missionary activities and maintain missionary work at home and in Japan. The building is located near the centre of the city and under modern methods ought to have a Sunday-school of 1,000, and with an aggressive ministry ought to be a great factor in the religious life of the city. It is a matter of regret to all the brethren that Brother Coulter does not have full fellowship with his brethren in the great enterprises of the brotherhood.

THE EAST EIGHTH STREET CHURCH.

This congregation was inaugurated by members of the First church and the building was erected by money very largely drawn from the membership of the First church. It is an active, aggressive force in that part of the city, having a large and growing work among the young people. Brother W. S. Meyers is its pastor and is leading them on to wider achievements. They are planning to improve their location and erect a new and more commodious house of worship. They have a membership of more than 300 and are among our best churches.

THE MAGNOLIA AVENUE CHURCH.

This is the youngest child of the First church, which has given about 100 persons to their membership. It is only about fifteen months old as a separate organization. They have a membership of 250 and erected a $12,000 church house on a lot presented them by the First church. Like their mother they are strongly missionary and evangelistic. Under the effective ministry of Brother Jesse C. McKnight they are rapidly becoming important factors in our church life in Los Angeles.

THE BOYLE HEIGHTS CHURCH.

This organization is not yet one year old. They have a membership of less than 100 and are under the leadership of Bro. W. L. Martin. They have recently purchased a lot and purpose erecting a suitable building in the near future. They are active, aggressive and growing.

HIGHLAND PARK CHURCH.

This is our youngest church, and yet in a formative condition. They have purchased a lot and purpose the immediate erection thereon of a building which they can occupy for the present. The prospects are that they will soon be an aggressive, growing congregation. Brother H. E. Ward ministers to their spiritual needs.

Besides these we have no other churches in the Angel City. There are several fields in our growing city white unto harvest. If our forces here could be united in a common movement, our strength could be greatly increased. Surely there is no more inviting and promising field in the world for Christian work than in Los Angeles.

Our Budget

—All aboard for San Francisco!

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special leaves St. Louis Wednesday evening next.

—The Foreign Society has received another gift on the annuity plan.

—O. G. White, who is leaving Baltimore, has not yet accepted another charge.

—The church at Council Grove, Kan., has called John Wesley, of Chetopa, Kan.

—The Second Creek, a Missouri country church, raised $81.60 for missions this spring.

—S. J. Copher has just dedicated at Salem, near Moberly, and raised all the money required.

—Frederick F. Wyatt and wife, of Stamford, Tex., desire to locate in pastoral work again.

—J. E. De Gafferelley, of Sandoval, Ill., is assisting John L. Brandt in a protracted meeting at California, Mo.

—F. E. Blanchard has resigned at Sheridan, Wyo., and accepted a call to Audubon, Ia., taking effect Sept. 24.

—The corner-stone of the new church at Woodbine, Ia., was laid July 25, and the occasion drew a large crowd.

—The convention of the Clayton district of Missouri will be held at Eldorado Springs, Oct. 3-5. H. James Crockett is the president.

—Lee Tinsley has been called and has accepted the charge of the First church at Jeffersonville, Ind., beginning his work October 1.

—D. A. Wickizer, of Bloomfield, Ia., will succeed G. W. Thompson in the pastorate of the Central Christian church, Kirksville, Mo.

—H. A. Northcutt is in a great meeting at Lexington, Okla. The large tent is filled to overflowing every night. There is no pastor there at present.

—R. B. Helser, of Fayette, Mo., is rapidly regaining strength after a three weeks' siege of typhoid fever. He hopes soon to be able to resume his labors.

—A good friend has just agreed to give $5,000 to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society for the equipment of the new Bible college at Jubbulpore, India.

—The church at Terre Haute, Ind., in the future will support Alex. Paul in China. He is a splendid missionary. He has already sailed from New York to China.

—F. P. Ullom, of our church at Traverse City, Mich., was the delegate of that city's Christian Endeavor union to the Christian Endeavor convention at Baltimore.

—The church at Rushville, Ind., will in the future support Prof. C. T. Paul, formerly of Hiram college, in China. He will sail from New York for Shanghai the last of August.

—A Joplin newspaper gives us the information that the series of Bible lectures given by Dean Lhamon, of Columbia, Mo., at our churches in Joplin, is proving very helpful and attractive.

—Arthur W. Jones will hold the southwest Arkansas camp meeting near Okolona, Ark., in August. Hundreds gather here each year for worship, the institution having been in existence for twenty years.

—Ellis B. Harris has resigned his work at Boise, Idaho, owing to the condition of his wife's health. He will enter the evangelistic field about Sept. 1. His permanent address will be Ritzville, Wash.

—G. L. Brokaw, who has had control of the Christian Union of Des Moines until recently, will be ready about Sept. 1 to preach wherever there is an open door. We are sure that Brother Brokaw will be in demand.

—The church at Tullahoma, Tenn., has just decided to use an organ. The church at Shelbyville, Tenn., will also use an organ.

—The corner stone of the new Central Christian church at Kansas City, Kansas, has just been laid. The cost of the new building will be $15,000.

—The executive officers of the Foreign Society are working industriously day and night to compass the quarter of a million dollars this year. We have no doubt that the brotherhood will see that their hopes are fully realized.

—Plans are being perfected to complete the church building at Hattiesburg, Miss The campaign will be begun anew in the early fall on a sure and permanent basis. Bro. J. A. Holton has gone for the summer to Lexington, Ky.

—J. M. Morris has given up the work as corresponding secretary of the Washington Christian missionary board, and accepted the chair of Christian Evidences and Sacred History in the Eugene divinity school, Eugene, Oregon.

—John Ray Ewers, pastor of Irving Park church, Chicago, has accepted a call to the First Christian church of Youngstown, Ohio, to begin work Nov. 1. Mr. Ewers is a graduate of Hiram college, and of the University of Chicago.

—Rochester Irwin, after preaching one Lord's day for the church at Rochester, Minn., was extended a unanimous call to become the pastor and will probably accept it. This will leave Saunemin, Ill., as a field for another minister.

—The following reaches us as we go to press: East Dallas meeting closed last night. Despite the constant heavy rains, 130 souls came to Christ. $11,000 raised on new building. Scoville-Smith will win victory anywhere.—H. R. FORD, minister.

—The church at Peoria, Ill., has called H. F. Burns, who has just taken his B. D. degree at the University of Chicago, and for some months past has been assisting in the office work of the Christian Century. Brother Burns will enter upon his new field Sept. 1.

—The church at Marshalltown, Ia., has just been presented with a fine new individual communion service by W. H. Arney and his wife. F. A. Lemon, the pastor, will probably visit some Minnesota churches and Winnipeg, Manitoba, during his vacation in August.

—The Central church, Indianapolis, Ind., Allan B. Philputt pastor, is now a living link in three of our missionary societies, the Foreign, the Home and the C. W. B. M. The missionary affairs of this church are managed by a large committee of the board in connection with the pastor.

—J. Murray Taylor writes that, as he will be on the Pacific coast during the month of August, he will be glad to hear from any good preacher expecting to be in Washington, D. C., at that time, who would supply for him there all or part time. It would have to be a labor of love. Address 475 F St., S. W.

—Stephen J. Corey, the new secretary of the Foreign Society, spoke at the district conventions at Savannah and Pattonsburg, Mo. He also spent the Lord's day with J. N. Crutcher and the church at Chillicothe, Mo. Brother Corey is a good speaker and receives an enthusiastic reception wherever he goes.

—L. C. Stow, Grand Rapids, Mich., writes: "'The Holy Spirit' is the most helpful book I ever read." This shows that business men, engaged in large enterprises, as well as preachers, are finding something in this recent work by the Editor of this paper, to interest and help them. When the business men of the church generally are reading and finding profit in such books, we may expect their more active co-operation in all the general enterprises of the church.

—A ministry of three years with the Oneida, Kan., church has just been terminated by C. A. Polson. During this period the church has passed from half-time to full-time preaching. A new house of worship has been erected and the membership increased by 27. Brother Polson goes to Topeka, Kan., to take charge of the Central Park church.

—R. H. Lampkin has resigned the work at Wolcott, Ind., to take effect the first of September. He would like to hold a few meetings before taking up work elsewhere, or give Bible readings on the subject of the Holy Spirit, on which subject he has just completed a manuscript of some three hundred pages, soon to be published.

—C. M. Hughes and wife, of Muir, Ky., acknowledge a number of gifts in response to the statement which we inserted in these columns, of their losses by the fire. But the amount, on the whole, is not very large though it will aid much in their getting started again. Brother Hughes' great anxiety is to get his children into school the first of September.

—L. L. Carpenter will conduct the services on Aug. 20, at a formal re-opening of the church at Alexandria, Ind. The house has been remodeled and enlarged, and the cost will be about $3,700. It has now the largest auditorium in the city. H. A. Wingard is the minister, and the neighboring congregations are invited to attend the dedicatory services.

—Bro. C. R. Neel, who has just been chosen as the regular evangelist of Minnesota, will, we are confident, do a good work there. Brother Neel was educated at Drake and at the University of Chicago. He was very much liked as the pastor at Rochester, at Southport, England, and at St. Paul, Minn. With his education he has not lost heart-power.

—A number of churches are sending their pastors, all charges paid, to the San Francisco convention. The Christian Endeavorers at Coffeyville, Kan., are sending Ellis Purlee and J. P. Pinkerton, of the church at Plattsburg. Dr. J. W. Ellis writes: "All feel they are helping the church and themselves by this gracious act." We repeat Brother Ellis's hope that "many other localities may do likewise."

—Mrs. Lily W. Molland, of Nankin, China, with her four children, reached Bellevue, Ohio, a short time since. This is the first vacation she has had for about a dozen years. It will be remembered that recently her husband passed to his reward. The daughter, Miss Muriel, will spend the coming year in Wm. Woods Christian college, Fulto, Mo., under the care of Prof. and Mrs. J. B. Jones.

—R. E. McKnight, who has just moved to take charge of the Santa Clara Coffee club, writes: "I want the sweet-spirited CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to read myself, but after reading it I will place it in the reading room of our club." The influence of our journal might be widely extended if other parties would thus try to place their copy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the hands of some other person after they have themselves read in it all they desire.

—The Editor of this paper writes from his summer home at Pentwater, Mich., that two small families, with only four or five in number, may find cottages furnished for rent for August, at a very low price, by applying immediately. One of them fronts on Lake Michigan, the other on Lake Pentwater. This is in answer to inquiries from brethren about accommodations there. Good board and lodging at very reasonable rates, may be had at the "club house" of the Oceana Beach Co., by writing to the company at Pentwater, Mich.

—Rev. Chas. A. Burbank, who has been for 12 years in the ministry of the Methodist church, was recently baptized by J. M. Mohorter at Pueblo, Col. Brother Burbank, who has had a good college education, has had some experience in teaching as well as his ministerial career, and desires now to give himself more fully to the ministry and has been called to serve our church at Manzanola. He may also preach for Vineland, Col.

—In the absence of Wallace Tharp, who is enjoying a short vacation at Bethany Beach, his pulpit of the First Christian church, Allegheny, Pa., was filled on a recent Sunday morning by J. F. Williams, who is now engaged in business but keeps active in supply work, and will have charge of the services in the Wilkinsburg church during the absence of the pastor, L. N. D. Wells, who will attend the San Francisco convention. It is Brother Williams' desire to preach all he can.

—W. B. Taylor writes us that in a recent paragraph we gave credit to him for work that should also be credited to the church at Ionia, Mich., the organization of churches at Belding and Saranac being part of the missionary work of the historical Ionia church, which is one of the most noble congregations among us. Of course we had no idea of detracting from the work of that church, but we were writing of Brother Taylor, and naturally associated him with all that has been accomplished while he was minister at Ionia.

—Elwood, Cal., is the latest aspirant for the attention of the delegates who are going to the San Francisco convention. J. N. Lester writes that this locality is fast settling. There are already six families of Disciples there, and they expect to have a tent meeting immediately following the convention, and the hope is to have our plea so presented that, being in the field first, many may be won to our position. The land is said to be good, and those interested in the colony idea will receive replies to any of their inquiries from Brother Lester.

—The Hamilton avenue church of this city has a "Tenth Legion" which, under the management of Brother Merryman, is doing a fine work among the young people in the congregation. They recently had an "open meeting" and a splendid program. Brother Merryman is drilling his young people not only in a knowledge of the Bible, but in the principles and need of civic righteousness. If all the churches would do a similar work, the next generation would see a clean and honest city government, which would be better than to have a million population.

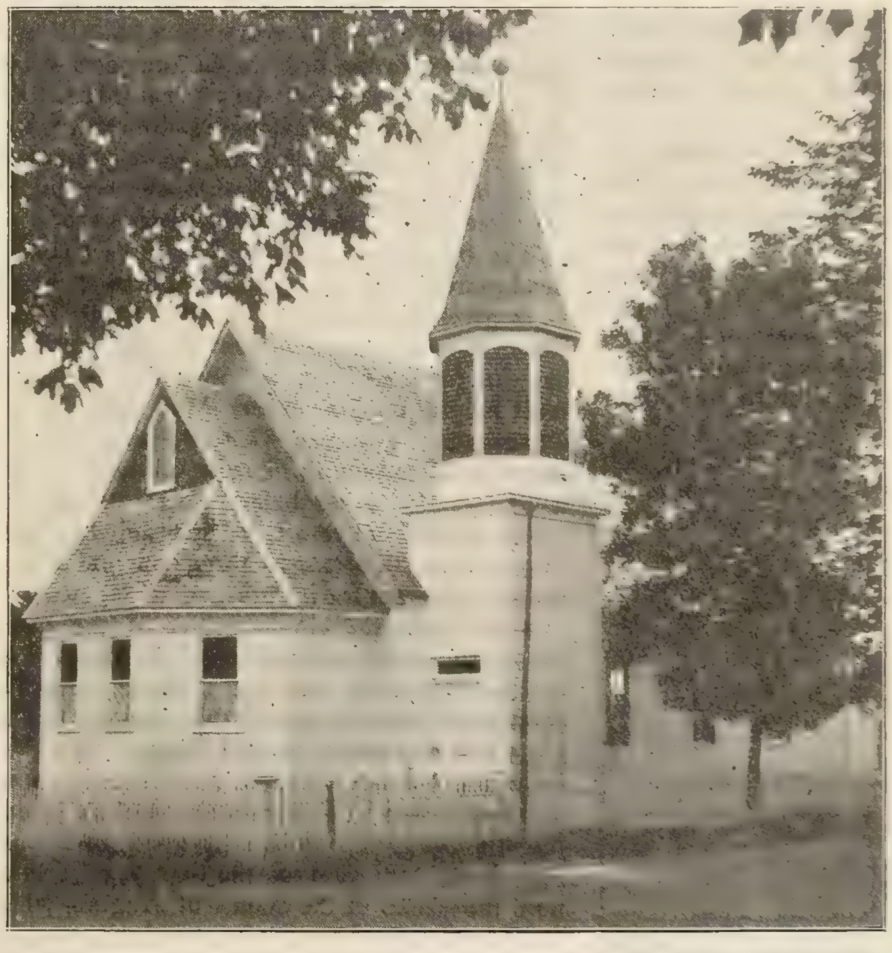
—J. G. Slater, who for five years has been the successful pastor of the First church at Akron, O., but who has been called to the ministry of the East End church, at Pittsburg, Pa., has just been given a farewell reception. During his recent pastorate there were over 600 additions to the church, and over $6,000 have been raised for the Foreign Society, and other channels of benevolence have been kept up to the same standard. A. F. Stahl writes of him: "Here the politician feared him, and the poor man loved him and the man of affairs counted him as his personal friend and associate." The congregation that he leaves feels that Pittsburg is certainly fortunate in getting Brother Slater as a pastor.

—A. F. Stahl, pastor of the Wabash avenue, Church of Christ, Akron, Ohio, had a surprise the other evening. The men's meeting was very poorly attended, and the minister went home wondering what was the cause. Arriving there, however, he was greeted by 125 of his church workers and their friends, who had taken this method of greeting him on his birthday. Tokens of esteem were left with the minister and his wife. Brother Stahl has had great success in his 15 months' pastorate at Akron. There is a decided growth in all departments of the church work, and the local paper informs us that a good spirit and brotherly feeling pervades the whole membership.

—B. Q. Denham, of New York, had it made very unpleasant for him some time ago by some charges that were preferred against him. Almost his entire membership stood loyally by him and we are glad to report that at a legal trial where the matter was thoroughly sifted, Brother Denham has been completely exonerated of the charges, and the church has asked the one member who was so bitter in believing ill of the pastor, and who was largely the cause of the matter being given great publicity by the sensational press, to withdraw from the membership.

—There have been a number of changes in the heads of our educational institutions. The following, who have taken charge of the different schools within some three or four years, are all below forty-five years of age, and some are hardly into the thirties: President Hieronymous, of Eureka, President Rowlison, of Hiram, President Jenkins, of Kentucky university, President Garrison, of Butler, President Bell, of Drake, Dean Willett, of Chicago, President Motley, of Washington, President Garrett, of Milligan, Dean Van Kirk, of Berkeley, Dean Sanderson, of Eugene, President Cramblet, of Bethany, and President Buxton, of Dexter.

—The dedication of the Christian church at Bonne Terre, Mo., took place the fifth Lord's day in July. The church house is the best equipped building not only in Bonne Terre, but in the entire lead belt. This town has over 8,000 inhabitants and the largest lead mine in the world. The town is without a regular municipal government and no saloons are permitted to operate by the lead company. It has schools, up-to date banks and business houses. There are several churches and two missions. Edward Owers, of Farmington, Mo., Hon. G. O. Nations, and R. M. Talbert took part in the services. Dr. J. G. M. Luttenberger, of St. Louis, the pastor of the church, preached the dedication sermon. Rev. A. S. Coker, pastor of the M. E. south, Rev. J. S. Murphy, of the Congregational church, J. B. Dodson, of Pleasant Hill, C. E. Dunkelberger, of Flat River, G. B. Gale, of the same place, and many other prominent people attended the dedication services. The house is beautifully arranged inside. There is much interest manifested in all the departments of the church. The church was dedicated free of all indebtedness, and there were two baptisms at the opening service. This is the second church dedicated by Brother Luttenberger.



New Christian Church at Bonne Terre, Mo.

—Dexter, Mo., will require a new pastor. Dr. Buxton, who has been preaching for the church as well as having charge of Dexter Christian college, will take Brother Dungan's place during the next session at Christian university. Owing to the serious condition of his wife's health, Dr. Buxton has been granted a furlough from the church at Dexter with payment of salary in full until his resignation, due to take effect Sept. 1. The physician attending on Mrs. Buxton, who recently went to Colorado Springs in the hope of prolonging or saving her life, has given the opinion that there is no hope for her recovery, as she has tuberculosis in an advanced stage. Upon receipt of this opinion, the church immediately requested Dr. Buxton to join his family in Colorado. The church will now need a good pastor who can take up the work in the best condition, for there is at Dexter one of the most modern and best equipped buildings in southeast Missouri, valued at about $9,000 without any debt. During the past three months the Christian Endeavor Society has increased its membership from twelve to seventy-eight. It speaks well for the presidency of Sister Piola Moore. R. Clyde Tucker is the church clerk.

Last Word to Convention-Goers.

The field has been carefully canvassed for a large attendance at the San Francisco convention. A delegation of 1,000 persons from east of the Rocky Mountains is already in sight. It will probably be increased to 1,400 or 1,500. This is the last call. Let all persons who have a chance to join this goodly company and partake in the feast of good things of the great convention, do so, at once. Put yourself in touch with some of the excursion managers, and join one of the official trains. Reserve your sleeper berth immediately, in order to insure you ample room and to enable the railroads to plan to accommodate all. Buy your ticket at home, route it according to your pleasure. You do not need to mention the stop-overs west of the eastern Colorado border. Let all delegates be sure of one thing. That is, not to fear the heat, but bring light clothing for one or two possible hot days across the continent; but spring wraps and heavy underclothing for the days at San Francisco. Plan your trip so as to visit your friends upon the Pacific Coast. Take plenty of time for the same, and if the named limit of ninety days is not sufficient, your tickets can be extended to Nov. 30. Call upon me at San Francisco, when I can attend to the same.

The Campaign for Two Thousand Contributors.

Up to July 26, 814 churches have promised to take the Church Extension offering. Illinois is ahead, and Ohio is second. This good work should be kept going. What we want is to get 2,000 contributors. We wanted to report them at San Francisco. But the main thing is to get the contributors. Those who report before Aug. 21 will be counted in a telegram that will be sent on Monday, Aug. 21, from our office to San Francisco as a supplementary report. Keep sending in the cards.

State and National Secretaries' Association.

The State and National Secretaries' Association will hold its annual meeting in San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 18, at 2 p. m. Place of meeting will be announced at the morning session of same day.

The program is: Devotional; reading of minutes and secretary's report; address, "The Combination of State and National Home Missionary Offerings," S. H. Bartlett; discussion, led by A. I. Myhr; symposium, "The Preparation for State Mission Day": (a) Introduction, B. S. Denny; (b) Literature, Leonard G. Thompson; (c) Advertising, T. J. Legg; (d) Interesting the preacher, T. A. Abbott; discussion; business.

Prompt attendance on this meeting will facilitate the work. It will be the only meeting held by the association at the convention, as it now appears. The subjects chosen are vital, and we should come to their consideration with thoughtful hearts.

School of Evangelism, Chautauqua, N. Y.

The bureau of evangelism, H. O. Breeden, chairman, W. J. Wright, superintendent, has conducted its first school of evangelism. The sessions were held in the Disciples' headquarters, Chautauqua, N. Y., from July 9 to 19 inclusive. The principal addresses were delivered by H. O. Breeden, F. D. Power, A. B. Philputt and Chas. S. Medbury; some of their themes being Evangelism—Ideals, Methods, Problems, Pastoral and Professional; The Evangelism of the City, Constant Evangelism, The Teaching Element in Evangelism, The Quiet Evangelism, The Ethical Element in Evangelism. In addition to these addresses there were discussions of the Evangelistic Church, The Religious Paper and Evangelism, The Gospel in Song, and other such practical themes.

The attendance in preachers and evangelists was so small as to disappoint all of us, there being about thirty of these brethren present from our own ranks. This is in some measure accounted for by the fact that not a few of them attended the international convention of Christian Endeavor in Baltimore, and that many others are planning to attend the national convention in San Francisco. The brethren felt that they could not spare the time and money for more than one such trip and gathering this year. Then it was our first school, and in a section of the country where the Disciples are not a numerous people. However, many of the sessions were well attended, the seating capacity of the Disciples' splendid headquarters being taxed on different occasions. Even when the attendance was small, the interest was great and the discussion of vital themes held closely the attention of all who were present for an hour or an hour and a half at a time. Preachers from the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Lutheran and Unitarian churches were present at many of the sessions, and some of them joined very freely and heartily in the discussions.

The prominent position of the Disciples' headquarters and the splendid addresses which were given twice daily, attracted much attention. It is no over-statement of the truth to say that for some days we had the best and most helpful sessions of any kind held in the Chautauqua grounds. The opening of this school at Chautauqua likewise brought us into a prominence never before given us at this great educational resort, for it resulted in putting at least six of our brethren on the Chautauqua program for lectures, sermons, etc.

Aside from the single matter of the comparatively small attendance of preachers and evangelists, there was not a single thing in connection with the school that was not full of hope and inspiration for the future. We believe that we have made a most favorable start and impression in Chautauqua, and it is our intention to get up an equally good, or if possible better, program for the next year, and to hold the school in the month of August, when many more preachers are in attendance than in July; have fewer set speeches and more open discussions, and follow up the splendid impression made by this first year's work. Moreover, this school at Chautauqua is simply the first of its kind, for it is our intention to organize such schools and conduct them in at least a half-dozen very important centers next summer. Our committee likewise expects to conduct evangelistic institutes at all our colleges and at other important places during the collegiate year, and the knowledge which we have gained at Chautauqua as to conducting such institutions will prove valuable to us for all time. We declare this school at Chautauqua to have been an unqualified success with the single limitation which has already been mentioned.

The Matter of the Name.

I have noted with interest what has been said on the union of the Baptist church and the Disciples at Monroe, Wis., and I have appreciated it very much. I am delighted to see such unions. The point, it seems to me, is not so much the use of the "Union church of Christ" and the "Presbyterian church" but what is really meant in their use. In using the word "Presbyterian" for the name of the church we foster denominationalism and make divisions. While using the phrase "Union church of Christ" we do not make any divisions, but rather the contrary and it points directly to the consummation of the Lord's prayer.

I hail with delight all signs that point to the time when "all of God's people shall be one."

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN AS AN ADVERTISER.

Every one knows that Benjamin Franklin was a philosopher and a patriot, and all newspaper men recognize that he was the first great American newspaper man, but few realize that he was a good advertiser.

N. W. Ayer & Son, the Advertising Agents of Philadelphia, issued as a Fourth of July souvenir a handsome booklet, under the title of "In the Land of Benjamin," which sets forth many most interesting facts regarding Franklin, and features as only an advertising agency could, Benjamin's advertising ideas and practices. Franklin's shrewd sense in using the printed page to tell people what he wanted them to know, made him an excellent example for the business men of all time.

The book abounds in many facts concerning the most interesting man in our history, and brings out in clear light his grasp and use of the advertising idea.

The house of N. W. Ayer & Son, in the Land of Benjamin, has a history of its own, and methods of its own. It is no disparagement to others to say that it has done more advertising, and more to develop newspaper advertising, than any other firm in history.

When Shall We Hold the Convention?

It seems to me that early in August—the vacation time—would be the best time for our convention. The state conventions are over, and the fall campaign has not commenced, and it would not interfere with our church extension day. A. E. DUBBER.
Ft. Collins, Col.

The vacation idea should not be pushed in forecasting a proper time for the convention. When people, such as enjoy a religious convention, go on vacations they seek a place of rest. Our national convention is not a place where tired nerves find solace. Besides, the vacation months are hot, and there is no comfort in a sweltering crowd. The time of the convention to be held in San Francisco is ideal for the Pacific coast, but August weather would be intolerable in any city east of Denver. After all is said, October still has claims superior to any other month of the year. The only improvement might be in placing the time nearer the first of the month.

A Banner Day at the First Church, Sedalia.

We held a joint meeting of all the Christian churches in Pettis county at the First Christian church on Sunday last. While all the churches of the county were not represented yet a number were. It was held in the interest of the orphans' home at St. Louis. The ladies of the church prepared dinner, the purpose of which was to get better acquainted with our country brethren and it gave Brother Snively an opportunity to present the Benevolent Association, which he did to the great satisfaction of all. The credit of this meeting is due to Brother Herold, one of the best men we have in our church. It is our intention, with the aid of all the churches in the county, to load a car with provisions in the early fall, and send it to the orphans' home. The railroad has agreed to carry this to St. Louis free of charge.

A Word to Preachers.

Let all the preachers who come be prepared for service. Bring two or three of your latest and strongest sermons, Be prepared to respond to the calls of the committee after you reach the field. It will be impossible to notify in advance of the work to be done, but be ready to enter in and possess the land. You will have a most hearty reception and enthusiastic hearing, and will aid the cause of the Disciples upon the Pacific coast. If any of you can stay some time in the state, we shall gladly arrange for you to preach on Lord's day, and thereby lighten your expenses.

Many will join in the simultaneous meetings.

murderer the figure of an aged Indian, the father of the Comanche and Shoshone nation and the famous warrior, who thus addressed the affrighted murderer.

"Accursed of my tribe! This day thou hast severed the link between the mightiest nations of the world, while the blood of the brave Shoshone cries to the Manitou for vengeance. May the water of thy tribe be rank and bitter in their throats!" Thus saying, and swinging his ponderous war club (made from the elk's horn) round his head, he dashed out the brains of the Comanche, who fell headlong into the spring, which from that day to the present moment remains rank and nauseous, so that, not even when half dead with thirst, can one drink the foul water of that spring.

The good Wan kan-aga, however, to perpetuate the memory of the Shoshone warrior, who was renowned in his tribe for valor and nobleness of heart, struck with the same avenging club a hard flat rock, which overhung the rivulet, just out of sight of this scene of blood; and forthwith the rock opened into a round, clear basin, which instantly filled with bubbling, sparkling water, than which no thirsty traveler ever drank a sweeter or a cooler draught.

Thus the two springs remain an everlasting memento of the foul murder of the brave Shoshone and of the stern justice of the good Wan-kan-aga.

ASTHMA CURED

A Prominent Physician Has at Last Discovered a Certain Cure.

The following letter has been received from Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann, of St. Paul, the specialist in diseases of the respiratory organs, and we trust it will be read carefully by everyone who suffers from Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchitis:

"To the Editor:—Please announce in your paper that by simply writing to me enclosing a 2 cent stamp, any of your readers can have a trial package of my Asthma Cure free. I have prepared a full supply of trial packages for free distribution to sufferers from Asthma, Hay Fever and Bronchitis and no one will be disappointed.

"I have perfected a remedy that is without a doubt an instant relief and a positive cure for Asthma, Hay Fever or Bronchitis. I am fully aware that there is a great deal of skepticism regarding the curability of these diseases, and I have concluded that the simplest way to get my remedy before the people and let it demonstrate its merits is to give away free packages so that anyone interested can test its remedy. I know what my Asthma Cure will do. I have tried it in thousands of cases, with gratifying results. I have cured where all others had failed. Do you wonder that my confidence in the remedy is unbounded? Do you wonder that I am willing to pay the expense of a trial out of my own pocket?"

All letters should be addressed as follows. Dr. R. Schiffmann, 167 Jackson Street, St. Paul, Minn.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Meeting at Texarkana, Tex.-Ark.

I have had the pleasure, recently, of holding a short meeting for our people at the above-named place. I have never met a more persistent and heroic band of workers than those belonging to the Central church. They have just completed a new building, the best for the amount of money that I have ever seen. It is a $30,000 structure, but by the closest watching and the most careful management, it was put up for several thousand dollars less than this amount. It is simply wonderful what can be accomplished by even a small band of Christian people when they are all persevering. The ladies' aid society, though small in numbers, make up in heroism. During the past few years, they have raised and paid about $3,000 on the new church. The building is modern in every respect, with main auditorium and gallery, side rooms, choir loft and a large Sunday-school department; also a basement, which, when fitted up, will serve as an elegant place for meals and social gatherings.

It would have been impossible to accomplish such a work in so small a place and in so new a field for our people, had there not been one in command who has the love of all his own people, and the esteem and confidence of the entire city. This is W. S. Bullard, who has been with them for five years. It was a sweet joy to my soul to labor for such people and to have the brotherly sympathy, prayers and co-operation of such a servant of God as Brother Bullard. He is the only son of Dr. Chester Bullard, of West Virginia fame, and inherits his father's great courage and deep devotion. He is one of the most consecrated men that I have ever met, and to him, more than anyone else, is due the prominent place our people have come to occupy in that rapidly growing city of nearly 20,000. Our meeting resulted in thirty additions to the church, although half our evenings were so stormy that the people could not come out.

Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.

Since my last letter to the Christian-Evangelist, I have been going up and down the earth a little. On the invitation of the church at Bellaire, Ohio, I attended the sixty-fifth anniversary of the organization of that congregation on July 2, and delivered the historical address. Walter Mansell of Salem, Ohio, preached the anniversary sermon at night. It was a strong one. This church was my home when I entered Bethany college. It has sent out, besides myself, Walter Mansell, W. H. Oldham, John White, and two young men have been in college the past year preparing for the ministry. It is now a living link, supporting Miss Mary Kelly on the foreign field, and has also "our own home missionary." It has always been an active, aggressive, progressive church. I am grateful for being a historical descendant. My grandmother was the first convert baptized at the beginning of the work in that neighborhood. My mother still lives there at the age of 73, and I visit her each summer. My brothers and sisters are active workers in the church.

I went from Bellaire to the Twenty-second international convention of Christian Endeavor at Baltimore. It proved to be a great convention in many ways, but it was not up to the standard in addresses. I heard but few good addresses. I did not hear Governor Warfield, nor Charles J. Bonaparte. Few names of Disciples appeared on the program, and some of these disappointed the convention. F. D. Power presided on Friday night in the armory. One great meeting much enjoyed was the rally of Disciples at Harlem avenue church. The house was full. Enthusiastic reports were made from many states. The music was inspiring. E. B. Bagby, Washington, D. C., presided. Some returned missionaries were present.

Reports showed that in some state Christian Endeavor conventions, Disciples outnumber those of all other religious bodies. Most of the preparatory meetings of the committee of 1905, were held in Harlem avenue church. B. A. Abbott was chairman of the evangelistic committee.

Kansas Letter.

It is with profound sorrow that we chronicle the death of C. F. McReynolds, of Holton. He was injured while getting off a train July 8, and died on July 17 at Holton. Brother McReynolds was one of our most promising young preachers, and at the time of his death was preaching for the churches at Larkin, and Pleasant Grove. No doubt a suitable obituary notice will be given by some one familiar with the facts. We extend our profound sympathy to all the relatives.

D. Y. Donaldson is beginning a promising meeting at Moline. Neal Overman begins a meeting at Meriden, August 9. N. A. Stull is at work in a meeting at Mina.

August 6 is the date set for the dedication of the new church at Central Park, Topeka. The writer and D. Y. Donaldson will conduct the services, and Brother Donaldson will follow immediately with a protracted meeting.

M. E. Harlan, of New York, and V. E. Ridenour, of this city, are to hold a meeting at Augusta during this month. We have not learned of the opening services. Brother Harlan organized this church several years ago. G. J. Chapman, is the energetic pastor at the present time, and is making his work tell all over that section of the country.

Duncan McFarlane, of Leroy, is planning for a meeting with the Martin family during August. Brother McFarlane has brought his church to a high degree of efficiency during his long stay with them.

Churches should arrange early for their protracted meetings, even though the meeting is not to be held till late in the winter. Get your evangelist engaged if you need one, and begin preparations for the work.

There will be a large party of Kansans go to the national convention at San Francisco with the Christian church special. The train leaves Kansas City at 11 A. M., August 8, and Topeka at 1:25 P. M. of the same day. All who have not done so should send their names to the writer so that space can be reserved.

The Kansas state convention will be held at Eldorado, Sept. 18 to 21, We will have one of the greatest conventions in our history. Plan now to go. Send your name to S. W. Brown, Eldorado, so that you can be cared for.

All churches and departments that have not yet sent in the full apportionment for Kansas missions should do so at the earliest date possible. This money must come or we (you) will be compelled to report a deficit. Do you want to be thus humiliated? All churches that pay in full by Sept. 1 will be placed on the Roll of Honor. We will have an unusually long Honor Roll this year. Shall we leave the name of your church off this roll? What about your Bible-school? Your C. E. society?

Topeka, Kan. W. S. Lowe.

Portsmouth, Virginia.

On June 18, Herbert Yeuell began a meeting in Portsmouth, Virginia, a city of 25,000 people, in a great tent seating 1,500 persons. Although many friends urged Brother Yeuell not to go to Portsmouth, and prophesied failure if he went, and although one of our strongest evangelists urged him not to try that difficult eastern field, nevertheless he came, he saw, he conquered. His first audience was said to be fully 1,000. The last audience of first month was too large for the tent. Hundreds of people who had never heard of our plea save in derision, have heard and been charmed by Brother Yeuell's clear, forceful and eloquent presentation of the simple gospel story. At the end of one month he organized a congregation with seventy members and the meeting continues at least a week longer.

If our great evangelists would give a month or two out of each year to the eastern fields, I mean the cities where mission work is needed, instead of confining themselves to great churches where a harvest is practically assured before the evangelist arrives, it would be but a few years until our plea would be making giant strides in the east as well as in the west. Brother Yeuell has the equipment, as well as the grit; it is hoped by all our eastern workers that he can be retained for just such work as he has done at Portsmouth.

Plans are on foot for the purchase or lease of a lot and the erection of a permanent tabernacle, to seat at least six hundred people. If we can secure the right pastor, we are sure that we can in a few years have a splendid church here. Hundreds are inquiring the way. Two hundred copies of Brother Morrison's tract on "Why I stand identified with the Disciples of Christ," were taken up like chaff before a hurricane. We distributed five thousand copies of a statement prepared by Brother Yeuell on "Our Position." These too were greedily taken.

No church will make a mistake in securing Brother Yeuell's services. He knows the book, and he knows men. He is an orator who never loses his hearers. He studies his congregations and meets their needs. He is withal a wise master workman for Jesus. The Lord has raised up another evangelist among his people.

The church at Willow Creek has just closed a fine meeting with Bro. J. C. Harris, of Madelia, evangelist, Mrs. Zusinger in charge of the music; 28 added by baptism. Bro. Claris Yeuell is the pastor.

L. E. Huntley, of Eagle Lake, has returned to Sheldon, Ia. A new man is looking over the field there and it is thought he will locate.

We have just heard the sad news that Bro. G. S. Morgan was drowned in a lake while bathing. He had recently taken the work at Litchfield. For a time he was with the church at Plainview.

We will all miss G. W. Wise, who has resigned at Rochester and moved to Monroe, La., in our work in this state.

Plainview has lost J. M. Dixon and Truman has gained him. They complete a fine building at Truman this fall.

N. C. Nicholson reports that things are booming at Redwood Falls. They have purchased lots and will erect a good building soon.

June 1, I began my work as state evangelist.

My first visit was at Austin, a county seat of 7,000. We purchased a lot 55x150, well located. They will erect a tabernacle this fall.

We have just closed a short meeting at Cleveland with eight baptisms. We reorganized the church and elected new officers. W. S. Cash, a Kentucky university boy, is leading this church.

I am supplying at the First church, St. Paul, while Brother Harmon is rusticating.

Bethany Assembly Notes.

Bethany assembly opened its twenty-second annual encampment meeting on July 20. The prospects now are that this will be the greatest and most successful year in its history. It is the national Chautauqua of the Christian church, was organized by the largest state convention ever held by the Christian church in Indiana, is the home of the Disciples, and the "Bethany family" gathers here every year for their great family reunion.

July 21 was "soldiers' day." Many of the "old boys" who fought so bravely during the bloody days of '61-'65 were here, and had a glad day, with speeches, songs, war reminiscences, and good fellowship.

July 22 was children's day, which is always a great day at Bethany and was never better than this year.

July 23 was the Lord's day. The Sunday-school, the sermons by Brethren Daugherty and Harkins, the solemn communion service and the sacred concert were all spiritual feasts.

Temperance day brought a great crowd of people together and the exercises were very pleasing and profitable. The state Sunday-school association was an exceptionally good one.

And what shall we say about the entertainments? The plays, concerts, elocutionary entertainments, etc., have been of the highest order, and have given great satisfaction.

The assembly will continue until August 14 and will grow better and still better.

Ohio Letter.

J. H. McCartney has asked to be released at Bedford, September 1, and will take a year of "book-larnin'" in Chicago university.

H. B. Ryan has also resigned at Glenville. We do not know Brother Ryan's plans, but any church will be fortunate in securing him as its minister. He has done heroic work at Glenville.

The church at New Philadelphia refused to accept the resignation of C. B. Reynolds. They will change the interior of their house this summer and add new accommodations for the Sunday-school.

O. D. Maple is moving things at Marion with a zeal that will surely bring success. The church is doing some giving and has a determination to be in their new home by January 1, 1906.

Secretary Bartlett dedicated the new synagogue at Bergholtz, July 9. There was a great throng of people. The daily press said 4,000. This is a new work. O. A. Henry has been the leader.

W. L. Neal has offered his resignation at Wooster. He has been there several years and added many to the church and led in the organization of a church at Orville, and housed it.

The new church at Canton will not be dedicated till some time in August.

Yes, let us change the time of the national convention. October seems all out of place. It comes in the inauguration of fall and winter work. Let the time be placed the very last of August, closing on the Thursday before the first Sunday in September. It would seem that all interests could be served at this time better than at any other.

S. H. Bartlett and party will leave July 27, for the national convention, via Yellowstone Park.

A new church building is being erected at Hiram. The old church burned at commencement time in '97. Since then the Y. M. C. A. auditorium has been used for church purposes. There was considerable insurance on the old building and this, with several thousand dollars raised by Professor Duan, will be put into the new building.

The Democrats of Ohio have nominated John H. Pattison for governor. Mr. Pattison is a clean, capable, Christian man. He is the Joseph Folk for Ohio. Ohio will have one of the hottest campaigns this fall of her history. Party lines will cut but little figure. It will be a contest between Mr. Pattison and the moral and religious forces of the state against Mr. Herrick and the Republican machine and liquor interests. Ohio is thoroughly sick, and on November 7, will spew out Geo. B. Cox and his crowd. The uprising against Herrick and Cox is all but unanimous. Ohio will this fall write her new declaration of independence.

The Ontario Co-operation of Disciples of Christ.

The annual convention of Disciples of Christ of Ontario, Canada, was held this year at Bowmanville, where we have one of the most beautiful church edifices in the Dominion. J. D. Higgins, Toronto, president of the board of managers, presided at most of the sessions.

In the ministerial session there was a discussion on "Things I Have Found Most Helpful in My Ministry," led by E. R. Black. James Egbert, of St. Thomas, spoke on "Our Message for To-Day."

The annual address of the president reviewed the year's operations and growth, and Pres. W. C. McDougall, of the College of the Disciples of St. Thomas, opened a conference on "The State of the Church in Ontario." It seems that 30 per cent of the congregations are without pastoral care or supervision by the provincial board; that 20 per cent more are without spiritual life; that 38 per cent are favorable to the short pastorate, and are active for a time after the new man arrives, and correspondingly inactive too soon afterwards. The remaining 12 per cent are well equipped and progressive churches. "Thus," he added, "88 per cent of the churches are below what they should be spiritually; or, one-third safe and the other two-thirds illustrate the weakness of our methods or lack of methods." President McDougall favored educated and trained pastors, endowed colleges and supervision of all churches by the provincial board.

A. T. Campbell, pastor of our church at Toronto, read a paper prepared by Mr. J. Aiken on "Current Fiction as a Factor in Molding Religious Thought." The gist of his remarks was that the safe plan is to turn one's reading into directions that give a richer return, for novel reading leads to slovenly thinking. E. R. Black emphasized the need for deeper Bible study.

formerly of Bowmanville, answered the question, "Why Am I a Disciple?" and D. L. Sinclair, a barrister of Toronto, showed how to be loyal to the pastor. The chief points suggested were, pay him well, help him in every possible manner, and give him liberty to perform his pastoral duties in his own way. James Leonard, minister of the church at Owen Sound, read a short paper on "The Loyalty of the Pastor."

There was a very helpful conference on Sunday-school work and an interesting session of the Christian Endeavor workers. R. W. Stevenson, evangelist, gave an inspiring address on the larger outlook, and President Rowlison, of Hiram college, and Prof. Chas. T. Paul gave short addresses. The latter two spoke on Lord's day as well. The following officers were elected for the board of managers for the ensuing year: President, J. D. Higgins, 41 Adelaide St., East Toronto; vice-president, M. N. Stephens, Glencairn; treasurer, John McKinnon, Guelph; corresponding secretary, Amos Tovell, Guelph; recording secretary, Principal W. C. McDougall, St. Thomas Disciples' college.

The other members are: Geo. Gier, Grand Valley; Jas. Lediard and C. A. Fleming, Owen Sound; Dr. T. J. Page, Toronto; J. H. H. Jury, Bowmanville; C. H. Norsworthy, St. Thomas.

Southwest Missouri Notes.

This is the season of change with us. A. J. Williams went from Aurora to Vinita, I. T., and is succeeded by Daniel Trundle, of Springdale, Ark. W. A. Boggess, of Webb City, went to Lampasas, Tex., and is followed by W. E. Reavis, late of Pueblo, Col. He comes to the work Sept. 1. J. T. McGarvey, of Carthage, goes to Warrensburg and Geo. E. Dew, of Neosho, to north Missouri, and neither has a successor at this writing.

Simpson Ely has bought a home in Joplin. He will evangelize until the end of the present year.

Joseph Gaylor, state evangelist in this section, has set his mark at $2,000 for state missions from southwest Missouri. His plan is to visit the churches in each county and get funds pledged for work in that county. County mass meetings will follow.

Our latest triumph is at La Russel, this county, a new town of several hundred people. Brother Gaylor was the first evangelist on the ground. A good congregation and a new house are assured.

Dean Lhamon has just concluded a fine Bible and Sunday-school institute in the two churches of Joplin. So well pleased are the people that there is talk of making the institute an annual event here. It is the first step towards trained teachers in the Bible-school.

The writer is expecting to take a nice party to the national convention, leaving here the night of Aug. 7. We will join the special train at Kansas City over the Santa Fe. If this reaches any belated delegate who desires to go with us, let us hear at once.

The "lid" has been on in Joplin for one month as tight as in other Missouri cities.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

CHINA.

Nanking, May 22.—Fifteen baptisms since last report; 26 since returning to China last October.—Frank Garrett.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, July 24.—Just closed an eleven days' meeting at Jerusalem, Maryland, with nine confessions and baptisms. J. R. Gaff is the efficient minister at this church. The weather was very rainy and the brethren very busy.—J. Murray, pastor.

ILLINOIS.

Ramsey.—Seven confessions. Thirteen added. We have put up a tabernacle. Tabernacles are better than tents. Will continue. —E. L. Frazier.

Allison.—Ethel L. Irwin, while on her vacation home, preached for the church and organized a C. E. society with an enrollment of fifty members. This is two societies Mrs. Irwin has organized in the last month; the other society numbered forty members.

INDIANA.

Covington, July 24.—There were three more additions yesterday at our morning service, one of them being a minister.—Philip W. Walthall, minister.

Alexandria, July 24.—Five baptisms and five confessions at our regular service yesterday; eleven since beginning the work here June 25. —H. A. Wingard.

Shelbyville, July 24.—Two more additions yesterday by statement; four confessions not previously reported. The work here is growing, despite the hot weather.—H. O. Pritchard.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Broken Arrow, July 20.—I am now with this new church half time. We are just securing the best corner lots in the town for a church. Nine additions last Sunday by statement and letter. Two the previous Sunday, and one baptism last evening. We have a good Sunday-school and a most excellent ladies' aid society.—A. M. Harral.

IOWA.

Des Moines.—July 16 three young ladies made the good confession and were baptized. Dean Haggard preached.

Mystic, July 26.—One added since last report. My last meeting resulted in 75 additions to the church.—C. E. Chambers.

Woodbine, July 26.—During the past two weeks, six have been added to our list of members.—B. Franklin Hall.

Charles City, July 27.—Two more added Wednesday by baptism.—G. A. Hess.

KANSAS.

Marion, July 21.—Two additions at morning services last Lord's day. We gave the address of the day here on July 4. —W. M. Berkeley.

Eureka, July 24.—Three added yesterday, one reclaimed; two from the United Brethren. Our prayer-meeting and Junior Endeavor are growing during the warm weather.—G. F. Bradford.

Wellington, July 20.—One addition Sunday. Miss Mattie Burgess, of Indianapolis, Ind., visited us last week and gave two addresses.—H. M. Barnett.

Leavenworth, July 23.—Our work here still moves on splendidly; had three additions by letter July 23. We have new openings for work all the time.—E. J. Wright.

Coffeyville, July 28.—The work here prospers, with additions almost every Lord's day. We are planning for a rousing meeting as soon as we can secure the services of a good evangelist.—Ellis Purlee, pastor.

KENTUCKY.

Mt. Sterling, July 19.—The meeting at old Somerset, in Montgomery county, near Mt. Sterling, Ky., closed July 18, with 71 additions. Seven came from other religious bodies; four were reclaimed and two came by statement. The others came by primary obedience. J. T. McKissick, of Texas, did the preaching, which was strong and convincing. B. H. Dawson assisted in the singing. At the close of the meeting, the church gave the regular minister, E. B. Bourland, a trip to the national convention at San Francisco.

Latonia.—Two confessions last Sunday. The ladies' aid recently reduced our debt $100. —H. C. Runyan.

Louisville.—G. W. Nutter is getting along nicely with the church at Parkland. They have had 51 additions in less than six months' regular work. They recently built a new choir loft, adding to comfort and appearance. Brother Nutter will hold a meeting in August at Burton, with J. S. Shouse; also in September will hold a meeting at Bedford, and his own meeting at Parkland church this fall.

Owensboro, July 24.—Six additions at the regular services Sunday. Departments keeping up well during the summer.—R. H. Crossfield.

Bromley, July 29.—Closed a splendid meeting at Bromley last night. Henry Robb, of the Eastern avenue church of Cincinnati, did the preaching. This is a bad season to hold a meeting in the city, and local conditions were against us. The Ludlow lagoon, one of the biggest summer resorts around Cincinnati, is right at our door, but Brother Robb and the gospel of Jesus Christ held the people. There were nine additions, all by confession and baptism. The church has been greatly revived and the futue looks encouraging.—D. Earl B. Barr, minister.

MISSISSIPPI.

Aberdeen.—A meeting of 30 days, by O. P. Spiegel and W. E. M. Hackleman, resulted in 11 additions. Great audiences, fine music, good interest. Should have continued 30 days longer.

MISSOURI.

Bowling Green, July 21.—Miss Callie Mackey, of East St. Louis, made the "good confession" in Louisiana, Mo., last Lord's day, and I baptized her at prayer-meeting Wednesday night. She will unite with the church in East St. Louis.—E. J. Lampton.

Moberly, July 25.—Two confessions at Cairo The work at Moberly and round about is progressing.—S. J. Copher.

Bogard, July 26.—We had five additions by letter at Norborne, Sunday.—C. C. Taylor.

Lathrop, July 24.—We have had four baptisms since our last report. We have secured Bro. Edward McKinney to sing for us in our October meeting.—J. G. Creason.

Swinton, July 27.—J. T. H. Stewart began a meeting here two weeks ago, and there have been 46 additions to date, mostly by primary obedience. There are immense crowds attending, and a great interest is manifested.—S. W. Robinson.

Liberty.—A summary of the report of the Christian church for year ending June 30, shows the total money raised, $3,882.95; total given to missions, $552.40; number of deaths, 8; number dismissed by letter, 9; number of additions by letter, 26; number of additions by confession and baptism, 31; net gain in membership, 40.

NEW YORK.

Buffalo, July 27.—Recently enjoyed a four days' visit to historic Chautauqua, where I attended the summer school of evangelism and met many choice spirits. Baptized an old gentleman in his home, Friday of last week. He was too feeble to be taken to the church. Our "living link," Miss Williamina Meldrum, is at home on a short visit, and her presence and messages have cheered the hearts of the Jefferson street church.—B. S. Ferrall.

OHIO.

Athens, July 24.—Three baptisms here Wednesday. Our Sunday-school has enrolled new scholars every Sunday for the last seven months, and in the last nine months has enrolled 492. We enlarge our quarters this summer.—T. L. Lowe.

OKLAHOMA.

Yukon, July 27.—Fourteen baptisms, besides several additions otherwise, are some of the good results of our short meeting at Union City. A new house of worship will be erected soon. I am here for a few weeks. Prospects good for large results. I go to Missouri for September.—D. D. Boyle, evangelist.

OREGON.

Silverton, July 23.—We finally secured the tent from Dayton, Washington, after waiting a long time. Our audiences are now much larger since we are in the tent. We are succeeding in spite of all hindrances. We have a large chorus which is furnishing good music. The infidels are now flocking to hear S. M. Martin. This is an infidel stronghold, as there used to be a "free thought" college here. Ten confessions to date.—Chas. E. McVay, singing evangelist.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Williamsport.—C. R. L. Vawter, of Indianapolis, is assisting W. L. Dalton in a tent meeting. The city has a population of some 30,000 and has but two Christian churches.

Ellwood City, July 27.—Two splendid services last Lord's day. Four additions—two by primary obedience, one from the Baptists and one from the Methodists. Our revival meetings will soon be in full swing, when we expect great things. "Everyone win one" is our motto.—Ferd. F. Schultz, minister.

WASHINGTON.

Waverly, July 19.—Just closed a 10 days' meeting at Cheney. I found the church here badly divided and in trouble over a preacher who had been published in our papers, and they had withdrawn fellowship from some of their number. We succeeded in getting them all united and complete harmony restored, and left them seemingly a happy people. We hope in the near future to have a strong church at this place. The work at Waverly is doing nicely under Bro. A. J. Adams. They are working on their new church house. Bro. W. S. Lemon, our corresponding secretary, is in a meeting at Latah, with good results.—Morton H. Wood, evangelist.

TENNESSEE.

Jellico, July 24.—Another scattered Disciple united with us by statement yesterday. The church here will send me to the Kentucky convention at Maysville.—Wren J. Grinstead.

WYOMING.

Sheridan, July 24.—Three additions, one baptism, one reclaimed and one by letter since last report. Brother and Sister Gordon were here generating missionary enthusiasm one day and night and as a result we have organized an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. since their departure.—F. E. Blanchard.

MARRIAGES.

ARTHUR—VAN CUREN.—At Elmira, Cal., June 25, Wm. Stevens Arthur, of Grass Valley, and Miss Nora Ethel Van Curen, of Elmira, J. E. Henton, of Vacaville, officiating.

DAHLIN—LEWALLEN.—At Kansas City, Kan., June 8, 1905, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Lewallen, Henry G. Dahlin and Nora Lewallen, both of that city. C. P. Smith officiating.

FLEMING—BLACK.—At Kansas City, Kan., June 7, 1905, in the North Side Christian church, James G. Fleming and Myrtle E. Black, both of that city. C. P. Smith officiating.

HASKINS—CARPENTER.—At the parsonage of the Christian church, Wilson, N. C., Lewis Benjamin Haskins to May Florence Carpenter, daughter of Mrs. A. M. Smith.

KIMBALL—LONG.—At high noon Wednesday, July 5, 1905, at the residence of the bride's parents, Dr. and Mrs. C. W. Long, Neodesha, Kan., Dr. Joseph F. Kimball and Anna Eleanor Long, E. E. Lowe, minister of the Christian church, officiating.

JOHNSON—LYDEN.—Edward Johnson, of Rose Clare, Ill., and Miss Bessie Lyden, Jas. G. M. Luttenberger officiating.

MILLER—DOLL.—At Atlantic, Ia., July 8, 1905, Anton Miller and Myrtle Doll.

WALKER—LINCOLN.—Rev. Noah A. Walker, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and Mrs. Nancy M. Lincoln, of Beatrice, Neb., by J. F. Findley, in Chicago, Ill., on June 10.

BARSTOW.

On the morning of June 27, 1905, the quiet and gentle spirit of Sister Ida M. Barstow, wife of the beloved pastor of the Ladysmith church and corresponding secretary of the Wisconsin Christian missionary convention, without a moment's warning, left its tenement of clay. She had gone across the street to make a call upon a neighbor and while in conversation dropped dead of heart failure. Ida M. Glick was born in Richland county, Wis., May 15, 1859, and was married to H. F. Barstow, Jan. 1, 1879. For 26 years she lived in the service of the Master. She was beloved by all who knew her and she has left an impress for good upon all with whom she associated. The funeral sermon was preached by W. H. Rust, of Schaller, Ia. No words were really needed, for the silent, sweet life had at last found utterance, and its farewell had touched the whole community to tears.

W. H. R.

BOGGS.

Grandma Boggs, the wife of Elder John Boggs, died at her home near Clyde, Kan., June 22, 1905. The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the midst of a large concourse of relatives and friends where Sister Boggs had lived since 1878. She was 94 years, three months and 12 days old. Brother Boggs was for a great many years a preacher of the gospel, loved and respected by all. He died in 1897. Grandma Boggs had been a great sufferer for several years prior to her death, yet she was cheerful and bright to the day of her death. Honored and loved by all who knew her because of her Christlike disposition, she leaves a rich legacy to her relatives and many friends.

W. S. Lowe.

EDWARDS.

Jane Edwards, wife of David Edwards and mother of E. Richard Edwards, pastor of the First Christian church, Bedford, Ind., entered into rest on Saturday, May 27, 1905. Her coronation as a loyal, devoted follower of Christ was assured. She was born in Wales, came to America when a young woman, was identified with our first church in New York City nearly forty years. Her character is fitly described in Prov. 31:10-31. Her work abides.

E. Richard Edwards.

Bedford, Ind.

LEE.

In Santa Ana, Cal., May 24, 1905, Hezekiah Lee, aged 44 years, five months and 21 days. In 1883 he went to Colorado, and while living in Aspen united with the Christian church during a revival meeting held by Elder Williams. On June 17, 1891, he was married to Louise J. Morse, who preceded him to the spirit world on Jan. 26, 1904. Two little orphan boys survive them. The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Elder Lane.

L. S. M.

MOORE.

On May 9, 1905, the quiet spirit of Bro. Joel Abner Moore left its tenement of clay for his home in the paradise of God. He died at his home in Burrton, Kan. Brother Moore was born Nov. 20, 1837. He was married to Miss Parmelia Hunt, Jan. 29, 1865. In 1872 he and his wife removed to Kansas, which has ever since been his home. Ever given to hospitality he loved the church of which he had been a member since 1868 until he was called up higher. Many an humble preacher of Jesus Christ has been cared for in a good home where Brother Moore presided, with the true dignity of his noble wife. Brother Moore was long since appointed a deacon in the Christian church and has been faithful until death. He acted as church clerk and treasurer for many years and did many other services for the church. To Sister Moore and his friends and relatives we would express our deep sympathy, and assure them that Brother Moore has the enduring love and affection of the congregation here. Farewell, Brother Moore, until that day when we shall all meet on that evergreen shore.

J. H. Gresham, Elder.

SIMONS.

Anderson Simons was born March 13, 1819, in Wayne county, Ind., and died at Polk City, Ia., July 15, 1905. He was united in marriage to Lucinda Smith, Aug. 18, 1841. Together they removed to Iowa in 1856 and settled near Des Moines, and for almost fifty years his home has been within the bounds of Polk county. He was one of the charter members of what is known as the Central church of Christ of Des Moines, and was always identified with the best religious and moral interests of the county. An honest, upright, God-serving man, he had the respect and esteem of a very large circle of acquaintances. The large gathering of old friends and neighbors at his funeral, held in the Congregational church in Polk City, bore witness to this fact. Although in his eighty-seventh year when he died, to a remarkable degree he had retained the use of all his faculties of mind and body. Another quite remarkable thing is the long married life of this couple. For over 64 years they had traveled the journey of life together. Only a little while until they shall be again united, and that forever. His wife, three children, 14 grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren survive him. One son died about five years ago; the other children were all with him at his death. They are John Simons, of Des Moines, Mrs. Vinetta Juvanal, near Des Moines, and Mrs. Epha Davis, of Polk City.

SMITH.

Richmond Victor Smith died at his home in Plevna, Ind., May 29, 1905, aged two years, five months and 14 days. He was the younger son of G. W. and Mrs. Smith. Raymond was born Dec. 15, 1902. The funeral services were held in the home, May 30. He was buried at Kokoma, Ind. Little Raymond has gone to a better world to sing the song he sang while at play, "Leaning on Jesus." The precious child has gone to be with him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Mr. and Mrs. Smith have the sympathy of the community in their bereavement.

USHER.

J. H. Usher was born in Milburn, Ky., Nov. 18, 1862. At the age of 11 he confessed his Savior, and became a life member of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society 15 or more years ago. He was married to Miss Annie L. Walker, of Hopkinsville, Ky., January, 1891, who was called to her eternal home in 1893. He was always a faithful worker in the Master's cause. He departed this life June 13, 1905, leaving mother, brother, one half-sister and two half-brothers to mourn their loss.

OPPORTUNITY—A National Bank will be organized in St. Louis about Sept. 1st. Some well known members of the Christian Church will be interested in the management. A limited amount of the stock can be had at par, and the investment is sure to prove a profitable one. For particulars address, F. E. G., No. 2920 Pine St., St. Louis.

Christian Church Convention

California

The Christian Church will hold its International Convention
at San Francisco, Cal., August 17 to 24

The Santa Fe is the best way there

Santa Fe

It's the shortest line to Southern California and a direct route to San Francisco—the time is fast—the weather is cool in summer—the track is oil-sprinkled and practically dustless—the mountain scenery is magnificent—one management all the way insures satisfactory service, start to finish—and Harvey serves the meals, the best in the West.

Tickets on Sale August 6 to 14, good to return in 90 days, from Middle-West states—on sale a day earlier in the East.

Round-trip Ticket rate via direct routes, $62.50 from Chicago, $57.50 from St. Louis, $50 from Kansas City, with stop-overs in Colorado and West.

Regular Service

The Santa Fe runs four trains to California. The California Limited is fastest and most luxurious—equipped with compartment, observation and drawing-room Pullmans, buffet-smoker and dining car. The California Fast Mail is almost as swift; the other two are called the Los Angeles and San Francisco Expresses; all three carry standard and tourist Pullmans and chair cars.

Special Excursion

Christian Church Special (equipped with standard and tourist Pullmans) leaves Dearborn Station, Chicago, via the Santa Fe, 10 p. m., Monday, August 7, leaves Kansas City 11 a. m., August 8, and arrives Los Angeles 6:00 p. m., August 12, stopping several hours at Albuquerque, N. M., Redlands, Cal., and Riverside, Cal.; also one day at Grand Canyon of Arizona. Personally conducted by a representative of the Santa Fe. Mr. G. W. Muckley, Corresponding Secretary, Board of Church Extension, American Christian Missionary Society, Mr. R. H. Waggener, National Superintendent, Christian Church Y. P. S. C. E., and Mr. Chas. A. Young, of the "Christian Century," will be in charge.

Grand Canyon Side Ride will cost $6.50 extra for railroad ticket, $1 extra for Pullman, and reasonable amount for accommodations at El Tovar hotel. The most wonderful scenic spectacle in the whole world, worth going thousands of miles to see. No extra charge for Redlands and Riverside side-rides through California orange groves.

Not room here to give full particulars. Won't you write to me for all the facts?

JOSIAH AND THE BOOK OF THE LAW.—2 Chron. 34:14-28.

Memory verse, 21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I will not forget thy word.—Psalms 119:16.

The reformation which Josiah introduced in Judah was closely connected with the discovery of the book of the law in the temple. It would seem natural to attribute the reformation to the discovery of the statutes which correspond so exactly to the things which Josiah actually did. On the face of the record it appears that his reformation began in the twelfth year of his reign, no particular reason or stimulus being assigned for it, while the discovery of the book of the law came during the repair of the temple which was begun in the eighteenth year of the reign. It is quite possible, however, that the full description of the reforms (2 Chron. 34:3-7) is somewhat anticipatory and covers a work the chief part of which came after the discovery of the book of the law. The king's sudden dismay (verses 19-21) and the denunciation by Huldah the prophetess (verses 24, 25) would seem scarcely called for if the work of reformation had already been carried out as fully as described in the preceding verses. So the probability is that, while early in his reign the influence of the prophets began to be effective for a purification of the worship and morals of the people, the book of the law which was found in the temple furnished the chief guide for the reformation.

One of the standing problems of Old Testament study relates to this "book of the law." What was it? Some have said that it was the complete Pentateuch which had been written by Moses, and lost during the earlier years. It has even been conjectured that it might have been Moses' autograph copy—a supposition wholly conjectural and without substantial foundation. Another theory is that it was either a part or all of the book of Deuteronomy, because the reforms actually carried out by Josiah at this time correspond strikingly to the regime laid down in that book. This may be accepted even by those who hold the book of Deuteronomy in its entirety to be the work of Moses. Those who maintain the post-Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, usually assert that Deuteronomy was written during the dark days of Manasseh's reactionary reign and was hidden in the temple for prudential reasons until a time when it might be more safely brought forth, and that the "book of the law" discovered in the eighteenth year of Josiah was Deuteronomy, chapters 5:26 and 28.

In any case, Josiah's reformation practically completed the work of centralization of worship at Jerusalem. It purified the cultus by the final elimination of pagan and immoral elements which had bred corruption since the days of the conquest of Canaan. Furthermore, it gave a new prominence to the idea of the book as the record of revelation and the proximate source of religious authority. The idea of a canon of sacred scripture, which plays so large a part in our Christian conception of the method of revelation, is more nearly akin to the thought of the people of Judah about the "book of the law" in the reign of Josiah than to anything that precedes it in Hebrew history.

THE NAME CHRISTIAN.—Acts 11:26; Gal. 3:26-29; 1 Peter 3:14-16.

"What's in a name?" This question has been repeated times without number, since Shakespeare first propounded it, and applied in ways that were entirely foreign to his thought. "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet," it is true. But since the rose has been given the name which so perfectly fits its regal beauty, why persist in calling it a cabbage? Names become signs of realities, and are important just in the degree that we desire to use language accurately and truthfully. However the name first comes to be applied, if it expresses the reality it is the proper one to use.

The Name "Christian." The followers of Christ were at the beginning known as "disciples," and by their enemies called "Nazarenes." When the movement extended out into Gentile communities, and gained a strong following in the great cosmopolitan city of Antioch, it was perhaps but natural that a Greek title should be applied to believers in the Lord; and what title would more readily suggest itself than that of "Christian," taken from the Greek form of the Messiah's name, Christ? Whether given by divine direction or by the outside world, it was recognized as fitly bestowed, and thenceforth the "disciples" were called "Christians."

It is a Sacred Name. It is derived from "Christ," the Anointed One. Every true Christian has received an unction from heaven. (1 Jno. 2:20) He is entitled to wear the holiest name ever heard upon the lips of man. (James 2:6, 7; Phil. 2:9 11.) It is the name in which alone is found power to save from sin. (Rom. 10.12, 13; Acts 4:10 12.) How careful then ought we to be not to dishonor this name of Christian. To deserve to wear it it is to enjoy the richest favor of God and possess the surest title to eternal life. If all who bear it would but be what it suggests, the church of Christ would speedily conquer the world for righteousness.

It is a Significant Name. To be a Christian means that we belong to Christ. He hath purchased us with his blood, and we are no more our own. We cannot live henceforth as we please, but only as he pleases. (1 Cor. 6:19, 20; 2 Cor. 5:14, 15.) Self is the hardest master any man ever tried to serve, and Jesus Christ is the best and gentlest. His yoke is easy and his burden light. The life surrendered to him becomes at once a mighty force for righteousness in the world, and a source of peace and joy to the believer himself. (Rom. 14:17,18.) We who wear his name are advertising him to the world, and it behooves us to behave ourselves in such manner as to be stepping-stones and not stumbling-blocks to men's faith.

It is a Glorious Name. Peter tells us, "If ye are reproached for the name of Christ, blessed are ye; because the Spirit of glory and the Spirit of God resteth upon you." And the Christian may endure affliction in the name of Christ in such manner as to "glorify God in this name," as the Revised Version of 1 Peter 4:16 reads. The story of the holy martyrs is but a commentary on these words. The question they were asked everywhere was, "Are you a Christian?" A single word determined their earthly fate. To answer, No, would bring them prompt release from imprisonment and escape from awful torture. To answer, Yes, was the signal for the infliction of sufferings such as words cannot describe. With few exceptions, to their eternal praise be it said, these early believers chose torture and death that they might honor the name they wore, and "the blood of the martyrs became the seed of the church." For every one believer thus slain a score were brought to faith through his heroic example; and the soil drenched with the blood of Christian confessors brought forth nations of trusting and obedient followers of the Christ. They shall wear the new name of our Lord in that heavenly city of God. May we be permitted to share it with them.

THE BUILDING OF CHARACTER.—
2 Peter 1:1-11; Jude 20:21.

For the Leader.

The building of character is a subject of first importance to those who are aiming to follow in the way that the Lord leadeth us in this earth life. Character is, like other things in God's world, subject to the laws of growth. It is a work that begins and progresses. It is not a thing of an instant, but it is a work that goes on all the time of the sojourn of one in this tabernacle of the flesh. By thus is it a better work than if done in an instant. Some look upon "conversion," or the giving-in of the will at the time one accepts Jesus, as the whole work. They confuse several things under the terms "conversion" and "regeneration." Let us look into this. We do not want to try to hold untenable ground in things pertaining to the kingdom of heaven and the relation of the subjects of the Great King to him.

For the Members.

1. Character, a thing that is built. Do we mean by this statement that it is built mechanically, as a man builds a house, or one making some piece of machinery? Not by any means. It is not a work of building at which man by himself can work. It is a building according to divine directions and specifications and under the supervision of the divine Son of God. Not only so, but he works with us every day in the building. Let this be settled at the outset. We can not of ourselves do this building.

2. But it is a building in which we now have the initiative. Put that down. Let no one sit still to see the salvation of the Lord. He must be up and calling upon the Lord. We must lay hold of salvation. Never will God do more than appeal through his Spirit. Never will he do more than he has done through his Son to make us better. That is to say, he will not come upon some one and stir him up without his co-operation to make the step. There used to be, and there are some left, those who sat around the borders of Zion, and when asked to come to Jesus they would say, "The Lord will call me when he is ready for me." These fail to see that God has already called every one. I must act.

3. The foundation is first built in erecting a house. So in the building of character we must lay the foundation. That foundation is Jesus the Christ. What we call first principles are the fundamental truths concerning the steps men and women took in the days of the apostles to get into Christ, to have a part in the fellowship of the redeemed. And these same steps are the only divinely authorized steps to-day. So one who says, "It does not matter what one believes. It does not matter about his confession. His baptism is a minor thing. Let him hold any plan of salvation." I say such an one is confusing good intentions with a correct knowledge of what is to be done. This is no compliment to the Lord, to say, "Anything, Lord, will do," God does not speak that way. You be careful before you start in to appear before the throne with that kind of a conception of loyalty and love to God. Have a good foundation. Lay the stones according to specifications. Look into what the gospel requirements are.

4. When we come to building character upon the true foundation, it is just as important that we look well to the work here as it was in the foundation. This modern view that anything, so we mean well, will do in the Christian life, is a very hurtful view. What excuses are we going to give for not having the life work of character building go on steadily with the years? It will be bad enough to plead the weakness of the flesh, or that we tried and failed, but what shall we say of him who will have nothing to say but that he did not try to be careful; that he thought the Lord should be satisfied with intentions and not look into the facts of deeds—just so one meant well? Dare any one go before him who trod the hard way alone for our redemption and belittle the work of divine character building with such a slipshod view of the work as this? Surely not. Let us have a care. God wants good work. Nothing less honors him. Nothing less is any credit to us. The best for God.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Am I better than I was a year ago? If not, what about my building of character? Have I not really destroyed instead of building?

The Christian-Evangelist Special—Important

This splendid train will leave St. Louis at 9 p. m., August 9. We will be joined in Kansas City by additional delegates, a number of which are headed by A. W. Kokendoffer and T. A. Abbott, and at St. Joseph we shall have quite a number of additional delegates. There will be others join us at different towns along the line, and at Oxford, Neb., S. D. Dutcher and W. B. Clemmer will join us with their parties.

Before we leave St. Louis, we shall have, in addition to those joining us from St. Louis and vicinity, a party of at least fifteen, headed by J. Murray Taylor, Washington, D. C. Also a party of as many more, headed by John C. Warner, from Indiana. Others will join us here from Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, New York, Virginia, West Virginia, Illinois, and other states. Now, we have a few matters to present to you which are of vital importance.

First. Your ticket for railroad fare should be bought at or near your home. It should read from St. Louis or Kansas City, over the Burlington to Denver, then the Midland to Salt Lake, from there over the Salt Lake and Los Angeles (San Pedro). Then over the Southern Pacific to Portland. If you continue with us east, it should be over the Northern Pacific to Billings, and then over the Burlington to St. Louis or Kansas City, or Omaha, or any other point from which you start.

Second. These tickets are good for ninety days.

Third. We provide you with tourist sleepers, two in lower and one in upper berth, at $6.00 for each person. This includes stops at Colorado Springs, Salt Lake and other places to Los Angeles. From Los Angeles to San Francisco we travel in day coaches.

Fourth. We will stop for meals at hotels with the exception of breakfast and dinner on San Pedro line. These two meals will be served in the dining car. The eleven meals provided for will cost you fifty cents each and only two will be served per day. Most of these meals would cost you seventy-five cents, but by arranging ahead we get them for fifty.

Fifth. Now is the time for you to register for sleeper and meals. This will cost you $11.50, and you will eat your first meal at Oxford, Neb., and the last at San Francisco. No further arrangements have been made. You will provide your noon lunch, as only two meals per day are provided for.

Sixth. The Christian-Evangelist Special will bear a magnificent company of people. It will do you good to enjoy the fellowship of such an excursion. For this reason we ask you to send on your registration fee at once and let us assign you your berth and also provide for your meals as above, should you wish the meals.

"Union Church in Christ."

The Editor, Christian-Evangelist: In the spirit of love it seems necessary for me, at this time, to write a few lines for the benefit of Brother Simpson Ely, who has seen fit to call in question the movement of which I am one of the principal actors.

The right of criticism is undisputed when done in the spirit of fairness. That my brother is sincere I do not doubt. Paul was sincere when he was "breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples," but when the scales fell from his eyes, he discovered the fact that he had been filled with a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge. That startling flash-light from heaven revealed to him the fact that the religion that was well-pleasing in the sight of God did not consist in legalism or in a set of forms and theological doctrines and dogmas, but in a great life principle that was as extensive as the atmosphere that we breathe, or the sunlight in which we bask. Jesus Christ was the revelation of that great life principle. "I am the light of life!"

After reading Brother Ely's letter, the question arose in my mind, if there is not a possible danger that we of the "primitive Christianity plea" may unconsciously become sectarian by pressing our unsectarian claims to the extent that everybody who does not follow to the letter our unsectarian methods of Bible interpretation and our unsectarian ways of religious thought and practices, is a sectarian.

To illustrate, my brother says that "a human name has been adopted by this new organization." If he will analyze the title, only one name will be found and that is the name of Christ.

Human letters and words have been used as instruments by which to express the facts in the case. "Union Church in Christ." Jesus prayed for union, therefore union is both Biblical and divine. Church is Biblical and represents an organized body of disciples. "In Christ" designates both the place and name. "If a man be in Christ he is a new creature."

When the new organization was in process of development, the question of a name by which it might be distinguished from other bodies of Christians in the city was raised. Some suggested that it be called "The Monroe Union Church," and others that it be called "The Christian Baptist Church." The first of these names seemed to be too indefinite, as it failed to express the character of the church and could be used to represent almost anything.

The second suggested two religious denominations. At this stage of negotiations I asked the Lord to give me a name that would express the fact and at the same time not suggest anything of a denominational thought.

"In Christ," was the result, and the more that I study the title the more certain am I that the Spirit of the Lord suggested it. "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

It is the spirit of a name that, by the help of God, I shall ever contend for. The Monroe movement is the result of local conditions. A few Baptists and a few Disciples, doing little or nothing for the cause of Christ, have agreed to lay down at the feet of Jesus everything that will tend to separate us, God's children, and work together and pray together for the uplifting of his kingdom. As an evidence that it was not the thought to start another sect in the world, the "Union Church in Christ" intends to make use of the existing denominational missionary machinery for the spreading of the gospel, leaving each individual member free to designate the machine that shall handle his offering.

Is this a crime? We observed "children's day" with a splendid program and our little Sunday-school responded with an offering of $26, and the money is now at work in the "Lord's harvest." Last week the ladies of the church gave a 20-cent supper. The public responded and they cleared $35, out of which they carpeted the little church parlor and have a "nest egg" left and other improvements in view.

Each month the officers of the church hold a business meeting, at which time all matters relating to the general work are attended to in a hearty and businesslike manner. The pastor has received his salary and brotherly love is the ruling spirit thus far. On the first Lord's day of each month we all gather about the Lord's table and forget that we are "Baptists" or "Disciples," in a denominational sense.

I submit these few facts to the public for consideration. Have we taken a "backward step"? Would it have been more pleasing to Jesus for us to have done nothing rather than consent to observe his supper once a month? Has anything vital been sacrificed? Has anybody's salvation been put in jeopardy? What would Jesus say?

This town has a population of 4,000 souls and 26 legalized saloons. The united power of God's children is needed here to hold in check the hosts of sin.

If any reader desiring further information relative to the union movement here will address the undersigned a printed circular will be sent free of charge.

The Spirit of God is moving upon the hearts of his children and the prayer of our Savior must be answered.

J. H. Berkey,
Pastor Union Church in Christ.

More About Unity.

Let us take our shoes from our feet; for we are treading upon holy ground. I have the largest sympathy for our brethren and the Baptists, in Monroe, Wisconsin, in their desire to promote unity among the lovers of our Lord; but our sympathies and feelings must not take the place of God's Word.

Brother Garrison says that every denomination in Christendom is saying that they are in favor of unity, but it must be effected upon a scriptural basis. That may be so, but I have not found it in denominational literature. The denominational world long since sanctioned Chillingworth's statement that the Bible is the religion of Protestants; but they have added to the Bible scores of human creeds, confessions of faith, and books of discipline. It is one thing to claim a thing, it is quite another to live up to that claim.

Of course we do not hope for all others to agree with our interpretations; but we do reasonably demand that they shall take God at his word. In the matter of names for God's children, there can be no interpretation. The question simply resolves itself into this: What does the Lord say?

Shall we, for the sake of unity, abandon our plea for a Biblical nomenclature, or scriptural terminology? If we lift the flood-gate here, may not a torrent of humanisms sweep in? Are we not "infallibly right" when we wear the names authorized in the New Testament? Is it assumption upon our part? Is this a matter of "denominational conscience"?

I hold that "Presbyterian Church" is as scriptural as "Union Church of Christ." The Bible commends the presbytery and its work in the ordination of Timothy. It is no more "foreign to the New Testament" than the "idea of union." Both ideas are clearly taught in the Bible; but that is no reason why we should adopt either as a name for the church. As well speak of the church as "The Baptismal Church," or "The Communion Church," or "The Praying Church;" because, forsooth, the Bible enjoins baptism, prayer and communion.

"If Christ be honored in the name of his Church, what need we care for innocent prefixes which express a historic fact?" writes Brother Garrison.

Ah! here is the mischief of the whole matter. The prefixes and suffixes which men have added to divine propositions, are the very causes which have torn and rent the body of Christ and left it bleeding at every pore. It is enough to make the angels weep if there were tears in heaven.

But let us try Brother Garrison's rule. Do not Christian Scientists (so-called) honor(?) the name of Christ? They call themselves "The Church of Christ Scientist." Shall we approve the addition?

The Mormons honor (?) the name of Christ when they call themselves "The Church of the Latter Day Saints of Jesus Christ." Here are prefixes galore. Are they "innocent"? They certainly express "historic facts."

Brother Garrison thinks if we are willing to receive Baptists into our churches, we should be willing for them to continue to make their offerings to Baptist missionary societies. Now I have been simple enough to suppose when Baptists came into our churches they were no longer Baptists, but simply Christians; and that henceforward, by their prayers, labors and money, they would promote the interests of the churches of Christ instead of the Baptist church. Am I wrong in this? I fear we have some among us who more fully represent Baptist doctrine than the teaching of the churches of Christ.

Are we to put the observance of the Lord's supper upon the ground of feelings? Brother Garrison so says. So we can observe it once a week, or once a month, or once, a year if we feel like it. As well claim that the Jew could remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy if he felt like it.

This is not a matter of interpretation. The disciples met together upon the first day of the week to break bread. This is the plain statement of the Bible. It admits of no interpretation. All church histories teach that this was the custom of the early church. He who insists upon its observance does not "assume an ecclesiastical censorship over the case" at all. Loyalty to Christ is our only motive.

Christian unity will come in God's good time. Let us not be so eager for it that we will compromise the word of the Lord. The questions with which these articles deal do not belong to "congregational autonomy," nor to the realm of opinion.

Joplin, Mo. Simpson Ely.

God bless the human sunbeams,
The men both strong and true,
Who daily sing or whistle
At all they have to do.
Their eyes are clear and merry,
Their step is firm, but light.
Their laugh's a benediction,
And life once more seems bright.

God bless the human sunbeams,
The women who, though sad,
Can still be self-forgetful
And other hearts make glad.
Theirs is a blessed mission,
Their smile can make night day,
Their cheery words of comfort
Soon drive all clouds away.

God bless the human sunbeams
The children fair and fond,
Who come into our presence,
Life's hardest lessons conned.
Their prattle falls like music,
Just as a tear-drop starts,
Their kisses and caresses
Can ease poor burdened hearts.

God bless the human sunbeams,
Men, women, children, too,
Who add to life much sweetness,
And leave us less to rue.
God bless them all! God bless them!
They do his work so well,
Reward will follow after,
And heaven the story tell.

Husband, Wife and Home.

Rev. Chas. Frederick Goss has just given us a new book which is far more valuable than all the rest of his works put together; for it is practical, interesting and wise. It is published by the Vir Publishing Company and has a brief introduction by Dr. Sylvanus Stall, whose interest in some of the too much tabooed questions affecting home life, is well known. For the benefit of the Home Circle readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we present here some of the thoughts of Dr. Goss, believing that many of them will want to go to the book itself for his fuller statements. It can be had from the Christian Publishing Company; price $1.

Of course he starts out with that which has been called the greatest thing in the world—love—which is the inspiration of literature and art. Husband, wife, and home, he says, can almost be called the alphabet of civilization, and he very heartily takes issue with those who believe that more harm than good can come by leaving young people to "find out things" by themselves. We must, of necessity, he says, fight as hard to-day to preserve the home as our ancestors did to achieve it, and it is to the defense and honor of the conception that the home is composed of a man and a woman bound together in indissoluble ties of wedlock, with their children, that the volume is dedicated. Dr. Goss has some plain words on the failure to accept family responsibility. In the first place, he contends, a responsibility avoided is not a responsibility evaded, for our neglected duties "keep"; while responsibilities accepted are weights which turn into wings. Nothing, says our writer, can be so pitiable, futile and tragic as to try to avoid the responsibilities of sex. They are inevitable; they are imposed by heaven and they are divinely arranged for our highest good. It is necessary for us to accept them and discharge them nobly.

"Imagine a rosebud sitting down to figure out whether it had better bloom or not." This is the way Dr. Goss treats the profit and loss side of the marriage question. Yet he recognizes that there are abnormal experiences, and he erects a balance and throws the reasons for and against the marriage relationship in the scales. What do we avoid by staying single? he asks. First, the risk of drawing a blank or catching a Tartar. Second, the loss of personal liberty, upon which he comments that what people gain in liberty, they lose in love and goodness. And what do we gain by getting married? First, the satisfaction that we are obeying the fundamental law of elemental instinct. Second, the enjoyment of love. Third, the comfort of friendship. Fourth, the benefit of ballast. Fifth, incentive, which is the deepest need of life.

Taking it for granted that "marriage is the ever blessed ordinance of God" the author proceeds to a discussion of home-makers vs. house-keepers. There are certain family residences, he says, where a spider would die of fright and a fly would commit suicide from the very weight of solitude. "But a beautiful house," he argues, "is not by any necessity a beautiful home, any more than a beautiful home is necessarily the abode of a sea fish; poor fellow, he may have been dead a century." Give us, he says, the women who know how to render the home the abode of comfort, to fill it with that divine atmosphere that invites repose, to imbue it with a presence that awakens dreams of peace and love. He maintains that it requires a greater endowment of soul to make an ideal home than to carve the Venus de Milo, or to paint the Last Supper or to build St. Peters. A very admirable chapter on the spoiling of the American woman by her husband follows. "The woman who would have stood the very hardest discipline of life without a murmur is made a darling and a plaything. Every want and even every whim is gratified until luxury becomes a necessity and then a scourge." When you find the very central qualification of wifehood, is it not help-meetness? he asks. How can a woman be a true wife to a man who does not in some way share with him the burden and care and sorrow of human life? His contention is that the chivalry of American manhood has helped to corrupt its womanhood. At the same time he realizes that a great mass of women are still pulling loyally in the harness with their husbands. A chapter on the children in the home has some very wise words that hit strongly at a certain revival of paganism, and the writer contends that there are resources of power and wisdom in our souls and a certain kind of love that nothing has ever called out but a child. "Children are God's apostles, sent forth, day by day, to preach of love and hope and peace." Our author recommends us, if we have no children of our own, to beg, borrow, he almost says, steal, some; and he mentions the case of a gray headed old fellow who bears the name of Hard Tack, who took so much interest in his only daughter, who was coming home from school, that sometimes instead of writing the figures in his ledger with the dollar sign, he would insert the hours at which the train would arrive at certain points; once when he was writing a letter he astonished his stenographer by saying, "I send you by next freight 125 pounds of as fine a girl as ever walked in shoe leather." When that girl came home for her Christmas vacation, old Hard Tack wiped his glasses from which the mist had been hanging all the evening, and said, "No one need give me any more Christmas presents, I have got all I want."

"What do you do with the best that is in you?" People give their homes the frazzle ends of their time, their strength, and their talents. Men come back to it wrung out like sponges, and squeezed out like oranges. Women pour their strength into the toil of mere house-keeping with the reckless ways of prodigals and have nothing left but quivering nerves and exasperated tempers for the evening hour at the fireside. Dr. Goss maintains that the

FOR CLERGYMEN

Any clergyman can learn something to his advantage by writing for my book entitled, "Ten Years," which gives my successful history. It tells how I started my immense business upon $50.00 capital. It tells the minister how he can invest $5.00 a month or more in a legitimate, profitable enterprise, which promises to pay at least fifteen per cent. this year. I want ministers and doctors as my special representatives. Write for this book. Address The Mac Levy Company, Dept. 86, 63 Clark St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

home is where our best should be shown. "We owe all the light and sweetness there is in us to that sacred group of beings who assemble around the fireside. We built it. We gathered these people there. The responsibility of their happiness is upon our shoulders. And if we can only come home with a smile on our faces, and tell them our funniest stories, sing them our best songs, show them our sweetest manners, perhaps we can transform their sadness and gloom into happiness and good cheer."

There is wise counsel, too, on matrimonial friction. The thing to do with it, says Dr. Goss, is to transform it to character power. It is our human nature to want our own way, and the will of the other to be submerged and swallowed up in ours, but a great step has been taken when at last we see and feel the right of the other soul to its individuality. Self-repression is another great help in preventing friction. Married people can learn that they can control themselves in the presence of each other as well as in the presence of strangers or companions. And so "fewer sparks fly. The teeth of the cog-wheels fall together more smoothly and quietly. The old energy of conflict and contradiction has passed into self-control, and fine and noble character is the resultant. It may seem a harsh dispensation of Providence, but female termagants have often made male heroes and male gadflies have often developed female saints."

The problem of making ends meet is one that causes much of the troubles of matrimony. There are, says Dr. Goss, four or five combinations which affect the success or failure of people to make ends meet. First, the woman is extravagant when the man is economical, and they get into debt. Second, the man is extravagant when the woman is economical, and they are bankrupted. Third, both are thrifty and they become misers. Fourth, both are spendthrifts, and they come to ruin. The irritation of such possible relationships is seen when the man becomes sensitive and then morose, seeing his hard earnings scattered like chaff by his family. All they value the old man for, he comes to feel, is to earn money for them to spend. Or the woman sees her husband frittering away his money on cigars or the slot-machines, while she and the children hardly have the necessities of life. Reproaches begin to be heard, quarreling follows, and then something more desperate. If people want happy homes, contends Dr. Goss, there are certain inexorable laws which they break at their peril. First, we must live within our income. Second, we must have something for emergencies. Third, we must agree absolutely as to the objects of expenditure. Fourth, neither one may indulge in a purely selfish luxury, and fifth, whoever handles the money ought to give the other an "allowance."

Some Amusing Pleas.

Amusing letters are often sent with the MSS submitted to publishers. A contribution in verse is, in fact, nearly always accompanied by an explanatory letter urging its acceptance, either because the poem was a spontaneous effusion, dashed off in a few moments, and hence true genius, or more frequently, laying stress upon the writer's financial need. A novel note was stuck in a letter recently received by a London publisher. "If you accept this verse," it ran, "a sweet girl will accept me. If not, she won't." A MS. of some 100,000 recently submitted to another house contained a lengthy biographical note in which the author stated that his age was twenty years, that he had written the novel in 12 consecutive days, and had then translated it himself into French and Italian, besides preparing the dramatic version. He urged four simultaneous international editions, and closed by assuring the publishers that the novel was of truly unusual merit, speaking, as it were, officially, he said, from a wide experience both on the Continent and in America as publisher, editor, and critic, also dramatic critic. Another would-be author wrote thus of himself: "I am profoundly amusing, and the most original spontaneous originator I know." "The creator of this novel is no freak," modestly writes another aspirant. Letters upholding, explaining, pleading, are frequent, and only less amusing are some of the dedications. "To the Devil," was the startling inscription on a novel recently submitted to the Harpers.

How the Associated Press Got the News of the New Pope's Election.

In the Century for July, Melville E. Stone says in "The Associated Press":

Then came the conclave for the election of a new Pope. It was to be secret and, every effort was made to prevent its proceedings from becoming public. A brick wall was constructed about the hall to prevent any one having access to it. But, to the amazement of every one, the Associated Press had a daily report of all that happened. One of the members of the noble guard was an Associated Press man. Knowing the devotion of the average Italian for the dove, he took with him into the conclave chamber his pet dove, which was a homing pigeon trained to go to our office. But Cardinal Rampolla could not be deceived—he ordered the pigeon killed. Other plans, however, were more successful. Laundry lists sent out with the soiled linen of a cardinal and a physician's prescriptions sent to a pharmacy, proved to be code messages which were deciphered in our office. We were enabled not only to give a complete and accurate story of the happenings within the conclave chamber, but we announced the election of the new Pope, which occurred about 11 a. m. in Rome, so promptly that, owing to the difference in time, it was printed in the morning papers of San Francisco of that day. We were also enabled to send the announcement back to Europe before it was received from Rome direct, and it was our message that was printed in all the European capitals. The Italian authorities did not interfere with these messages.

What Luther Burbank Has Done.

In the Country Calendar for July, W. S. Harwood gives the following summary of the work of the marvelous California plant breeder:

For 35 years, Mr. Burbank has been at work creating new forms of plant life and improving old ones. In that time he has created, by breeding and selection, more than 2,500 distinct species of plants.

Some of his "creations" are: The primus berry, a fruit unknown before, made by the union of a blackberry and a raspberry, which union scientific men said was impossible. The white blackberry, very beautiful, with a delicate flavor. The "phenomenal berry," a similar creation, a cross between a raspberry and a California dewberry, having the color of a raspberry and the shape of a blackberry, but larger than either, far more productive, and with a flavor surpassing both. The plumcot (result of the union of the apricot and the plum), of rare flavor and richness, again disproving the dictum of the scientists. A plum with no pit and one with the flavor of the Bartlett pear. A walnut first so

Regimental Reunions and Forty-Second Anniversary Battle Chickamauga,

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 17-21, 1905.

On September 18, 1905, will occur the forty-second anniversary of the battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle, and, in addition, to hold at the same time, a grand reunion of all the regiments that participated in the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notable gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first time since they marched from its blood stained fields, forty-two years ago.

Grand and glorious will be the meeting and all who attend will have cause to rejoice. The lowest rate ever secured has been given the entire public for this occasion, one cent per mile, short line distance.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long before none will be left to do this noble work; take this opportunity and don't let it escape you, it is worth six months in the school room to any student.

It may be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week with the Woodneys.

THE FIFTH DAY (CONTINUED).

"Quick! quick!" cried old Mr. Acre, seeing Arthur approach on a dead run. "Rush in and bar the gates! Did you see the old, old man and the four horsemen?"

"I saw a great cloud of dust," panted Arthur, "it looked as if a whole army were coming."

"It is the mob!" cried the old gentleman briskly. "If they enter here, I am lost! Rush! Bar the gates!"

By this time, both old Mr. Acre and Arthur were in the court of Horseshoe House. The youth now observed for the first time, two large lattice gates which were fastened back to the walls of the opposite ends of the building. With trembling fingers he loosened them and slammed the gates to. There were three great iron bolts which he shot into place.

"Good lad!" cried the old man watching his actions with great approval. "Now for the front doors. Come!" He darted into the room in which Arthur and Worth Acre had slept the night before. Pushing open a door at the end of the room he led the way through a long, winding, lumber-room to the door which opened upon the street. This front apartment was uncarpeted; boxes and broken pieces of furniture were ranged along the curving walls. The old man with surprising agility rushed to a washstand which had lost its castors, and seized one end. "Quick! the barricade!" he cried. It was impossible to witness his enthusiasm and energy without sharing his zeal. Arthur exerted all his strength in dragging the washstand to the door. They toppled it over against the portals. "A chair!" cried Mr. Acre, "that goodsbox—that bucket—quick, before they come!" Arthur placed a three-legged chair upon the washstand, and the box upon the chair. "The bucket will be no use," he said, wiping his brow. It was harder work than sodding. But, O, Mr. Acre! How can you expect to keep them out?"

"How can I expect to keep them out?" cried the other fiercely. "Do you understand that if I do not keep them out, I die?"

"Oh, sir," stammered Arthur in horror, what have you done? Are they the officers of the law?"

"So they call themselves," said Mr. Acre. "The law, forsooth! I am above the law. The law is my subject. Fasten the shutters!" There was a window on each side of the wall, protected by inside shutters. Mr. Acre closed one pair, and Arthur, with a shudder at the other's words, closed the pair opposite. The shutters were of solid wood except for a triangular space at the top which let in small patches of light. Mr. Acre explained, "One could ascend upon a chair and peep; but the sight of them sickens me! Besides there is not a moment to loose. Rush! rush!! Follow me!" The old gentleman tore back through the winding lumber room into Worth Acre's bedchamber. He slammed to the inside shutters of its single window and burst through the door at the other extremity of the apartment, into a small dining room.

"Fasten the shutters," he panted, pausing to recover his breath. Arthur obeyed in a dazed state of amazement and fearful apprehension. "We have no time to make those opening into the court, secure; besides the gates are barred and will keep them out of the court for some time."

"But if they burst open the gates?" asked Arthur.

"I shall be firm!" cried the old man, drawing himself to his full height. "I am not afraid to die." Then he added, hastily, "but I don't want to do it yet. Come!" He led the way into the kitchen, and Arthur found Aunt Tabby seated in a chair by the stove, peeling potatoes. There was something about her jet black face, her enormous form, her bright red headgear, and the very potatoes, that made Arthur feel as if he were coming out of some sort of a nightmare.

"Tabitha," panted Mr. Acre, "the mob is coming! Bring me my wife and children! Bar the shutters!"

"Don't you close dem shutters," said Aunt Tabby to Arthur. "I've got to have light on my wuk."

"Do you understand that the mob is at the gates?"

"Yes, suh, I spects dey is, but dese 'taters is got to be peeled, mob or no mob. I'll fix de shutters if dey come projeckin' aroun' heah."

"Come on, boy," cried Mr. Acre. He darted into the next room where Aunt Tabby slept, and through it into another lumber-room which formed the other front end of the house. Like its counterpart across the court, it was uncarpeted and showed a confused heap of boxes and broken furniture. They dragged an iron bedstead against the door and stacked other pieces of furniture upon it. The shutters were fastened, and the old man sank upon a stool, breathing heavily. For the first time since the beginning of their meteoric progress through the semi-circular building, Arthur had time to think. The attitude of the black woman caused him to suspect that perhaps the old man was somewhat mentally unbalanced. "Does Mr. Worth Acre know about it?" he ventured when he had rested sufficiently to control his voice.

"He knows all," the old man assured him. "It was he who built this house for my protection. After I was tried and sentenced, the mob was so bloodthirsty that it was hard to find a prison in which I would be safe. In this house, I am secure from violence, and can wait with perfect firmness for the day of my execution. He has filled the two front rooms with these delightful boxes and bureaus and old stoves and things. Sometimes I barricade with one thing, sometimes with another. It affords me endless variety in multiform combinations. To-day, as you see, the foundation is the iron bedstead. I have not used that for three weeks. To-morrow it will be yonder rusty stove." The old gentleman, who held his cane across his knees, rubbed his little dry hands in evident satisfaction. Arthur gazed upon him with ever dawning apprehension. It was evident that the old gentleman was astray; but was there, after all, some deed, some crime, which had unbalanced him? Were the officers of the law in reality upon his track?

"Hark!" cried Mr. Acre, suddenly holding up a withered hand. "They come. Ha! Not an instant too soon!"

Arthur listened intently and a confused murmur came to him from the west. It increased in violence. In spite of reflection, he felt his blood tingling with excited suspense. The old man rose and laid aside his cane. The sound had increased to a tumult. There was the trample of many feet outside. "The mob!" cried the old man triumphantly. "One more chair upon the barricade! I wish you had set that bucket at the top of the other one."

"What can it mean?" cried Arthur, pale and uncertain. "There are not so many people in the village! It sounds like a hundred horsemen."

"The old, old man is leading them, be sure of that!" cried Mr. Acre, again rubbing his hands in apparent delight. "Listen to the roar—the screaming—the frenzied clamor!" Arthur hastily thrust the broken-backed chair upon the mass of furniture. The noise grew louder every moment. "I believe," he suggested, "I'll climb up and peep through the top of the shutter."

"Do so, my brave lad!" cried Mr. Acre. "I was obliged to give that up, long ago, for I am growing old."

Arthur, as he pushed a table under the window, asked, "Do they come often?"

"They come every day, but not in such numbers," replied old Mr. Acre. "This is to be one of my great days. History will not go to press till it gets the news of this great event. All the world is watching the issue. Be steady of nerve, lad, let not your heart fail you—for that table is broken."

Arthur, with some peril to his limbs, climbed up and peeped through the triangle at the top of the shutters. "Oh!" he exclaimed, "it is a herd of cattle!"

"You may well call them that!" exclaimed Mr. Acre, fiercely. "Cattle! beasts! imbeciles! Groveling under the foot of majesty! Shrieking for they know not what! Clamoring for royal blood and innocent lives!"

Arthur descended tranquilly. He knew, now, that his companion's mind was astray, and he dared not explain that the cattle going past the window were on their way to some neighboring farm, to be fattened for next autumn's market. The youth had not been to school very much, but even if he had, it is to be doubted if he would have suspected that Mr. Acre imagined himself Louis XVI of France, But he had seen and heard enough to understand Aunt Tabby's collected manner as she bent over her potatoes, and he humored the old gentleman in his delusion. They sat and talked in whispers for almost an hour, always upon the theme of mobs and royal rights, and then Worth Acre, whom Aunt Tabby had let in through the kitchen window, entered the lumber room. "Well, grandfather," he said cheerily, "the mob has been dispersed. Arthur, when I told you to come around at six, I thought you'd understand I meant my blacksmith shop."

"Oh!" said Arthur. "No, I thought you meant your home."

"It doesn't matter," said Worth Acre, a little anxiously, "if everything has gone well with you. I meant to prepare you for —everything, you see."

"I don't know what I would have done without the lad," cried the old man. "He stood guard for me at the west end of town, and brought the warning. He helped me barricade, and was not afraid to look through the loophole and examine the mob. He is a lad of mettle, and certainly proved a friend in need, this day."

"Good! good!" cried Mr. Worth Acre, his face brightening. He threw open the shutters; and began to drag the furniture away from the door. "We will keep him here for good, if you say so, grandfather."

"By all means, if he will adopt this as his country," said Mr. Acre.

"He'll adopt it, sure," cried the blacksmith. "Now we'll have supper, for I've waited an hour beyond my time at the shop, wondering why he didn't come. You will not mind his eating with us, I am sure."

"He shall have a little table in the room and dine as we dine," returned the old man, with pleasing condescension. "We must not be too formal in these cruel times, especially to our faithful retainers."

Business Notes.

"What is Your Life?" by Russell, is one of the books to put into the hand of any young friend, especially one leaving home even for a time. Price, $1.00.

The devotional books, "Alone with God," "Heavenward Way," and "Half Hour Studies," are always in demand and always acceptable. In good silk cloth, 75 cents each.

We have made another order for that splendid, pure, wholesome and uplifting book, "The Simple Life," by Chas. Wagner. Hoping to do good causes us to offer it in cloth binding at 50 cents, postpaid.

In marriage certificates, booklets and such like, we are fully equipped and will take pleasure in sending you our circular, with full list of the stock on hand and prices of same. Command us in any way possible.

We have had to make another shipment of "The Christian Worker's Bible and Christian Worker's Testament," but will be well stocked before these notes are read, and we can fill your order or give you any information.

More inquiry for Home Department and Cradle Roll supplies are coming in than we anticipated, but the stock is now complete and we take pleasure in promptly responding to all calls. Write for circulars or samples.

We are at last able to furnish such cards as will enable us to supply the "Faithful" series of reward cards to those using them, at same prices, too. This has been another tedious delay, but the supply now in hand will soon be gone.

Has your school used the red and blue buttons or has either of your Endeavor Societies tried them? We have them for both branches of the work, selling either red or blue, for either society or school, at 1 cent each in any quantity.

Our "Birthday Banks" are really handsome glass globes on which the margin is very small, but which we carry for the good of the schools; selling them at 35 and 50 cents and $1.35, postpaid, we will guarantee that you can get nothing nicer for the money from any publishing house.

Besides the books listed in this column for summer reading, look over the advertisement in this issue of others of a similar character and note the remarkable price at which we are selling them, making a "bargain" book sale of splendid, good, helpful reading every day in the week.

We have had to make an additional order for Souvenir Buttons, with scripture texts and scenes in the Life of Christ, so popular are they among Bible-school pupils. We are selling them at 15 cents per dozen, or $1 per 100, postpaid. It is a simple device by which to please Bible-school pupils.

We shall soon be compelled to run another edition of "The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, even if one of the reviewers did say, "It ought not to have been printed." By the way the one dollar bills are coming in for it, we guess the brotherhood is trying to find what is wrong with it. Others are welcome to join the search on payment of the $1 fee.

A strike in the book binderies of this city has caused us no little trouble and disapointment in getting out new editions of our book, so that we beseech our friends to bear with us, promising that every order shall be filled as promptly as possible, especially song book orders; but Popular Hymns No. 2, cloth, is now tied up in the bindery for a season.

The vice-president of this company suggests that we secure 500 copies of the Commentary of Matthew, by Peloubet, if it is possible to do so at such a rate as will enable us to continue the sale of them at 50 cents, postpaid, and we are trying to do so. But whether we do or not, those now on hand will go and are going at that price while they last; cloth bound, too, with 400 pages.

A brother kindly suggests to us that we ought to have no trouble about cashing private checks without cost (at least he has none) if we keep a bank account. Well, we have tried hard these many years to keep a bank account, but we have to give it up; it simply will not keep, and if it could it would lose fifteen cents each time a country local check is deposited. This loss amounts to hundreds of dollars to us each year, while we know the exchange often costs you absolutely nothing. Now, just "put yourself in our place."

"Gloria in Excelsis," in silk cloth, postpaid, at $1 per volume, is the cheapest and best song book of nearly 700 pages on the market. It is put up in leather back at $1.25 per copy, postpaid. In dozen lots the cloth sells at $9.50, not prepaid, and in 100 lots at 75 cents each, not prepaid. The leather back, in dozen lots, is $12, not prepaid. In one hundred lots it is 95 cents per copy, not prepaid. In quantities of 50 or more the rate for 100 will apply. More than 1,500 are now in the hands of the brotherhood and every mail brings us strong commendations of the book. It is the Best.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Vol. XLII. August 10, 1905 No. 32

Current Events.

Another Preacher. We were commenting recently upon the foolish utterance of a reverend gentleman who proposed the nomination of a presidential ticket for 1908, composed of Hanly, of Indiana (Republican), and Folk, of Missouri (Democrat). Equally zealous in the cause of reform, and equally undiscriminating in his pursuit of that ideal, is another preacher who has recently broken forth in a tirade against Governor Hanly for not enforcing the Indiana anti-cigarette law. It will be remembered that at the recent session of the Indiana legislature, a law was enacted prohibiting the purchase, sale, exchange, giving away, possession or use of cigarettes or cigarette papers. It was meant for an absolute prohibition and was framed as strongly as possible. For a time it was rigidly and literally enforced. Then it was taken into the courts for a test case, on the theory that any individual had a constitutional right to receive shipments of the prohibited articles if sent to him from points without the state. It was the old "original package" question which has given so much trouble in Iowa and other prohibition states. The courts decided, as they have always decided, that interstate commerce covers the transportation of an article from the time it leaves the consignor until it reaches the consignee, and that since the regulation of interstate commerce is solely the function of Congress, a state could not lawfully prohibit a man from importing cigarettes for his own use. Since that decision, the cigarette smokers have been more at their ease, though there has been far less cigarette smoking than before. But of course anyone who really wants to smoke cigarettes can order them by mail. Now arises the above-mentioned preacher and rails at the governor for not enforcing the anti-cigarette law. All of the law that is left after the decision of the court got through with it is being rigidly enforced, but that apparently is not enough. Our zealous friend does not pause to recognize any distinction between judicial and executive functions. He would be a poor governor who, with whatever good intentions, should try to enforce a law in opposition to the interpretation of the courts. In reality what we need is the enactment of a law by Congress, such as was pending at the last session, by which the protection of interstate commerce would cease as soon as any article which is prohibited by state law passes over the state line. This would make state prohibitory laws effective, as they are not now and cannot be even with the most energetic and conscientious of governors.

The Study of Insurance. Insurance has long since become a subject of such magnitude, importance and intricacy that it is a distinct branch of finance demanding the most careful technical study. One of the lessons suggested by the Equitable troubles, and the throes and agonies of reconstruction is that it is not sufficient to have an occasional upheaval of righteous wrath against the abuse of trusts, but that there needs to be a more exhaustive and intelligent study of the whole subject of insurance by all parties concerned and especially by those who make and administer the laws governing insurance companies and insurance inspection. The annual report of the Massachusetts superintendent of insurance, just issued, deals very pointedly with the current situation. It points out some of the special dangers and temptations to which the management of insurance companies is liable—"the gambling instinct of the age, schemes for getting enormously rich, graft by city officials, state officials, national officials, petty legislators, congressmen, United States senators and courts subservient to the great Moloch, money," and in addition to these, the mad rivalry between the largest companies in their struggle to outstrip each other and become the biggest. The subject of fraternal insurance is dealt with and the assertion is made that, in general, their rates are too low for safety and that the new rates of the Royal Arcanum are not too high. One of the standing temptations grows out of the connections between the insurance companies and the trust companies which handle their money. The report says: "It must be said that the situation constantly presents the temptation to directors who also have stock in the trust company to give the latter all the advantages they possibly can in the way of deposits and loans. The interests of their pockets are in perpetual conflict with their duties as fiduciary agents of the policy holders and stockholders of the insurance companies, a most unfortunate state of affairs, from which, sooner or later, in some instances, the insurance company is coming out second best." The report recommends that the Massachusetts legislature at its next session take up the questions of deferred dividends and the relation of insurance and trust companies, with a view to strengthening the insurance laws. If the insurance laws of Massachusetts, which are already among the best in the union, show room for improvement, the need of it in other states is doubly urgent.

The Folk of Milwaukee. Mr. Francis E. McGovern, prosecuting attorney of Milwaukee, is treading the path of official virtue which leads to fame and political reward. The investigation of conditions in that city has revealed a condition of corruption scarcely second to that which prevailed in St. Louis before Mr. Folk began his campaign. Mr. McGovern says he is only about half through, but up to the present time there have been 259 indictments against 89 persons, most of whom are office-holders. Of those who have been tried up to date fifteen have been found guilty and four not guilty; five have confessed. Among those who have been caught in the net of investigation are a building inspector, a commissioner of public works, a registrar of deeds, constables, aldermen, and supervisors. The offenses are bribery, extortion, and violation of election laws. Most of the cases are plain bribery, without excuse or extenuation. Mr. McGovern served for about two years as assistant prosecuting attorney and in this office gained a considerable reputation for honesty and efficiency. When he became a candidate for his present position it was a clear cut issue between the friends of virtue and the friends of vice, and Mr. McGovern was not only elected, but ran far ahead of his ticket. This is one of those encouraging signs which indicate that the majority of the people really prefer honest government and will vote against graft, at least when it is properly labeled. He has been prosecuting attorney of Milwaukee for the past six months and the results of his work are as above outlined. Another result is that Mr. McGovern is the most talked-of man in his state and probably the most popular, unless it be Governor La Follette, who is also a reformer. One need not put his ear to the ground to hear the rumor that Mr. McGovern will be the next governor of Wisconsin. It is in the air. It is a useful lesson to the politicians to see the success and popularity of these men who do the right thing in public office. The temptations of the politician are many and subtle. He deserves more sympathy than he usually gets, and he needs the stimulus of such cases as these to remind him that, in the long run, the straight and narrow way is the road to political success.

The Department of Agriculture.

On the theory that the honest farmer is the main-stay of the country's virtue, it would seem highly appropriate that the Department of Agriculture should be the stronghold of official rectitude, however other departments of the government might be honeycombed with graft. It is therefore a source of particular regret that this department has lately fallen under suspicion. The leak in the cotton reports, which was recently brought to light, and even the possible perversion of them in the interest of speculators, have moved Secretary Wilson to adopt a new plan for gathering statistics with regard to crops. Instead of abandoning the reports, as has been suggested, he will increase the force which collects the data so that the work of each statistician will check the others. The rumor that Secretary Wilson would resign or that pressure was being put upon him to make him resign from the Cabinet on account of the condition into which the department has fallen, is wholly uncalled-for and we are glad to learn that he has decided to hold his ground. Nothing that has yet come to light indicates any fault on the part of the Secretary.

Protection of Birds.

The public needs to be more fully informed as to the economic value of wild birds. Perhaps it will be news to many that the Gould system of railroads employs a man to travel up and down their lines, giving lectures on birds and the value of birds to the farmer; teaching children to love and protect birds, and in every possible way creating a bird sentiment. It is not a matter of sentiment with the railroad. They do not do it out of love for the feathery songsters, but because more birds means few harmful insects, fewer insects means larger crops, larger crops means more freight, and more freight means larger dividends for the road. If it is worth while for a railroad to teach people about birds for the sake of increasing its freight earnings, it ought to be worth while, especially for people who raise things, to learn the lesson. When one considers the terrific and almost incalculable multiplying power of insects, it becomes apparent that the balance of nature can be preserved only by preserving the insects' enemies. In primitive times the struggle for life was between man and the savage beasts of the field; now it is between man and insects. The agent of the Gould lines, above referred to, who has been giving these lessons in what is sometimes called "dynamic biology" is Col. Isaac W. Brown. He has enlisted the interest of a number of eastern capitalists who are said to have promised the necessary financial support for a systematic campaign of instruction throughout the country to teach the children how to protect the birds. The plan has not yet been worked out, but several features have been talked of, such as the establishment of a newspaper and the founding of a summer school or a series of them for the study of birds. Meanwhile the development of nature study in the public schools may be made to contribute largely to this end. There is a human value and an educational value in this nature study for children, which is of not less consequence than its economic value.

The Good Live Long.

For the encouragement of the clergy, we submit a table of longevity which was prepared by a former officer of the British National Health Society, and was published in a recent magazine. The table shows that the ministry is, of all callings, the most conducive to long life. In the following list the occupations are named in the order of longevity: "Clergy (Church of England), dissenting ministers, farmers, agricultural laborers, grocers, lawyers, drapers, coal miners, watchmakers, artists, shoemakers, bakers, clerks, chemists (apothecaries), greengrocers, tailors, doctors, butchers, painters, musicians, cab and 'bus' men, sweeps, publicans, metal miners, bankers, London laborers, barmen (barkeepers)." It will be seen, thus, that the Church of England is more salubrious than any of the dissenting bodies in that country—perhaps because they have less worry about collecting their salaries, which are in the main the product of endowments. It will be observed also that saloonkeepers stand at the opposite extreme in the list. The moral is too obvious to require a statement. It would be still clearer if we could compare the average longevity of those who regularly patronize the ministry with those who patronize the saloonkeepers, all of which goes to confute the ancient fallacy that the good die young.

The Case of Dr. Moore.

When the disclosure of graft is the order of the day, there is danger of unnecessary panic and unjust criticism of public officers. The attacks that have been made upon Dr. George T. Moore of the Department of Agriculture seem to us to illustrate this tendency. Dr. Moore is a young man who, after teaching scientific subjects for a few years, accepted an appointment in the Department of Agriculture, where his researches with regard to methods of fertilization of soil, have been remarkably successful. His most important discovery was patented a few months ago and turned over to the government, so that neither the discoverer nor anyone else would derive profit from a monopoly of it. It has recently come to light that Dr. Moore was interested in a company which prepares and sells the material which is recommended in the government bulletin issued under his supervision. Here is a situation which might mean a criminal perversion of public office to private gain. But the explanation which he gives is a very simple one and, as it seems to us, it explains. When the company was organized a year or so ago, it tried to secure his services and, pending his decision in the matter, a block of stock was assigned to his wife. When he decided last April to remain with the department, the stock was returned. It is not apparent that there has been any abatement in Dr. Moore's zeal in the advocacy of nitroculture since the surrender of the stock. On the basis of all the facts that have so far appeared, it seems a very great injustice to class him among the grafters, and to talk about "Holmes and Moore" as the black sheep of the Department of Agriculture.

The Zionist Movement.

The Zionists have just closed their annual congress at Basle, Switzerland. The notable feature of the congress was the final rejection of the offer made by Great Britain two years ago to give territory for a Jewish colony in British East Africa. In the plan proposed by Dr. Herzl, of Vienna, the father of Zionism, the central feature was the establishment of an independent Jewish state somewhere. The project of securing from the sultan permission to occupy Palestine was an interesting but not an essential feature of the scheme. Thousands of influential Jews rallied to the movement and since 1887, the year following Dr. Herzl's proposal, an annual congress of Zionists has been held. The matter has been presented to the sultan but no assurances have been received. It is hard for those who do not allow sentimental to outweigh practical considerations to believe that a successful colony of Jews could be planted in Palestine even if the sultan would give all the concessions that are asked. The plan suggested by the British government to settle in East Africa had practical merits, but it failed to command the support of the leaders of Zionism, for with them it was a religious as well as a political program and involved a return to the old home. A considerable party seceded from the Zionist organization after the rejection of the British offer and this division of counsel will probably make it even more difficult to accomplish anything in the future.

Brother Braden's Questions.

The one thing which we fully determined upon in sending forth a book on the subject of the Holy Spirit was, not to make it the occasion of any controversy on the subject to which the author would be a party. Nor is it our purpose to reply to any review of the book. We welcome adverse citicism. The author of the work does not claim to know more about the Holy Spirit than his brethren, nor has he ever claimed the ability to make clear to others the mystery connected with this profound theme. He is simply a student of the Scriptures on this subject which he believes has not received heretofore the attention that its importance demands.

Touching Brother Braden's questions—which we answer only because they are questions directed to us—they may all be summed up, it seems to us, in a single objection which he finds to the book, namely: That we have not explained, in clear and unmistakable terms, all the methods by which the Holy Spirit enlightens the mind,comforts the heart, and brings to fruitage the seeds of truth which have been sown in the human mind and heart. Had it been the alleged purpose of the book to clear away any mystery attacing to this subject as to how the Holy Spirit can influence the human spirit, and how he has influenced the minds and the lives of prophets and apostles, and sustained martyrs in the agony of their tortures, the criticism would have been well taken. But the author made no such pretentions, and had no such object in view. It is said of Webster that, when asked once if he could comprehend Christ, he replied, "No; if I could I would not believe on him as the Son of God." If we could comprehend the Holy Spirit and all his ways of reaching and influencing human life and human character, the theme would not be so sublime as it is. To put limitations upon the divine in order to bring it within the scope of our poor human reason, so that we may call it "rational," is not a method of faith.

Our brother says, "You do not state, you do not even hint, what you are contending for, what you mean, what you desire us to accept, believe, enjoy; though you claim it is a boon inestimable." We supposed it was apparent upon every page of the book what the author desired its readers to "accept and enjoy," namely: The clear and emphatic teaching of Jesus Christ and his apostles concerning the Holy Spirit, and their compliance with this teaching in order to receive the Holy Spirit himself, to comfort us in our sorrow, to help us in our prayers, strengthen us in our weakness, and to bring forth his blessed fruit in our lives. This, Brother Braden, is what the author desires for himself and for all who name the name of Jesus Christ. We sincerely trust that no metaphysical difficulty which Brother Braden and others may raise will be permitted to deprive them of this "boon inestimable." We cannot explain how the Holy Spirit helps us in our prayers, but we know he does. We do not know how the infinite Spirit of the Almighty reaches our spirits in moments of darkness, perplexity, and trouble, with the healing balm of his love and sympathy, but we know that he does it, and it is this fact that is infinitely more valuable to us than any metaphysical theory as to the method of his operations.

Brother Braden states that this "rational, moral power, influence, exerted through ideas imparted to the human spirit by words and acts that represent ideas, exhaust the meaning of the language of the Bible in regard to the indwelling of the Father, the Christ, and the Holy Spirit in man." And he asks, "Is this position correct? If it is not, in what is it incorrect?" It is incorrect in that it presumes to limit the Almighty. God may have ways of bringing moral influence to bear on human life and character other than through ideas expressed by words and acts. Again, the theory is incorrect in that it leaves unexplained many of the facts of the Bible, to say nothing of the facts of ordinary Christian experience. It does not explain the marvelous change wrought in the apostles after Pentecost, the fact of inspiration, and the superhuman strength, physical, intellectual and moral, which men both in the Old and New Testament Scriptures are said to have possessed. It does not account for the fact that some of the humblest and most unlearned of God's children have had the largest measure of the Holy Spirit, making them joyful in tribulation and triumphant in temptation and in persecution. In a word, the theory seems to lead and has led to the theory of an "absentee God," putting men now out of direct personal relations with his infinite Spirit, and allowing him to guide the course of human life and history only through words and ideas. Any theory that deprives us of this privilege of direct intercourse with the immanent, personal God is fundamentally wrong.

Speaking of the claim that the Holy Spirit is still dealing with men, enlightening and guiding them, our brother asks us to "specify a single new idea so revealed." Here seems to lurk a fundamental misconception, not only of Brother Braden, but of other reviewers of the book under consideration. As if we were contending for a supplementary revelation of equal authority with that of the New Testament! Is the church not continually coming to a clearer and larger apprehension of Christ, and of his revealed will? Has it not outgrown many of the superstitious ideas and practices of the past? Is not the theology of to-day more rational and scriptural than that of the middle ages? Does not the religious reformation which we plead to-day take a few steps beyond any previous reformation? If so, whence this progress? Our answer is, It is from the presence of the Holy Spirit in the church, fulfilling Christ's promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," and his other promise that he would guide his disciples into all the truth. The only other answer to the question is, that this progress is the result of the unaided human intellect, for the objective revelation has been the same through all these centuries. Pride of intellect may lead us to attribute all this progress to our unaided human powers; we prefer to attribute it to the revealing power of the Holy Spirit, dwelling in the church, in the hearts of Christian people, and leading them on to an ever-increasing knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ. Of course, the Holy Spirit uses all the powers of the human intellect, conscience and imagination in promoting this growth, but in how many ways he quickens and clarifies the moral and intellectual powers of men, to give them a larger and better knowledge of Christ, which is his supreme mission, we repeat, lies beyond the reach of the human intellect. Here, as in many other glorious truths, "we walk by faith, not by sight."

One might be led to suppose from such articles as that of Brother Braden and others of similar character that God's great and chief concern is to have a perfect objective revelation, in words, of his will; but the Bible is only a means to an end and that end is that the will of God and the truth of God be written on the hearts of the people, and this is the work of the Holy Spirit. It is only as the truth, love and life of God, a record of which we have in the Bible, are transferred to the hearts and lives of men, that God's purpose in redemption is accomplished. It is "Christ formed within us," and not simply enthroned above us, that is "the hope of glory." To form Christ within men is the supreme aim of God and the supreme work of the Holy Spirit.

"Doctrines That Divide."

The Christian Work and Evangelist has been dealing very suggestively, recently, on the above topic. It is a hopeful sign of the times when leading and conservative religious journals are beginning to see clearly that our divisions have been brought about and are perpetuated by an undue emphasis of doctrinal views, which, even though they are correct, are not vital. All of this, of course, tends in the direction of unity by the simplification of creed. This was one of the earliest facts discovered by the fathers of this reformation when they began to agitate the subject of Christian union. In seeking for the minimum creed, that would embody the maximum faith, they found it in the New Testament confession of faith, which is the confession of Jesus Christ as the Son of God. Christ, they said, is the creed of Christendom. To believe on and obey him—that is Christianity. This was thought by many to be too short a creed, and to open a floodgate for the incoming of all manner of false theologies and opinions. Time and actual experience, however, have shown that where Jesus Christ is received without reservation as the Lord of conscience and of life, there is little room for false theologies and hurtful heresies to thrive.

It is assuring now to hear such papers as the one mentioned above utter statements like the following:

> After all, what are they worth? Not one of these divisive doctrines is either essential to holy living or final well-being. This is our standpoint, our firm conviction, the thesis we propose to maintain to the end of our writing, the basis of our hope for the union of all "believing" souls who find that loving the one Lord and the one sole truth is better than spinning webs of fine distinction to catch souls like flitting insects, or stretching ropes of hard and fast dogma to trip the feet of our toiling and tired fellow men. There surely is a better way. If we find it not, what loss is ours! If we find it, behold the gain!

Truly there is a "better way." What that way is we have already indicated. It is the Gibraltar, the impregnable fortress, of the current reformation urging the return to New Testament Christianity. It is putting Christ at the center, and allowing him to guide us in all things called Christian. It is holding not only to the personal Christ as Savior and Lord but seeking to embody his life and spirit. The divisive spirit, which is contrary to the Christian spirit, is thus denounced by our contemporary:

> The mischief of divisive preaching is coming sharply into sight and conflicts to-day with the peace of the church and the progress of the gospel. Some pulpits are simply protests against all others, standing like the Pharisees at the street corners to exalt one view of truth to the detriment of every other view. Sects are built this way, and many churches maintain their position by a systematic denunciation of the variations from a single type in worship or in religious teaching. It is the same passion which leads men to monopolize the market and create a "corner" in great commodities. The Jew was determined that only Jews should be inheritors of God, and the Calvinist resolved that only his elected should enter into life through grace. Talk as you may, it is simply the old savagery of human selfishness that has given the world exclusive religions to vex rather than to save men.

But are we not to be loyal to the truth as we understand the truth? Most certainly, we must be, if we are Christian in spirit. But we must allow every other man the same privilege, and by a stretch of charity try to believe, though this is exceedingly difficult to some, that other people are as honest in their convictions as we are in ours. But suppose that in the exercise of this full religious liberty men choose to differ from us in truths which we hold to be vital and fundamental? Then we must stand unflinchingly by what we believe to be vital and fundamental, and seek in love to teach our brother the way of the Lord more perfectly. As a rule, however, our divisions do not grow out of differences about the plainly revealed truths and commands of our Lord, but out of matters far less important.

What the church needs to-day, then, is not less but greater loyalty to Christ, and especially loyalty to his breadth of vision and of charity, with much greater discrimination than has been heretofore exercised as to what constitutes the faith, and our deductions and opinions. In this way lies unity.

Notes and Comments.

One of our bright young women, whose head is as clear as her heart is sound, was recently asked concerning one of our old veterans whose daily life is a Christian benediction to all who know him, whether she did not think he was about fifty years behind the time. "Yes," the young sister remarked, "about two thousand years behind; he dates clear back to the time of Christ!" The "up-to-date" Christian whose life doesn't reproduce something of that life that was lived two thousand years ago among men, is altogether too modern to be called Christian.

It is curious, if not instructive, to note the zeal and ingenuity which some of the brethren are displaying to show that the word "body" in the passage, "Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have from God?" does not refer to the body of the individual Christian but to the church. Now if these brethren who wish all mysteries explained will please tell us how the Holy Spirit can dwell in the church and not in its individual members they will shed some light on the darkness which their contributions have thrown upon this subject. A Roman Catholic, of course, would solve this problem by saying that he dwelt in the bishops and in the pope who really constitute the church, but that theory does not fit in with our conception of the church as made up of individual Christians who alike share in the privileges, blessings and honors of the kingdom of God.

A brother who has read the Editor's book on the Holy Spirit writes: "One of my greatest desires is to enjoy, if such a thing be possible, the conscious presence of the Holy Spirit. I hope you will kindly specify just what emotions, feelings, or experiences warrant your claim of 'consciousness.' I do not say that you are wrong. What I want to determine is whether I have had like experiences and have failed to trace them to this blessed Source." We do not need to specify what "emotions, feelings, or experiences" may be referred to the Holy Spirit since the apostle Paul has done that for us. They are, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control," which the apostle calls "the fruit of the Spirit." We have no doubt our brother enjoys these feelings and experiences, but it is possible that he, like many others, has failed to attribute them to the Holy Spirit. As to whether we cognize these experiences within the realm of our consciousness as the fruit of the Holy Spirit, directly, or through faith —that is a metaphysical question about which the average Christian need not concern himself. Faith reaches a degree of certitude that is called knowledge. Indeed, it is a medium of knowledge. "Through faith we understand." Paul says, "I know whom I have believed." He first believed on the Lord and then, by personal experience, came to know him. The circuit is so short and rapid by which we apprehend certain thoughts, purposes, and aspirations as the work of the Holy Spirit, that the mind is unable to follow the process. As the eye discerns colors and the ear sounds, so there is in man that which apprehends the divine and knows it to be divine. Jesus said that as the sheep recognize their shepherd's voice and follow him, so his sheep would know his voice and follow him. And yet we are not to disassociate this knowledge of Christ's voice, and testimony of the Spirit within us, from the objective testimony of God's word. They act conjointly.

Current Religious Thought.

Dr. Howard A. Bridgman of The Congregationalist and Christian World has been "doing" the Kentucky mountains and is writing very interestingly in his paper about what he saw and heard. The following extract will interest our readers:

> Even the Rockefeller incident is discussed in remote cabins and a Boston friend who preceded me by a few weeks into the section told me of her interview with a shrewd and sturdy elderly man who asked her how she "was a-feelin' about that air Rockefeller money." Yankee-like she parried and asked what he thought of it. Slowly and with the judicial air of the mountaineer of all time and place, he said: "Ef that air, air blood money—and I a'n't a-sayin' it is, and I a'n't a-sayin' it a'n't, 'cause I don't know—but ef that air, air blood money, ef it were taken from poor folks, I 'low the properest thing would be to give it back to the poor folks as he took it from, but that's unpossible. Now ef it war blood money, ef it war taken from poor folks, and ef it can't be given back to the poor folks as he took it from, I 'low the next best thing would be to give it to some other poor folks."

Dr. Gladden, with all his learning and logic, failed to get to the heart of the matter like this illiterate mountaineer with nothing but plain horse-sense and honest instincts to guide him.

Editor's Easy Chair.

A brother signing himself "An Alabama Hill Billy" says he supposes we get many sorts of letters from many sorts of people—which is a true supposition—and wonders if we wouldn't like to have one from an "Alabama Hill Billy," adding that "some of you northern brothers gave us this name." We do not know about all the "Hill Billies," but this particular specimen is very interesting, and we thank him for writing. He has the spirit of the genuine reformer, and, strange to say, is suffering persecution from some of the same people whose ancestors were persecuted for asserting their religious freedom. What is this "Hill Billy's" crime that has caused his own people to ostracize him? Let him tell it in his own words: "Being an invalid young man and having had much time for thought and investigation, the blessed circumstance has directed me to your great and beautiful paper for needed spiritual food and comfort in long, lonely days. Truly, I am with you in heart in all your views. I have been seeing this for a long time, but have no opportunity to commune with unprejudiced, good wills, big souls, and receive in return responding sympathy. Our home church is altogether an anti people, non-progressive, non-missionary. Some members actually don't believe in the gift of the Holy Spirit, don't believe in anything much but baptism. Poor souls! they have never had anything else expounded into their noggins! I am the only member who reads a progressive, missionary paper. Our minister says: 'The idea of progression!' He went on to say that such 'big guns,' as yourself, were the very devil's own agents. He had found out that I was reading your paper and now some of the brothers and sisters think it proper to shun and withdraw from me because I believe and advocate a 'dangerous doctrine'! Even the minister refuses to stay over night with my old father and mother, because I have them reading and sympathizing with your 'dangerous doctrine.'" There is more of the same kind, but let this suffice.

Some things have to go to seed before you see what their real nature is. What we see in the foregoing is only the same spirit, a little further ripened because of favorable environment, that we see manifested in other forms and in other places where contact with fresh thought and a different spirit has exercised a restraining influence. If there be an uglier thing in God's fair universe than a religious Pharisee, whose conception of his own infallibility is equaled only by his ignorance, and in whose breast the milk of human kindness has soured into religious vinegar, we do not know what it is. This invalid young man, in the providence of God, has got a vision of higher and purer and sweeter things, and has been brought into fellowship and sympathy with a higher range of ideas and a nobler class of spirits, and his own people ostracize him just as the Pharisees of old persecuted and put to death the Son of God! We do well to send missionaries to lands beyond the sea, but we ought not to neglect such mission fields as this herein described, where our people dwell in darkness which only the sunlight which shines from the face of Jesus Christ can dispel. This young man expresses a noble aspiration and at the same time indicates a way by which mission work may be done in such sections, when he says: "Would to God that I had strong arms and good health, that I might go to some good Bible college, prepare myself, and spend my life teaching such people the precious calling and the needs of our day." We have noble men and noble churches in Alabama, and other southern states, who ought to see to it that young men with such aspirations and such environment should have the opportunity to prepare themselves for such a work.

To come down from the cool breezes which fan the heights in Garrison Park, on Lake Michigan, into the torrid zone just as a hot wave is passing over St. Louis is something akin to the preliminary stages of a Turkish bath, but this experience seems to form the necessary connecting link between the Christian-Evangelist contingent sojourning by the lakeside and the Christian-Evangelist Special whose headlight will soon be turned towards the Pacific slope. It ought to be worth some perspiration and the sacrifice of certain comforts to be enjoyed on the lake shore, to enjoy such a company of pilgrims traveling so great a distance on so important an errand. This people are going west, not to grow up with the country, but to see the country that has grown up and to help it, if possible, to grow better. There is a likelihood, of course, that some who go to the Golden State to attend this convention may be so enamored of its climatic and scenic attractions as to decide to make that state their future home. But already Missouri, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and other more westerly states have their representatives in California and there will be many happy reunions of old friends and renewings of old friendships between those who have remained at the old home and those who have followed the star of empire westward, beyond the Rockies and the Sierras to the Pacific slope. That will no doubt be one of the pleasant features of the first national convention of the Disciples of Christ on the western coast. These lines are written in St. Louis, while we are tarrying for the Special.

Apropos of the convention, we had a call to-day from two of our foreign missionaries, a husband and wife, who have laid their lives upon the altar of Christ's service in foreign lands and who are now having a little breathing space in their native land. The time approaches for their return to their distant fields of toil, and a great problem confronts them: What shall they do with the children? They are getting too old to be kept out of school longer and they must remain here somewhere, in somebody's care, while the parents cross the ocean to do the work to which they have consecrated their lives. Others of our missionaries have written us within the last few weeks whose hearts are burdened with the same problem. It has set us to thinking, or rather has revived a subject over which we have pondered somewhat in the past. We are now facing some new mission problems. Hitherto this question of homes for our returned missionaries during their furloughs and homes for the children of our missionaries where they may be trained and educated, has received little attention because we had not yet reached that stage in our missionary development. But we are now face to face with these questions and we cannot and must not evade them. It is too important a problem to be committed wholly to the Executive Committee of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. The San Francisco convention ought to take some action looking to a thorough investigation of this question of the care of our returned missionaries and their families.

We are persuaded that there is no subject that lies nearer the hearts of our brothers and sisters than the proper care of our foreign missionaries during their furloughs at home, and of their children. This duty is laid upon us by the most sacred and tender obligations. We have called these men and women to leave their homes and the comforts of our Christian civilization to live and work in far-away lands among strange peoples and incurring dangers and bearing burdens of which many of us know little, and when they come back to us, often with broken health and very limited resources, to recuperate their strength and better prepare themselves for their work, they are entitled not only to our Christian love as they visit our churches and homes, but to a home, or homes, prepared for them where, without expense to themselves for rent or fitting up for housekeeping, they may live comfortably with freedom from financial anxiety and sacrifices which others of us do not care to make. And then that conflict which comes up in the minds of the missionaries who have children, between their sense of obligation to educate and train their children and the obligation to do the work to which they have dedicated themselves—that ought to be solved through some provision by which their children can be cared for and educated while they are doing the work for which they have fitted themselves. So we feel, and so we believe this great brotherhood feels, concerning these foreign missionaries, and so we have expressed these sentiments on the eve of starting west to the San Francisco convention. We would welcome expressions of others who feel the same way on this subject, and who have something to contribute toward the practical solution of the problems mentioned.

Her Majesty the Cook

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

We are celebrating the silver jubilee of our cook. The servant problem appears from this elevation a very simple one. Most people wonder that a cook can be kept for twenty-five years. One suburbanite says to another: "Subbub's house was all lighted up last night." "Yes," replies the other, "they were celebrating a silver jubilee." "Nonsense! They haven't been married twenty-five years." "No, but they have had one cook for twenty-five days!" For centuries the servant problem has been the white woman's burden. One writes of London in 1730: "As to the common and menial servants, they have great wages, are well kept and clothed, but notwithstanding, the plague of almost every house in town. They form themselves into societies, or rather confederacies, contributing to the maintenance of each other when out of place, and if any of them can not manage the family where they are entertained as they please, immediately they give notice they will be gone. There is no speaking to them, they are above conviction." So it appears our fathers had their trials in this regard. This is a photograph two hundred years old, of the wars of the twentieth century American housekeeper. Comfort yourself with the thought suggested by this historic fact: Servant problems there will be as long as there are servants. Let not the modern woman be discouraged. It is her burden.

So vital is this question, two women can not get together anywhere without discussing it. It is as omnipresent as the weather. Recently, a volume entitled, "Wanted—a Cook," has been published and is having a run like an historical or up-to-date dime novel. It is simply a recital of the woes of a young couple starting out to make a home. She reads Latin authors in the original text. He writes a book on "Lives of Great Men." These incompetents set up in a flat and are victimized by all the types of incapable servants known to the domestic world. The moral is that man is more pleased with a good dinner on the table than a wife who speaks the tongues of Homer and Virgil.

The funny man has taken up the matter and plays upon it from all standpoints. The teacher is represented as saying, "Now, Johnny, if your mother engaged two cooks on Monday, three on Tuesday, and four on Wednesday, how many would she have?" "None," answers Johnny. Haydn is expounding the principles of harmony: "Above all don't object to the cook staying out until 3 a. m., or feeding the policeman." Following these directions the great musician showed how life could be one grand sweet song. The city man says to the suburbanite: "You look particularly happy to-day." "I am. I've just succeeded in getting our leading lady to sign for another season." "I didn't know you were in the theatrical business." "I'm not. I refer to our cook." Draco was propounding the cause of law. "When you have laws," he explained, "you have policemen, and when you have cops, you can keep the cook." Seeing the true inwardness for the first time, they eagerly begged him to pass some more. "George," says the father sternly, "do you speak impudently to your mother?" "I only said to her what I said to the cook," answers George humbly. "To the cook," roared his father, "that's still worse!" Wordsworth has just dashed off "We Are Seven." "That may do very well for poetry," he confided, "but the real truth was that the cook wouldn't stand so many in the family." Feeling the poet's mission was to cheer, he withheld this blighting information from the public. Gundulphus, bishop of Rochester, was building the Tower of London. "I think," he explained, "it will be a good way to keep the cook in." Subsequent occupation by other members of royalty proved his theory to be correct.

So her majesty is treated by the press. All the old saws are applied to her. The pan is mightier than the sword. Money makes the cook go. A man's house is a cook's mansion. A commuter and his cook are soon parted. Cooks never strike twice in the same place. Wives rush in where cooks fear to tread. A cook in the country is worth two in the intelligence office. Distance does not lend enchantment to the cook. And so it goes. Prizes are now offered by employment agencies to encourage clients to give satisfaction to employers—a gold watch to any servant engaged who remains in the same situation five years; a silver watch to any girl who keeps her place for two years; and a brooch to those who have served in the same house for one year. So serious has the problem become in army circles that official orders were issued not long since at one post, Fort Sam Houston, in Texas, setting forth the fact that, owing to the difficulties experienced, the following regulations will be strictly enforced: "Any servant discharged by any officer in this post will not thereafter be allowed on the reservation." "Any servant who leaves an officer will not be employed by any officer within six months without the written consent of the officer for whom she last worked." "Any officer discharging a servant will report the name to the adjutant so that it may be placed upon a list at the adjutant's office, and servants whose names are on the list will not be permitted in the post." So even the strong arm of the United States army has to be invoked.

Now, what's the trouble? Faults no doubt on both sides. Most of all the service is not made honorable. Application of the golden rule in the kitchen would settle most of the difficulties the women are discussing on all occasions. To cite another live publication, "The Expert Maid Servant" is a little volume for mistress and maid to read and ponder, and inwardly digest. First, directions are given for a clear understanding between employer and employed, then for mutual concessions, then for the rights of both parties to the contract. There are two sides to this question and every housekeeper must learn this sooner or later. A man called on a neighbor, complaining that his servants would not stay with him, and was told by the other that he had a door which creaked. "No one liked to open it till I oiled it, and now it is used every day. You, my friend, must oil yourself a little. When your servants do well, praise them; when they make mistakes, don't grumble at them."

How beautiful often is this relation between mistress and maid, between master and servant! All the pallbearers at the funeral of Jessica Ormond, an old colored mammy of Atlanta, Ga., who died recently, were white men, who had known her when she was a slave. Several of them had been nursed by her in infancy. Here is a death notice in a Washington paper: "Suddenly on Wednesday, March 2, at 1920 Sunderland place, the home of her employer, to whom she had given faithful and loving service for twenty years, Fanny Monday Bernard, aged forty-eight years." What do these things mean? Read the exquisite little epistle of Paul to Philemon, if you would see how Christianity deals with social problems. "As a brother!"

Our silver jubilee is very simply kept. We raised the cook's wages and took her down to the seaside. She would not be contented if she dropped the skillet for a day and so we let her keep right on in the exercise of her art. Her contribution to the quality of the sermons during this quarter of a century and her ministry to the comfort of the preachers of the gospel who have honored the parsonage with their presence cannot be fully measured. The Madonna of the frying pan and the broom has a place in the world's history more honorable than that of many whose names are heralded far and wide, and may receive hereafter the highest encomium, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

"A servant with this clause
  Makes drugery divine;
Who sweeps a room as for thy laws,
  Makes that and the action fine."

The Personality of the Preacher*

By W. F. Richardson

The minister of the gospel is both a preacher and a teacher. In the exercise of both functions his personality is vital. "Preaching," says Phillips Brooks, "is the communicating of truth by man to men." We may, perhaps, add to this definition the limiting clause, "for the purpose of influencing the life to righteousness," since there might be much truth imparted that would not be preaching. The aim of the minister of the gospel is not only to impart truth, but to "instruct" men, or "build up" character in them. The true teacher seeks to "inform" his pupils, or form in them the truth he imparts. The minister of Jesus Christ would so teach the truth of the gospel as to form within his converts "Christ, the hope of glory." The effect of his message, therefore, will depend largely upon his own character, for character only can impart character. "The man behind the gun" determines its effectiveness. "It makes a great difference in the force of a sentence whether a man be behind it or no," says Emerson. Words are winged when they come from a true heart; but they often fall helpless because they start from the lips. "What you are speaks so loud that I cannot hear what you say," is another tribute to sincerity and personality from the Concord philosopher. We instinctively personify qualities of character, such as avarice, kindness, egotism and beauty; so that when they are mentioned in our hearing, we at once think of individuals who embody them. A little boy, being asked one day, "Who is that man?" replied indignantly, "That ain't a man, that's a preacher!" He meant it as a testimony to the man of God whose holy ministry and life, as they presented themselves to his young heart, separated him from all ordinary men, in a class of his own. Happy that servant of Christ of whom it may truly be said, as of the ancient one in Chaucer's line,

"First he wrought, and afterwards he taught."

There are four stages in the acquirement of truth. Jesus says, to the Jews who believed on him, "You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He said to Nicodemus, "He that doeth the truth cometh to the light," a gentle rebuke of the ruler's nocturnal visit. Paul says to the Thessalonians that there are some who receive not the love of the truth, that they might be saved; and because of this lack of spiritual ardor, become the victims of false teachers. Finally, Jesus says of himself, "I am the truth." Knowing, doing, loving and becoming the truth is the royal road to life and holiness. Knowing the truth gives freedom; doing the truth gives strength; loving the truth gives enthusiasm, and being the truth is character, which is the essential factor of personality. And this, after all, is the end of all knowing, doing and loving. We so often say, "If I were so and so, I would do this or that." The divine way is to do that we may become. The Master says, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you, that you may become the children of your Father who is in heaven." Paul exhorts the disciples in Philippi to "do all things without murmurings and disputings, that ye may become the children of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked generation." All beauty is but truth embodied, or incarnate. "True features make the beauty of a face; true proportions, the beauty of architecture; true measures, the beauty of harmony and music." When Paul speaks of "the truth as it is in Jesus," he uses no unmeaning phrase. Truth in Jesus is nobler than truth out of Jesus, because he is its perfect embodiment, and therefore its source. He is the Sun of righteousness. All that prophets, apostles and saints can do is to reflect his rays, as the moon sheds from her pale bosom upon the earth a portion of the glory that she receives from the god of day. It is man's glory, as it ought to be his delight, that he can reflect upon the world the light of life, as he receives it from Jesus Christ.

"Our little systems have their day,
They have their day, and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of thee,
And thou, O Lord, art more than they."

It has been said that "there are two things worth living for, to write what is worthy of being read, and to do what is worthy of being written." Of these two noble things the latter is the better. A coward may describe a brave action; but only a hero can perform it. A self-seeker may tell the story of an unselfish deed, and a libertine may extol purity; while the hero, philanthropist and saint may lack the power to narrate the life they find it easy to live. It is one of the strange paradoxes of our humanity that many who are wise in word, or even in thought, may be foolish in action; and the writer of noble maxims may lead an ignoble life. Never was this fact more graphically stated than in Pope's famous line on the philosopher Bacon, whom he described as—

"The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind."

It is cause for rejoicing that the formation of a noble personality is possible to every man. Few can describe, but all can do. And the doing is the chief thing, after all. Every man can be greater as the doer of noble deeds than any man can be as a delineator of them. We cannot all paint Madonnas, carve heroes, write epics, compose symphonies, build cathedrals; but we can do that which is nobler than them all, we can be true to self, our fellow men, and to God. Upon the marble of the soul we may with the chisel of daily fidelity to truth cut the image that shall endure when the Parian marble shall have melted in the fires of the last great day of the Lord. Yes, to be is nobler than to describe. Character is far nobler than genius. In his beautiful idyl of motherhood, Mary Ogilvie, Mr. Barrie has portrayed a picture that stirs the heart and fills the eyes with tears. But his work of art is not so beautiful as the sweet, quaint little Scotch mother whose gentle spirit was the sunlight of her son's fireside, and the fountain of his spiritual power.

It is the glory of our Protestantism that it makes character supreme. Roman Catholicism exalts organization, ceremony and authority above the individual. To have a great church, spreading its branches over the whole earth and dominating every nation, is her ambition. The spirit of Protestantism looks to the salvation and sanctification of the individual soul, and through that channel to the regeneration of the world. Rome makes much of the divisions of Protestantism, and sneers at the many small sects that struggle for a place in the column of religious forces; and the sight is indeed far from gratifying. But even these divisions, since they have arisen in the struggle for spiritual freedom, are infinitely better than uniformity secured at the expense of life. As Dr. Abbott has said, "It is better to have great men and little churches than a great church and little men." Christ would have manhood large, even though it must break the bounds of uniformity to become so.

Not only is personality the supreme factor in the worth of the preacher, as in other men, but it is the one which brings success. There is no abiding fruit on the tree whose life is not full and unobstructed. Sincerity is primary in any true endeavor. The origin of our word "sincere," is instructive. A sculptor was cutting the faces of the gods on the facade of a temple in Rome, when a careless slip of his chisel marred the features of Jupiter, and ruined the choicest block of marble in the temple. To replace it would cost much, while the knowledge of his awkwardness would bring reproach from his fellow artists. So he skillfully filled in the broken space with white wax, and it remained unnoticed for a time. But soon the weather and atmosphere caused the wax to crumble and fall away, and the blemish was discovered. He was severely punished, and a law enacted that in future all contracts for public buildings should contain the clause, "sine cera," without wax. No pretense can hide dishonesty, no profession take the place of practice. The true artist must be what he would describe, if he would do the best possible to his powers. Milton said that the poet must himself be a poem. Cicero said that the orator must first of all be a good man. "If you would create something, you must be something," said Goethe. Above all must this be so with the preacher, whose canvas is life, and whose pigments and brushes are thoughts, affections and deeds.

*Read before the Ministers' Alliance of Kansas City and vicinity, and published by request.

If we shall study the work of the world's greatest artists, we will discover that their best work is always done in their best hours, when the soul has risen to its noblest heights of ambition and the heart has welcomed its purest and most unselfish thoughts. Genius has reached its supreme level, perhaps, in the poet, and nowhere else is this principle more completely demonstrated. If we look at Robert Burns, the peasant poet of Scotland, we see that there were two Burnses, one of the tavern and the brothel, the other of the field and fireside. That poor, wavering heart was at times the abode of all the demons of lust, and at other times the temple of the living God, where all good angels delighted to tarry. We need but to read his poetry to discern when he was under the influence of good and of evil. His "Lines to the Big-Bellied Bottle," and "Address to the De'il" and others whose suggestions are too vile to warrant their mention, could not have come from his pen when his soul was feeding on pure and chaste thoughts. But when we read his "Lines to a Mountain Daisy," his "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton," and, above all, that classic of the fireside, "The Cotter's Saturday Night," we know that then the spirit of the Highland poet had risen to the level of communion with the best in human nature, and even with the divine. Burns was at his best in writing only when he was at his best in living.

Lord Byron is even a more conspicuous example of the power of personality upon genius. The reader of Don Juan, if one cares to read so disgusting a production, finds his wonder constantly increasing, that so great a poet could write such wretched verse. Its fantastic rhymes, that jingle like the rattle of the court fool, and serve but as a frame for his lewd pictures of the most shameless sort, are not poetry at all. While here and there a faint gleam of poetic thought is seen, the whole is a mere performance, not a poem, and dishonors the very name of the sacred muse. When, however, Byron turns in sick disappointment from his wasted powers, and seeks to sing the nobler song that has not quite ceased to echo through his soul, he is indeed a poet, and of the highest rank. In his "Hebrew Melodies" he reaches the sublime in sacred song. Nothing can be more plaintive than the lament of "Jephthah's Daughter," and nothing more stirring to the heart of the believer in a God who cares for his own than "The Destruction of Sennacherib." Don Juan is at best but verse, the latter are poetry. It is to be deplored that the nobler ideals of human conduct were but sentiments in so many of the great geniuses of earth, rather than a prevailing and reigning power. For mere sentiment cannot produce character. Truth must be the very fabric of the life. "Sentiment approved the preaching of righteousness in Jerusalem on Sunday, and crucificed the doer of righteousness on Friday." It is a sad commentary on the weakness of mere sentiment that the writer of the twenty-third Psalm could have become the seducer of Bathsheba and the murderer of her husband, and such facts may well put us, my brethren, on our guard. To admire the good is not enough, and to eulogize truth will make no man righteous. What one is will determine largely the effect of what he says. And no mere graces of demeanor or courtesy of manner will take the place of genuine goodness of heart and sincerity of life.

Nor does the power of a preacher's ministry depend chiefly on the length of his life, or the circumstances amid which he lives it. Not the extent, but the content of the life tells; not the quantity of time he has consumed in existing, but the ideals he has cherished, and the degree of consecration he has reached. There is a man in Kansas City who owns a little piece of ground 50 by 150 feet in size. It is of trifling extent, compared with the broad acres of the farmer, yet it is more valuable by far than any farm in the county. Because, while he owns but 50 feet in width, and 150 in length, he owns it for 4,000 miles downward, and upward to the skies. So he digs deep and lays his foundation, and then piles story on story, till he completes his "skyscraper," and enjoys an ample income from its rentals. Every life, though brief in duration and narrow in opportunity, may lay deep the foundation of noble purpose, and build high the structure of holy aspiration. Millais took a square yard of canvas and some pigments, and made of them "The Angelus," for which was received a fortune in gold, and undying fame for the artist. Yet canvas and pigments could never make a great picture. Millais put himself into his picture, or it never would have appealed to the universal heart, and become, as it has, a stimulus to worship for every sincere beholder of its beautiful yet simple representation of humble life lived in the full consciousness of the presence of God. He is the true artist, whether in colors, in marble or in words, who can put himself into his work. It is not a figure of speech when we say in the picture gallery, "This is a Rembrandt, this a Rubens, this a Titian," etc., for every work of art is a portion of the artist visibly embodied in his work. As men who have studied the masters are able to pick out the work of each one by certain personal qualities that manifest themselves, doubtless unconsciously to the artist, so does the personality of the teacher of truth make itself seen by the thoughtful hearer. We read that at one period in the life of the apostle Peter his shadow falling upon the sick healed them. One's personality is his spiritual shadow, and if it be cast from his walking in the bright light of the Bitter, Black Bile and how Right Food Corrects It.

Biliousness, from incorrect food, opens the way for an outfit of derangements of not only the body but the mind as well.

The world is a dark or gloomy place to the victim, whether millionaire or mendicant.

The wife of the head of a great insurance office in an Eastern city, was cured, completely, of this wretched affliction by the use of Grape-Nuts. She says:

"For years I was a constant sufferer from biliousness and extreme constipation and I suffered from the most dreadful headaches once a week, which sometimes lasted 3 or 4 days at a time. Grape-Nuts food came to my notice about 5 years ago. I liked it from the first and began to use it because I liked it, without any thought that it might help my health. To my surprise I noted that after a short time all my ailments began to decrease, and they gradually but surely disappeared. I am now, and have been for years, completely free from them and enjoy perfect health.

"Every one in my house now eats Grape-Nuts regularly, even my little two-year-old girl likes it with her Postum Coffee (another thing we are never without) and prefers it to any other cereal. It pulled her through a difficult period of teething during the hot weather—she never refused Grape-Nuts when other food could not tempt her to eat. It is the first food I intend to give to my baby boy when I wean him.

"My husband eats more Grape-Nuts food at every meal than of any other one dish. He says it never palls on him, and he finds that it regulates his bowels perfectly." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Read the little book "The Road to Wellville" in each pkg.

Sun of righteousness, it will have power to heal the souls that fall beneath its influence. We may be unconscious that the shadow exists, and that it follows us everywhere, but it will be ever where we are, and never without its influence. Moses, when he came down from the mount, did not know that his face was radiant with streams of divine glory, till Israel besought him to put a veil over his face; but he did know that he had been communing with God in Horeb, and that his soul was bathed in the light of the heavenly throne. Stephen perhaps was unaware that his face shone as the face of an angel, when he stood before his enemies; but he certainly knew that the Lord had been with him, shedding the light of his presence upon his faithful heart. We ought to so live that we may be conscious of God's presence and approval, though we may be ignorant of the marvelous effects upon others of our example and teaching. When Wang, a noted Chinese convert to Christianity, died recently, his friends said, as they stood about his body, "There was no difference between him and the Book." The people to whom Dr. A. J. Gordon ministered for a score of years as pastor bore of him this rare testimony: "We know what the life of God in Christ is, for we have seen it exhibited for many years in the life of our beloved pastor." With such a personality behind it, no wonder that his message was irresistible. Such instances confirm the statement that "the life of a pious minister is visible rhetoric." Would that such graces adorned all our sermons. Then would they become indeed messages from the King, whose power could not be resisted by the hearts of men.

In all this, my brethren, Christ is the perfect example for the preacher, and the absolute proof of my theme. His teaching and life were one, and became by their perfect union both light and power for men. "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." By his heavenly personality he has forever proven the reality of the divine life. As some strange bird, pausing in its flight, proves to the astonished observer the reality and nature of its distant home, so in the earthly life of the son of God we see the proof that "there is a sphere where his life is the rule, where his dialect is the language of the country, and his the habit of living." In the words of Lyman Abbott, "As in the spring the first lily of the season puts its white head above the ground, then drops its head that it may whisper to its seed sisters, saying to them: Come, come, this is what you were meant to be! so into the darkness of a pagan night, and into the vileness of a wholly earthly history, came the one transcendent, pure, divine figure, standing for those few short years upon the earth, showing what is truly God by showing what is truly man when God is in him, and calling out to us, still in the earthiness, still in the darkness, and saying to us: Come! this is what you were meant to be, this is what God is trying to make you, this is what your aspirations mean. You are sons of God; the law of his nature is the law of your nature; and working with him and letting him work with you, you shall come out into the sunlight of God's own love and become the sharer of his own life."

Does not this thought fill us with courage and joy, my brethren? If the truth we teach so imperfectly, because of our limitations of mind and heart, can be so wonderfully enforced by the power of that personal character which is possible to the humblest of us all, may we not go forth to the work of preaching the gospel with renewed strength and delight, realizing that we are workers together with God, and that his wisdom will supplement our simplicity, his power our weakness, and his grace our folly and sinfulness, if with sincerity we seek to be the truth we are trying to proclaim. For in the words of Phillips Brooks, "All heaven is working for us if we will, as the little child digs his well in the seashore sand, and then the great ocean comes up and fills it for him." Let us dig our wells in the shifting sands of human hearts, believing that he who is the Way and the Truth and the Life will fill them with the living waters of his saving love.

Modern Paulites.

By Charles B. Sala.

There is a bit of inconsistency existing among many of the professed followers of our Master, who claim to wear no other name than his and follow no creed but Christ. And these "many" are not a few in most churches. To tell them that they are more unscriptural in their practices than is the most pronounced sectarian would be indignantly resented. There are quite a large number of people in the church who think that our plea of "back to the New Testament faith and practices" goes only as far as baptism and the name by which they are called. It is a great mistake. There is New Testament "truth," as demonstrated in the Ananias and Sapphira incident. There is New Testament "love" told about in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. There is New Testament "honesty" seen in Zacchæus as a result of his conversion. There is New Testament "giving" that Jesus called attention to as the widow put her mite into the Lord's treasury. There are New Testament "missions," as can be learned from Paul's commendation of the Philippians. But the particularly unscriptural class is the one which goes up to the house of the Lord because the preacher is liked or rather more generally stay away from God's services because the preacher is not liked. If there is a more aggravated type of sectarianism it has not yet been hatched. And it is my belief that when Paul was taking the Corinthians to task about being Paulites and Apolloites that he had just such a crowd in mind. When the roll is called down here how many are found as faithfully, persistently and liberally supporting the work of the church when a minister is on hand they don't just fancy as when their "ideal" or maybe their "soothsayer" is in the pulpit? It is also one of the very noticeable features of the Lord's day service that when the preacher is absent from the pulpit most of the brethren, too, are absent from the Lord's table. If that isn't "preacheriteism" or "sermoniteism" as serious as what Paul condemned then there is a mistake somewhere. Did the preacher die for you? Was the sermon crucified for you? Is the table spread "in remembrance of me," or the preacher? One might be excused if he didn't love the preacher enough to be present, but that supper is not to show forth his departure till he come again. True it is that a likable pastor or leader is an inspiration to better work, yet the true disciple is so deeply interested and actively en-

EVER TREAT YOU SO?

Coffee Acts the Jonah and Will Come up

A clergyman who pursues his noble calling in a country parish in Iowa, tells of his coffee experience:

"My wife and I used coffee regularly for breakfast, frequently for dinner, and occasionally for supper—always the very best quality—package coffee never could find a place on our table.

"In the spring of 1896 my wife was taken with violent vomiting which we had great difficulty in stopping.

"It seemed to come from coffee drinking but we could not decide.

"In the following July, however, she was attacked a second time by the vomiting. I was away from home filling an appointment, at the time, and on my return I found her very low; she had literally vomited herself almost to death, and it took some days to quiet the trouble and restore her stomach.

"I had also experienced the same trouble, but not so violently, and had relieved it, each time, by a resort to medicine.

"My wife's second attack satisfied me that the use of coffee was at the bottom of our troubles, and so we stopped it forthwith and took on Postum Food Coffee. The old symptoms of disease disappeared and during the 9 years that we have been using Postum instead of coffee we have never had a recurrence of the vomiting. We never weary of Postum, to which we know we owe our good health. This is a simple statement of facts." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

As Seen From the Rockies

By B. B. Tyler

The international Epworth League convention concluded its most successful meeting in Denver Lord's day, July 9. The attendance was large. There were 10,000 delegates present. The number of persons who came to Denver on account of this convention brought the attendance up to probably 20,000 persons. The meetings were held in Trinity Methodist church, in the Central Presbyterian church and in the coliseum, the combined seating capacity of which is about 8,000. These buildings were filled at each session. There were times when hundreds of people were turned away because of lack of room. Bishops were present galore. Many of the strongest, and best known, preachers in the Methodist church were present as active participants in the proceedings. The churches of all denominations were placed at the disposal of the Epworthians. Some of the most important meetings were held in the Central Christian. Two strong gospel sermons were delivered in the South Broadway church by delegates to the convention—the Rev. W. C. Lovett, of Atlanta, Ga., and the Rev. Joshua Stansfield, Indianapolis, Ind. The sermons were thoughtful, original, pertinent, practical. Both sermons were expository. The evening discourse was a happy combination of the evangelistic and expository. The discourse in the morning was such a sermon as ought to be delivered as a preparation for waiting at the table of the Lord. The world moves and Methodism keeps step with the advance. The Methodism of to-day is better than was the Methodism of thirty or forty years ago. It is more intelligent. It understands the Christ better and represents him more correctly. The key thought of this Epworth League convention was evangelization. It was prominent in the addresses and discussions. The books, on the literature tables, were devoted almost wholly to the work of world-wide evangelization.

The Epworth League is the Christian Endeavor of Methodism. Its growth has been rapid. This movement began in Cleveland, O., May 15, 1889. The local societies are called chapters. In the Methodist Episcopal church there were, last November, 21,873 chapters, and in the Methodist Episcopal church, south, there were, at the same time, 3,569 chapters. There were, seven months ago, 2,000,000 members of the league in the Methodist Episcopal church, and in the Methodist Episcopal church, south, there were 123,325. In the convention of which I am writing there were represented, besides the branches of Methodism named in this connection, the Canadian Methodist church and the African Methodist Episcopal church. Statistics of the Canadian and African churches are not at hand as I write. Sufficient has been said to show that the numerical increase of the Epworth League has been rapid.

The motto of this organization is "Look up, lift up." The declared object of the Epworth League is to "promote intelligent and loyal piety in the young members and friends of the church; to aid them in the attainment of purity of heart and constant growth in grace, and to train them in works of mercy and help." The following pledge is required of its members:

"I will earnestly seek for myself, and do what I can to help others to attain, the highest New Testament standard of experience and life. I will abstain from all forms of worldly amusement forbidden by the discipline of the Methodist Episcopal church, and I will attend, as far as possible, the religious meetings of the chapter and the church, and take some active part in them."

Where Methodism is known the Epworth League has gone. It not only exists in the United States, Canada, England, western Europe and Australia, but there are chapters in India, Mexico, South America, China, Japan and Hawaii. The tendency of the league is to produce harmony and unity in the great Methodist family. This is well. It is one of the ways in which to ultimately bring about Christian union. It is a matter of prime importance that domestic infelicities, ecclesiastical, shall be settled. The trend of the Epworth League is to bring peace, harmony, unity, union to the divided Methodist family. There is a tendency much larger than this, as is seen in the fact that the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League prayer-meeting topics are the same. For the month of July the topics are: "The Making of a Christian," "The Indwelling Christ," "The Message of the Flowers," "Preparing for Our Heavenly Home," and "Missions in Japan." The Epworth League changes "Missions in Japan" to "Missions in Eastern Asia."

The church of to-day is better than was the church of yesterday. The church of to-morrow will be better than is the church of to-day. Our young people are trained for Christian service as young people were never before trained. The outlook is radiant. Evangelize is the dominant note in all these organizations. The motto, or watchword, of the great international Sunday-school convention in Toronto, June 23-27, was, "Winning a Generation." The day dawns. The darkness is disappearing. Every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess that Jesus is the Lord.

gaged in doing the work he ever welcomes the Master to give him that the advent of a poor speaker or a brilliant orator in the pulpit, or none at all, is scarcely noticeable on the results of his labors. Nor has the "hot" or "inclement" weather a paralyzing effect on his Christian duties. These kinds of Christians are the rock against which the storms and waves of opposition, criticism and religious spasms dash up and are broken while the preacherite pebble is tumbled about on the beach. Let us be Christians, preacher or no preacher, like him or not like him, sermon or no sermon, sunshine or sleet, ruling or being ruled, in the pew beside a hypocrite or surrounded by saints, at home or visiting, everywhere, all the time.

Y. M. C. A. Work in Manchuria

By Carme Hostetter Smyser

Soon after the Russo-Japan war was declared (Feb. 8, 1904,) the Christians of Japan united in asking permission to send out chaplains with the army, but somehow no definite answer was given to the request. They were compelled to stand by and see Shinto and Buddhist priests follow in the procession of outgoing generals and soldiers.

Mr. Ochiai, Y. M. C. A. Field Secretary in the Japanese Army.

However, in the following August there was deep rejoicing in the hearts of all Christians in Japan when news was received that the Japanese government had given written orders to the Y. M. C. A. to open work at Antung and Yingkow (later at Hojo and Dalny also) and granting free transportation of baggage and providing buildings for the Association work.

The equipment consists of Bibles, hymnals, books of history and biography (translated into Japanese), magazines, newspapers, pictures, games for amusement, post cards, writing material, barbers' outfit, gramaphone, etc. Tea is served to the men visiting the Association rooms, Bibles are distributed, and the gospel preached. Concerts with the gramaphone are held both at the rooms and in the hospitals.

There are at present two foreign (Messrs. Hibbard and Gleason) and nine Japanese Association secretaries in Manchuria. These secretaries are kept busy from morning till night visiting the wounded men in the hospitals, cheering them with words of comfort, giving them books to read, and writing messages home for those who are too badly disabled to do their own writing. Then there is daily preaching at the Association tents, and concerts. Mr. Hibbard reports meetings where both tent and surrounding yard were so closely packed that it was necessary to preach awhile inside and alternately on the outside. The men often ask for Bibles. They find that the Bible words do give real cheer and comfort.

Mr. Ochiai and Mr. Kawasumi, two preachers from Sendai, deserve special mention for the fine work they are doing in Manchuria. Sometimes these men walk almost steadily for fifteen or sixteen hours, from one point to the other; upon reaching their destination they proceed at once to visit the wounded, telling the blessed message of salvation and comforting the men in any way they can.

These secretaries are always kindly received by generals and soldiers. It is a glorious work well deserving your serious reflections, your prayers, and your encouragement.

The Marion, Ind., Tent Campaign

From the Evangelists' Standpoint.

Sunday night, July 30, brought to a close the tent campaign conducted by the Tabernacle and Central Christian churches of Marion, Indiana, and the results were most gratifying to the churches and to the citizens generally; yet it was the opinion of the evangelists that the meeting was only fairly begun. Two weeks more might have done great things in the way of additions to the church. The brotherhood cannot realize the extent of this victory until they know the condition of the field. The Christian church was comparatively weak in Marion; in fact more so than in any other city of its size in the state. Our churches had suffered from internal strifes and were overshadowed by the larger denominational churches. It was a tremendous undertaking for so few members to divide themselves into three sections and attempt to run three large tent meetings in the city at the same time. But W. S. Buchanan, pastor of the Tabernacle church, and the originator of this campaign, is in the habit of undertaking great things for God, and had succeeded in inspiring the members of both congregations with the idea of a forward movement. The campaign was wisely and prayerfully planned, and the enterprise was undertaken with a determination and confident expectation seldom seen. Bro. Merritt Owen, the new pastor of the Central church, worked faithfully during the campaign, but was at a disadvantage by being comparatively a stranger at the opening of the meetings. He is rapidly growing in favor with the people of Marion.

The evangelists and singers were distributed as follows: At the south tent, T. J. Legg, state evangelist of Indiana, with Edward McKinney as singer and helper; west tent, J. M. Elam, evangelist, and P. A. Parsons as singer and helper; central tent, R. H. Fife, evangelist and H. H. Saunders as singer and helper. Every morning at nine o'clock the evangelistic force and pastors met for consultation and prayer. The evangelists were instructed by the executive committee to fully present the teachings of the church of Christ. They said, "Preach the gospel every day, and make the people understand our plea for New Testament Christianity, whether you have a single addition or not." I am pleased to say that this order was faithfully obeyed, and every evangelist made his sermons sparkle with some phase of New Testament truth.

The first two weeks of the campaign were greatly interrupted by rainy weather, and we had all kinds of counter attractions to meet, such as the 4th of July celebration, a circus, a merry-go-round, special attractions at the park and the operas running at full blast. The big, central tent was erected right in between two opera houses, each only a square away. Besides this our religious neighbors seemed to catch the inspiration of our meetings, and concluded that it would be to their interest to start meetings of their own, and erected some of their tents only one or two squares from ours, so that we could be sure to know that they were doing the best they could to help our meetings along. From two to four such meetings were in progress the entire month.

In addition to many matters of detail to be looked after, the evangelists were instructed to look especially after four points, in the order named, as follows: First, popularize our plea for New Testament Christianity among the masses; second, encourage the unity and good fellowship among our own brethren; third, extend our church into new territory in the city; fourth, and last, "get additions." The first three were accomplished in a glorious manner, and we closed with 130 additions, as follows: 56 at the central tent, 48 at the west side and 26 at the south tent. Nearly all of these were grown people, and over 100 were baptized. One-half of the entire number came in the last week of the meetings, and fifteen the last day.

We received every courtesy from the daily press and citizens that we could expect, and a conservative estimate of the total attendance at these meetings is 20,000. The Central church did the wise thing in deciding to move its building several squares farther west so as to be in easy access to that rapidly growing residence district, and a new congregation was organized in South Marion.

There was no clap trap sensationalism whatever in the meetings. They were all conducted on such a high plane that they met with universal approval, and brought forth the heartiest editorial congratulations from the press of the city. As an indication of the prestige the Christian church now has in Marion, a leading banker said to Brother Buchanan, as he handed him a liberal contribution for the campaign fund, "Hereafter the Christian church of Marion can accomplish whatever it undertakes. Any church that can undertake and successfully carry out such an enterprise as this deserves universal respect, and, if you need any more money for this campaign, call on me again." I venture the prediction that he will have the satisfaction of being called upon again before many months; for if W. S. Buchanan remains there, we may expect to hear of great things in the way of church buildings in a short time.

I cannot speak in too complimentary a way of the two faithful pastors and their people, especially the executive committee, for their co-operation, zeal and stick-to-itiveness. They went through even the most perilous times without flinching or wanting to turn back. Does the reader wonder that we gained the victory? Even during the first two weeks of continuous rainy weather, when it looked so dark for the finances of the campaign, if there was a single murmur, it never reached the ears of the evangelists.

Our religious papers also contributed largely to the success of the campaign by their favorable notices and sending copies of the papers for free distribution. The evangelists tried to induce every family to subscribe for one or the other of these papers.

I cannot close this report without expressing my gratitude in a public way to my brother evangelists for their courtesies to me and faithfulness to their posts of duty. I never offered a suggestion or made a request that they did not try to carry out, and all took an active part in the manual labor connected with the campaign, especially in taking care of their tents. Our singing evangelists were all very efficient also as personal workers among the people.

Two of them, Brethren Parsons and Saunders, are promising young ministers, Brother Saunders being formally ordained to the ministry one Sunday morning during the campaign.

Since this campaign is considered as an experiment in summer evangelism, I will consider in a later article some of the advantages of such a campaign and how this plan might be improved.

Christian Publishing Company Reunion.

A very delightful occasion was the reunion of the officers and employes of the Christian Publishing Company, which took place last week at the home of W. W. Dowling, the vice president of the company. The house had been decorated for the occasion and the host's son, Mr. Harold Dowling, had employed his electrical knowledge in arranging some tasteful lighting effects. Mr. and Mrs. Till, with the assistance of a corps of young ladies, dispensed refreshments and apart from the social fellowship which the gathering was intended to promote a pleasing program filled in part of the evening, musical selections being rendered by Miss Marguerite Varey, Mr. Roland Bresch and others, while the choir of the Hammett Place Christian church, of which the host is an elder, was especially invited to entertain the "printin' folk" and did so most admirably. Mr. Dowling welcomed his guests most cordially, stating that this was the second occasion on which it had been his pleasure to entertain them as a "house," and he expressed the hope that there might be a reunion of the employes every year. Mr. G. A. Hoffmann responded, thanking the host for his courtesies and stating, what was unknown perhaps to many present, that Mr. Dowling has been longer engaged in the editing of Sunday-school literature than any other man in America and that over 350,000 scholars receive his instruction every week.

The two most enjoyable items of the evening's program center around the host. We wish we had space here to quote from the Rhymester Laureate's account of a peregrination under the title of "The Old and the New." Perhaps we may some other time. But Mr. Dowling pictured to us some of the memories—joyful and otherwise—of the old publishing house and then he took us through the various rooms of the fine and adequate building in which we now gather to do our daily work in sending broadcast the Christian-Evangelist and the many other publications that go out from 2712 Pine street.

And just before the break-up it was the pleasant duty of Mr. W. D. Cree, in a witty speech, to represent "the house" in the presentation of a handsome chair for the use of the vice-president in his own "den" at home, as a token of the esteem of his fellow workers, of whom nearly all were present save the president of the company, who was unable to return from Garrison Park in time for this event.

Bruneau Valley, Idaho.

The advertisement of the Bruneau Land and Irrigation Co., which appears in this issue of the Christian-Evangelist, refers to an enterprise originated by members of the Christian church, chief among whom is Henry Watkins, Boise, Idaho, formerly pastor at Tacoma, Wash. He writes enthusiastically concerning the country, says that there are eight Christian preachers in Bruneau Valley and that one-half of the present filings are from members of the Christian church.

Brother Watkins will take especial pleasure in answering inquiries from readers of the Christian-Evangelist.

—The Christian-Evangelist will tell the story of the convention as usual—as fully as it can be told on paper.

—Send in your orders at once for extra copies of the paper, and ask your neighbor to subscribe.

—We shall send back wireless or other dispatches along the route, informing our readers of the journey and its incidents.

—That is splendid news from the Home Society which we print this week in double column measure. A gain of $20,000 in ten months over the previous year in our home missionary offerings—about as much as the total receipts ten years ago—means several important things. First of all it means a growing interest in home missions. It means unshaken confidence in the secretary and board of managers. It means that home mission work has gained such momentum that whoever or whatever gets in its way is likely to be run over. It prophesies larger things for the future. We congratulate the Home Society and the brethren at large on the splendid showing.

—At Ladonia, Tex., a brick church is being built.

—The new building at Lyons, Kan., is to be of cement blocks.

—A city mission board will probably be organized at Louisville, Ky.

—C. E. Pile, of Parsons, Kan., is convalescent, after a critical illness.

—A state convention of Kentucky will be held at Maysville, September 25-28.

—The Nebraska convention has just followed the institute which closed July 28.

—George Rader has left Bloomington and taken up the wark at Bruceville, Ind.

—Bruce Brown occupied his old pulpit at North Side church, Chicago, last Lord's day.

—V. L. Parker has been installed as minister of the Bismarck avenue church, Indianapolis.

—W. F. Hamann, of Sedalia, is taking work at the University of Chicago during this term.

—The seventh anniversary of the Irving Park church, Chicago, has just been celebrated.

—N. N. Early will give three-fourths time at Augusta and one-fourth at Chatham, Bracken Co., Ky.

—There is talk of a new building at Danville, Ky., where H. C. Garrison is doing a fine work.

—Our church at Oklahoma City is erecting a mission chapel to be located in the university addition.

—F. P. Smith, late of Hoopeston, Ill., has taken up the work at West Park church, Indianapolis.

—Utica, Ohio, reports a new congregation organized of sixty-eight members, with a lot purchased.

—I. N. Mabry, of Perry, Okla., has decided to enter the field as a regular singing evangelist.

—W. W. Burks, of Mason City, Iowa, has been called to succeed G. D. Edwards at Nevada, Mo.

—R. W. Abberley, of Minneapolis, Minn., is wanted by the Walnut Hills church, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—The brethren at Taylortown, where W. H. Patterson is in charge, have just completed a new parsonage.

—The brethren at Emporia, Kan., have moved out of their old building, and will soon be worshiping in the basement of their new edifice.

—Jason Mill, Ind., where a new church building will soon be erected, has taken D. G. Waterman from Knox.

—The Callaway county convention of Missouri, was held at Mokane, August 2, when a good program was rendered.

—The Brooks brothers have in the past eight months had 1,207 converts in eight meetings, an average of over 150 a month.

—The "dog day" sale advertised in another part of this paper, shows that our book-publishing department has "gone crazy."

—The annual union meeting of the churches of Knox county, Ind., was held at Sandborn, and was a "basket dinner" occasion.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

Some time ago we asked our friends to send us 10,000 new subscribers to the Christian-Evangelist. Of this number we have received, up to Aug. 1, 8,778. Brethren, we are more than thankful for this splendid response, and wish we had words to express our appreciation for this excellent work on the part of the friends of the Christian-Evangelist. Just give us a little lift to help us out and in another month we can report to you that we have the 10,000 new subscribers, which will mean 50,000 new readers. What a world of good this will be to the cause of Christ!

—We regret to record the death of H. K. Berry, who died recently at Sulphur Springs. He was formerly minister at Augusta, Ky.

—L. F. Drash has resigned at Bloomfield, Ind., where he has done a very acceptable work. His future plans are not yet announced.

—T. J. Clark had a ministry of twenty-one years at Vincennes, Ind., and has just received the twelfth call from the church at Bloomington.

—The marriage is announced of C. J. Sharpe, our energetic minister at Hammond, Ind., with Miss Grace W. Chapman, of Millbury, Ohio.

—L. N. D. Wells and wife, of Wilkinsburg, Pittsburgh, Pa., will take a considerable trip through the west after attending the convention at San Francisco.

—H. H. Peters informs us that Oliver W. Stewart, who has just taken part in a temperance rally at Rossville, Ill., was at his best and the meetings a great success.

—How many are going to the convention? Santa Rosa, Cal. reports 50 of its members intending to be on hand. That is the way the Pacific Coast brethren are going to go.

—Prof. E. B. Wakefield, of Hiram college, is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Walter Robinson, at Princeton, Mo., during August. His journey may be extended to Oklahoma and Texas.

—The brethren have moved into the remodeled church at Somerset, Ky., where the work continues to prosper. There were 18 additions in two weeks recently at the regular services.

—Our church at Pueblo, Col., has a fine male chorus organized as a part of the movement to make the services of special interest to the men. This chorus has been a decided success. Congregations have been increased and the musical work is well done. A photograph of the members of this choir appeared in the Pueblo Chieftain, with J. H. Mohorter, the pastor, and the organist, Miss Brooks, the only lady in the group.

—Russell F. Thrapp, of the Central church, Jacksonville, Ill., is spending a vacation at Lake Geneva, Wis. Guy B. Williamson, the assistant pastor, is continuing the regular church services.

—The ground has just been broken for a new church building at Ft. Wayne, Ind. It is to cost $4,000, and is largely the outcome of the leadership of E. W. Allen, of the West Jefferson street church.

—The Cambridge City Tribune reports that Joseph Garvin's revival services in the Christian church there have been successful and that the preacher has given eminent satisfaction from the standpoint of spirit and untiring work.

—One who has borne a prominent part in the Restoration movement for many years has just passed away in the person of T. W. Brents, who will be widely mourned in the south. He was born in 1823 and was the father of Sister Victor W. Dorris.

—J. Boyd Jones has held a successful meeting at Macclesfield, N. C. When he went there we had no following at all, but a church was organized, a beautiful corner lot secured, and it is hoped a building will be erected before long. D. W. Arbold has consented to take charge.

—Elder and Mrs. Rolla G. Sears have moved to Canton, Mo., from Chicago where they have been attending the university and the conservatory of music. Brother Sears will teach Hebrew and the cognate languages at Christian university and Mrs. Sears will teach the mandolin.

—Two new churches, one at Folsom, with 20 charter members, and one at Raton, with 48 charter members, have been recently organized in New Mexico. These places are within reach of each other and a competent, energetic young man is wanted to take oversight of them. Address David C. Peters, 612 Pierce Ave., Trinidad, Col.

—In the report of the committee on resolutions at the Grand River district convention, Pattonsburg, Mo., it was resolved that Governor Folk's enforcement of the law be heartily endorsed, and that the heartiest support be given to the officers of the convention, and in building up the work in the respective counties represented.

—Daniel Trundle, of Aurora, Mo., has decided to take up the work at Bisbee, Ariz. Aurora made every effort to retain Brother Trundle. He appreciates their kindness but he has been influenced by the condition of his wife's health to try another climate. The move will take place about August 21. Whoever succeeds Brother Trundle at Aurora will find the brethren in a spirit to go forward.

—A brother in Kentucky writes: "From the crucial criticism through which your book on the Holy Spirit is passing it must be dangerously near the truth," and so he inquires the price of book and requests a sample copy of the Christian-Evangelist. Criticism never hurts the truth and it often helps to commend it to others who would not otherwise know of it. Let the good work go on!

—Cephas Shelburne writes from Huntington, Ind., "The contract has been let for our new church, the old building has been torn down, and work has begun on the foundation. Yesterday, July 30, we held our first service in the new theatre which we will occupy on Sunday. Three hundred scholars attended the Sunday-school and the large auditorium was filled at both preaching services. There was one confession.

—One of our English readers writes: "We shall miss the sweet Macatawa Musings and it is a grief to see the familiar name of Edgewood-on-the-Lake advertised for sale. We must hope that Pentwater will become dear to your readers in its turn and will become a new garden of Eden where the voice of God is heard and where it is echoed in many a home through the pages of the sanest, sweetest and best of religious periodicals."

—We are glad to learn that a movement is on foot among the friends of L. L. Carpenter in the Hoosier state to send him to the Holy Land next winter in the company that is being organized by B. B. Tyler, of Denver. This will be a graceful thing to do, for Brother Carpenter will deserve the honor and will no doubt enjoy immensely such an outing. An interesting event is about to occur in Brother Carpenter's life of which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will give further particulars.

—J. W. Walters has resigned at Webster City, Ia., to take effect Aug. 25. He will enter the evangelistic field and churches desiring his services may address him for the present at Webster City. Brother Walters goes back to his former field of work. He has been eight years in the pastorate without vacation or change, and in the past twenty-two months 111 have been added to the church at Webster City, while a considerable mortgage has been met, the building improved, and nearly all missionary calls generously provided for. His relationship with the church is most cordial.

—A note from Mrs. Amanda Gail Holmes, of Mankato, Minn., brings us the following message: "Our loved sister, Adelaide Gail Jenks, was laid at rest from her long illness July 18 in Lakewood cemetery. She passed away Sunday, July 16. Appropriate services were conducted by R. W. Abberley at the Portland avenue church of Christ in Minneapolis. Obituary later." Our older readers especially, will remember the poetic contributions from our gifted sister which ran through many years. She was a great sufferer and it is sweet to know that her purified spirit is at rest. Our sympathies are extended to the bereaved.

—The number of new subscribers for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during the month of July has broken all records. It has been difficult to fill the orders for extra copies, although an effort is made each week to anticipate the demand. This growth, we are glad to say, is not the result of any special boom but the normal increase of interest in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and in what it stands for. We are asked by the Subscription Department to say to those who wish reports of the San Francisco convention to place their orders for extra copies beforehand, or, what is better, to become regular subscribers for the paper. Then they will be sure to receive full and accurate reports of our great national convention.

—We have received a communication written by Julius Stone, a missionary under the Home Society, who tells us of an open door of opportunity. Brother Stone has been mixing freely among the people in this great land who are of Scandinavian birth or descent. He recently attended a Christian unity conference in which the first day was devoted to the discussion of baptism, and at the conclusion of the session five preachers who had been actively opposed to immersion were put beneath the waters of the neighboring river by Brother Anderson, of Kansas, one of them being secretary of the Norwegian Danish Free Church Association. Another subject discussed was "The Government of the Church" and the question was very carefully examined. Brother Stone is very hopeful of the outcome of these conferences. He is on the program committee and another meeting is to be held towards the end of the year.

—Here is a train ritual for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special, which is not mandatory but suggestive:

1. The general in command of the expedition will be General Cheerfulness. His commands should be implicitly obeyed, and they are not grievous. There's bound to be in so long a journey, some discomfort in the way of heat, dust, imperfect service here and there, and other undesirable features; but any one allowing himself to become disagreeable on that account is likely to be dropped off the Special at the nearest stop, to be picked up by a later train.

2. The people who make up the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special know the difference between cheerfulness and rowdyism, and if they didn't they would have no disposition for the latter. It is a long journey and any excessive exuberance of good feeling at the beginning is likely to be followed by sullen silence toward the close. Distribute it all over the journey.

3. In ordinary trains there is sometimes an unseemly rush for one to get ahead of another in going in and out of the cars, and especially at table, and ladies are sometimes crowded out in the scramble. But of course there will be nothing of this sort of brute selfishness on our Special. Each one will try to see that his neighbor fares well, and will esteem others better than himself, especially the ladies. That will make delightful traveling.

4. Take all the religion you have along with you, and if you can increase the stock on hand, en route, do so. You will need it to keep you happy and agreeable on the way, and you will need it when you get to San Francisco, to make you attend the convention instead of seeing the sights. "The Sights" will be there after the convention is over. Try to find a little time each day on the train to look after the religious side of your nature in order to keep sweet and wholesome. If you have any of that morbid, dyspeptic type of religion that mistakes long-facedness for piety, and obstreperousness for soundness in the faith, leave it at home, or stay at home with it.

5. Take some good reading along with you. It is tiresome talking all the time on the train, and sometimes it is tiresome listening, for the noise of the train and of other voices makes it difficult to hear. We will have time to read one good book through on the way, and the amount of instruction we would get out of that, to say nothing of the boon which we would confer on others by our silence, would be worth the journey! Don't construe this as discouraging sociability on the train. We want that and must have it, but it is simply a caution against an excessive strain on the social faculties, to the exclusion of what every normal soul needs—periods of quiet and rest.

Missouri University.

In this issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will be found a bird's-eye view of the University of Missouri. The growing popularity of this institution is attested by the fact that the attendance has grown from 940 in 1899, to 1,882 in 1905.

Ninety-one per cent of the students enrolled last year were church adherents. By denominations, there were three hundred and ninety-five Methodists; two hundred and ninety-five Disciples of Christ; two hundred and fifty-two Presbyterians; two hundred and eighteen Baptists; sixty-one Catholics; thirty-one Congregationalists; twenty Jewish; seventeen German Lutherans; thirteen English Lutherans; eight Unitarians; five Adventists; five Universalists; two each of Friends, Christian Scientists and Church of God; and one each of Danish Lutheran, United Brethren and Dunkard.

Write Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and please be sure to mention that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

A Big Little Meeting.

A protracted meeting of two weeks' continuance, held at Keytesville, Mo., closed last week with 26 additions. Most of the preaching was done by C. H. Winders, pastor of the Columbia Christian church, though the writer preached a few times, did the baptizing, and assisted in other respects.

The preaching of Brother Winders was admirable. There was no unusual excitement, nor any effort to produce anything of the kind. The whole effect upon the community, from the human side, was in the earnest presentation of the gospel.

Not the least agency among those which helped was the singing of Miss Otto Stephens, of Columbia. This was her first attempt at leading an evangelistic service; but unless I am mistaken it will not be her last. She showed very remarkable ability in organizing and sustaining the singing forces of the town, while her solo singing gave very general satisfaction. Those securing her services for evangelistic work will be fortunate. Her address is Columbia, Mo.

Among those who were baptized was E. W. Price, a son of General Sterling Price, whose name is a household word in Missouri. The son is a worthy representative of his distinguished father. He is over 70 years of age, but is in vigorous health, and seems to be practically in the prime of life His decision to be baptized was characteristic of the man. He came to town from his country residence with his mind fully decided to take the important step, and this he did as soon as it was possible for him to do so. His action produced a profound impression both at Keytesville and Glasgow, where he is so well and favorably known. W. T. MOORE.

$20,203.75 GAIN.

A Tremendous Awakening.

Home Missions are taking hold of the people's hearts. The receipts this year to August 1, show a gain of $20,203.75 over the corresponding period last year. Many churches have taken the annual offering, but have not yet remitted. Many more have not yet taken the offering. Can any church afford to let this opportunity of lining up with the greatest achievement in our history, pass unheeded? Can any man or woman wearing the name Christian omit or decline to make an offering toward the Christianization of the Republic and the salvation of the whole earth? Can any preacher count himself faithful, who fails to lead his people into their portion of the victory?

We are doing more than ever before in the field, yet the demand is for a hundred times the force and fifty times the treasure. Our offerings are already glorious, yet according to our ability they are meager and unworhty.

It has been a wonderful year. Never such victories; never such odds; never such enthusiasm; never such deep purpose; never such splendor of achievements.

We call upon all men everywhere to fall in with the army of doers, to pray—to work—to give. Make this the coming year. Send a message and an offering from your church and school, or send your personal offering to this heart pressing work. Now is the time; to-morrow too late.

Oregon.

Dear Fellow Disciples:—We begin the year with a debt of $1,665.45. As a partial offset for this indebtedness, there is in outstanding pledges now due, about $800. If those who are now delinquent would send in their payments we could refund almost half this larger amount.

Our expenses for the current year will be about $2,500. This includes the salaries of the workers in the field, and the salary and expenses of the corresponding secretary, etc. The Turner convention will more than pay its own expenses. This is a small thing when we consider that we now number in the state over 9,600 souls.

The fields to be aided this year are Tillamook, Portland (Rodney avenue), Hood River (city), Myrtle Point, Forrest Grove, and, if possible, Woodburn and Hillsboro. If we should answer all the calls for aid from fields in need the number would be very much larger. Shall we arise to the great opportunity that the Lord has given us in this great field?

Our beloved president has given us a motto for the year's work: "Eight thousand dollars for missions and 1,500 souls for Christ by Turner '06." Brethren, this has the proper ring. Let it be repeated all along the line. Brother preacher, take it up and tell it to your people until it resounds throughout all our borders. Let us hear you say, "I am with you for $8,000 and 1,500 souls for Christ by Turner '06."

Can we do it? Certainly. If we should give but a single dollar each for this work we would have over $1,000 more than our motto asks. Surely there is not a Disciple in Oregon who can not give at least one dollar for state missions during the year. Think of it—only one cent for every three working days in the year. Even the poorest among us can find no excuse.

Again, if we should adopt the "Each One Win One" plan we would have many more than 1,500 conversions to report at our next convention.

Let us go up to Turner next year free from debt, a balance in the treasury and a rich harvest of souls. When you return from San Francisco begin at once to plan for a great rally for state missions on the first Lord's day in November.

I am now planning for a general canvass of the state to assist in this work and to get a larger knowledge of the field and the forces.

A Valuable Book.

In his recent work on "The Holy Spirit" Dr. Garrison has conferred on the brotherhood a valuable service. That the time is ripe for a work of this kind can admit of little doubt. Hitherto, as a people, we have given more attention to other features of the gospel, in our efforts to correct certain important errors of the time, and have thus been led, in a measure, to neglect the cultivation of this rich field of Christian thought and privilege. The excellent work of Dr. Richardson, published nearly a third of a century ago, received all too scant attention and reading. While such one-sidedness of emphasis is inseparable from all reformatory movements, if it crystallizes into permanent deformity it becomes a positive misfortune.

Valuable and fruitful as have been the truths that we have urged with so much zeal and success for a century, it is but just to say that no department of Christian study promises more for the spirituality of the church and the increase of its power than that concerning the Holy Spirit and his mission in the world. There is need of a new study of this great subject and larger insistence upon it until it shall bulk more largely in our thought and teaching. There can be no vital religion without the sense of the divine presence and communion, and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit is the means and accomplishment of this. Much of the teaching of the scriptures on this subject is dead truth to a large part of the Christians of to-day. It needs preaching, advocacy, study, until it shall live as privilege and blessing in the consciousness of Christians. There is need, if not of a new reformation, of a revitalization of this most important part of Chirstian teaching.

Dr. Garrison's work is a summons to this work, and a most happy introduction to it. It is not metaphysical, not controversial, but scriptural and vital. It is an excellent setting forth of the teaching of the scriptures on this subject, with a view to unfolding to the church the magnitude of its privilege, that it may enter more fully into its inheritance.

The author has no theories to bolster up and finds no passages that he needs to explain away. The interpretations are such, almost without exception, as must appeal to every unsophisticated mind as correct. Whether the language of John 16:13 will bear quite all the author finds in it is open to question, but fairness and absence of bias in interpretation is a marked feature of the book. The position taken regarding the present work of the Holy Spirit need not be rejected as untrue or without scripture warrant, even though the passage referred to be taken as directly applicable to the apostles.

No preacher should feel that he can do without this book, but it should not be read by preachers only. Its freedom from metaphysical speculation and the clearness and simplicity of its presentation adapt it to the comprehension of all. It should go into every Christian home, and will carry not only intelligence concerning a most important subject, but a quickening of spiritual life wherever it is read.

It is to be hoped also, that the book will find many readers among other religious peoples, for it will do good, both by way of relieving prejudice and by its well-balanced setting forth of the truth on this subject.

The Campaign for Two Thousand Contributors.

Up to August 2, 1,171 churches have promised to take the September offering. Missouri is in the lead with 143 promises, Illinois is second with 124 and Ohio is third with 116. In proportion to the number of churches in the state New Jersey leads in the number of promises, and the District of Columbia is second, Vermont is third, and California fourth. We are still 729 short of the two thousand promises, and 96 behind the total number of contributing churches of last year. We must bend every effort to reach the two thousand by the time our annual report closes on the 30th of September. The preachers who have received mailing cards should report at once in order that supplies may be sent.

At our board meeting on the first of August the funds were so low that the board will not be justified in making any more promises of loans until after the September offering. The board has granted $100,000 (one hundred thousand) more than we have money on hand to pay, and this does not include loans promised last year which are not yet closed. It is hoped that the brotherhood will realize the necessity of making a great effort to supply this deficiency during the annual offering, so that, with returns on loans and individual contributions, the board may be able to meet its obligations. Unless the September offering is more liberal than usual it will be many months before the board can grant any more loans. During the last two months the board paid out on loans over $40,000. Over 40 churches applied for loans during the months of June and July.

"Beautiful Hollywood!"

So exclaim the throngs of visitors to southern California. Here is destined to be another Pasadena. Nearer to Los Angeles, and much nearer the seaside than Pasadena, almost frostless in winter, and cool in summer, close to the foothills on the north, and looking southward over a wide stretch of valley, to old ocean in the distance, Hollywood, as a residence district, possesses unsurpassed attractions. It is pronounced by many, the queen of all the many charming suburbs of the City of the Angels. Costly villas and tasteful cottages and bungalows are springing up on all sides. First-class school privileges, including an excellent high school, are enjoyed. The electric car service is good. The sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited.

We want it known by the brethren everywhere that a church of Christ has been established at Hollywood. Its future is bright with promise of steadily advancing usefulness in the work of the Lord. At the parsonage, on Wilcox avenue, a cordial welcome will be extended.

John C. Hay, minister.

Regimental Reunions and Forty-Second Anniversary Battle Chickamauga,
CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 17-21, 1905.

On September 18, 1905, will occur the forty-second anniversary of the battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle, and, in addition, to hold at the same time, a grand reunion of all the regiments that participated in the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19, and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notable gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first time since they marched from its blood stained fields, forty-two years ago.

Grand and glorious will be the meeting and all who attend will have cause to rejoice. The lowest rate ever secured has been given the entire public for this occasion, one cent per mile, short line distance.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long before none will be left to do this noble work; take this opportunity and don't let it escape you, it is worth six months in the school room to any student.

It may be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Illinois News.

At Newman, N. S. Haynes organized the church thirty-four years ago. L. R. Thomas spent about seven years here as pastor. J. G. McNutt has labored for the church for two years, bringing the membership up to 250, the Sunday-school to 187, the Christian Endeavor, Senior and Junior, to 55 each. The church dedicated a beautiful modern building last February, at a cost of $15,000, all provided for. This is the home of Mrs. A. C. Bennett, sister of the Sweeney brothers. She is very active in the Lord's work and interested in all the public enterprises of the church.

Hume and Brockton are good churches, of 75 or 100 each, in fine communities, with splendid opportunities of usefulness. They expect to unite upon some man to preach for them jointly. This is right, and any good man will be able to do excellent work with proper support from each church. We are so independent, and so particular in our tastes, that often a good work is spoiled or prevented for want of agreement and co-operation. The standard by which a preacher is judged is often very unworthy. In our great scarcity of men, the smaller places often suffer. Men who might be very useful in the ministry, fail to enter it because they are conscious, from lack of ability or preparation, that they cannot be great men. The man who had one talent, buried it. Many now are doing the same. The Lord needs more men willing to serve in humble places.

At Oakland is a good little church of forty members, and a larger Sunday-school. J. M. Miller is their minister and seems to be entering upon a career of usefulness in a good field. He preaches at Greenup also, where the work is prospering.

One of the most active churches in central Illinois is at Arcola. L. T. Faulders, who has been out of Eureka college since '95, has been with the church four and a-half years. It numbered when he began 150 souls. It now has more than 400 members. It has a Sunday-school of 200; Christian Endeavor of 60; Junior Christian Endeavor of 50, and a C. W. B. M. of 30. The building was old and out of repair. A new modern house, conveniently arranged and beautifully decorated, has recently been dedicated. It cost $16,000, all provided for. Sister Faulders is a rare helper in the church's life.

Lovington, in Moultrie county, is the former home of the late H. Y. Kellar, a pioneer of rare ability. He was uncle to our own E. H. Kellar, of Carrollton, Mo., a young man in whom Eureka college always takes pleasure. Uncle Joe Hostetter, another scholarly pioneer, lived here, where still some of the family reside. The church has a beautiful house of worship, a membership of 200, with a good Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor. J. R. Parker has recently taken charge of the work, and is making a fine start, and we predict for him and his good wife a pleasant and useful pastorate among an appreciative people.

At Decatur we found a happy people in the best house that we own in the state of Illinois. It was dedicated last April by J H Gilliland, of Bloomington, and cost something over $30,000. F. W. Burnham is the pastor, and is justly loved and honored. Few young men have been willing to sacrifice more for the cause than he, and have been able to make sacrifices count for more. The work is marvelous in many ways. His wife, also a graduate of Eureka college, is a most efficient helper. A. H. Eyman, an alumnus of Eureka, a business man, is the leading business manager of the church. It is hoped that our people will come to appreciate the necessity of educating our business and professional men under moral and spiritual influences that will give them power, not only in their vocations, but in the churches wherever they live. Why not?

Bro. F. B. Jones, minister of the Temple church, Decatur, after about three years' ministry, has resigned. We are all looking forward to a great state meeting with the Decatur brethren, September 4-7.

The little church at Cazenovia is ministered to by Bro. Roy Stauffer, who is still in college. He is doing a fine work, and the church highly appreciates his efforts. The house has been recently decorated and is a thing of beauty.

The church at Heyworth prospers under the ministry of J. P. Givens. He has been with them two years, the membership has grown, and all departments are in a prosperous condition. The talk now is a "new house." We were never building as we are now, in our state. No church is very "dead" that is building in matters material or spiritual, and every church ought to be doing one or the other or both.

Lane has one of the old churches, organized by Watt Bowles in 1850. Dudley Downs, of sainted memory, was one of its early preachers. The writer, while a student in college, preached for it two years. It has been a great recruiting station for the west, consequently the membership has never been large, but it has been one of the faithful little churches in its local work, and is better able than it knows to enter in a larger way into the great enterprises of the world's life.

The church at Oreana is comparatively new with a membership of about one hundred, for whom L. B. Pickerill ministers part time until more permanent arrangement can be made. Brother Pickerill worked for the Olney church until they arranged to locate Brother Coleman.

The church at Cerro Gordo numbers one hundred members, with fifty in the Sunday-school, a good Christian Endeavor and C. W. B. M. J. A. Lytle, of Champaign, visits them twice a month.

The trying time for church enterprises has come. More and more we are making the summer a vacation in everything. It is well in this age of great strain and tension, to turn aside and rest awhile. This should be no license to wrongdoing, or neglect of religious care for our souls. J. G. Waggoner.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The convention of the Grand River district was held at Pattonsburg in July, and was not so well attended as we could wish, still enough were there to prove that the cause of Christ is very dear to the churches in that district. Brother and Sister White, of Trenton, were surely sent by the Father to bring new life to the conventions, and we trust to the whole district. Mrs. White was unanimously elected as manager, and we bespeak for her the hearty co-operation of every auxiliary in the district. She will need all the help you can give her to gather up the tangled threads of C. W. B. M. work. Pattonsburg auxiliary, while not strong, is very faithful and entertained the visitors with warm hospitality.

Savannah entertained the Nodaway district convention. The meeting was not a real old-time Nodaway kind of convention, so far as numbers are concerned. However, the work there is in good order. Mrs. C. O. McFarland, the manager, had prepared a fine program, and presided at the C. W. B. M. part, one afternoon and night. Reports were hopeful, and several new auxiliaries are in sight. Sister McFarland was again elected to guide the work for the coming year, and we predict a larger growth for the future.

The Savannah auxiliary had grown weary some time before this convention, and had ceased to meet, or even exist. It was reorganized and will, we earnestly hope, grow in numbers and in power, under the leadership of Mrs. Limerick as president, and Mrs. John Mead as treasurer. The names of the other officers have slipped from the writer's memory.

Other places visited by the secretary are, Mitchell Park and King Hill auxiliaries in St. Joseph, and Weston and Edgerton. Weston is one of the very faithful ones and a warm welcome was accorded; the same is true of the two first named. Edgerton will, we trust, again fall into line, as of old.

The churches can be wonderfully stimulated by calling workers to hold C. W. B. M. revivals within their borders, paying our worker for her time. There is nothing like co-operation for building up the cause which we love so well.

Mrs. J. L. Moore reports a new auxiliary at Hardin, with Mrs. J. H. Stupp, Mrs. Mabel Boggess, and Mrs. Minnie Tindall as officers. There are five members and two Tidings. Also at Eagleville, with Mrs. T. H. Popplewell, Mrs. Florence Maranda and Mrs. Eliza Coberly as officers. Blythesdale will again take up the work shortly.

Our most earnest desire, and it is very moderate, is to have two hundred auxiliaries in full fellowship and holding regular meetings each month, before our national year closes in September. Can we not do this and even better? Every woman is urged to fix her mind and her prayers on some near-by point where an auxiliary ought to be established, and by enlisting all the members of her own auxiliary in like service, send to that place literature, Tidings and visitors, until the way shall be prepared for the organizer. Sisters, this is home mission work and work that lies within your reach, and God will hold you responsible for it.

Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Jottings.

The South Joplin church has sent its preacher, J. W. Baker, to the convention at San Francisco. The First church assists them in bearing the expense. This is a compliment worthily bestowed. Few people know the labor and sacrifice that Brother Baker has bestowed upon this church.

Dean W. J. Lhamon, of the Bible college at Columbia, recently made six addresses in the South Joplin church, seven in the First church, one in Webb City, and one in Duenweg. It was a rare treat to hear him. He is a safe teacher for the young men and women who may seek instruction in the Bible college. There is strong talk of having Brother Lhamon come once a year to Joplin, and conduct similar institutes. He does his work without charge, but frequent free will offerings were made for him. We were richly blessed by his presence among us.

The church building at Duenweg, a suburb of Joplin and connected with it by the electric car line, has just been dedicated, J. W. Baker being master of ceremonies. Eleven hundred dollars were raised and this more than met the indebtedness. W. J. Lhamon preached in the afternoon and the writer at night. W. F. Turner was present in the afternoon and made a most inspiring talk. He then said, "We will sing, 'Blest be the Tie that Binds,' and be dismissed." No invitation was extended. A prominent citizen arose before the song began, and said, "I want to make the confession." He pressed to the front. Brother Turner greeted him most warmly and called upon the writer to lead in prayer. After this two other prominent men stepped forward to make the good confession. Great was the effect of this. Intense was the feeling everywhere manifest. Then the song began and when it closed eight mature persons were ready to confess the Savior. The meeting closed amid great rejoicing, and eight candidates were buried with their Lord in baptism in a crystal stream near by. There were three more additions at night. It was a great and notable day.

J. B. Jeans, of Springfield, had a basket meeting in a neighboring church, and after preaching morning and afternoon he came over to hear me at night. He was my student when I was president of Christian university. He has done a good work in southwest Missouri.

There was one conversion at the close of W. F. Turner's sermon at the First church in Joplin in the morning.

As I write Marcellus R. Ely, of New Orleans, is expected to arrive in Joplin. His church was generous enough to give him the month of August on full pay. I presume he will go on to the convention with Brethren Turner and Baker.

I am to begin a series of meetings at Hickman Mills, Jackson Co., Mo. I held a meeting there last November.

Our meeting at Pilot Point, Texas, lasted 15 days. The attendance and interest were very fine. There were only two additions. Bro. J. P. Adcock is their beloved preacher, but his health is very much impaired and he will be compelled to close his work there soon. He will locate on a small farm near Durant, Indian Territory.

Brother Patrick resides near Dueneveg, Mo., and had an active part in the success of the work there. He baptized the eight converts. His influence far and wide is felt for good.

Maritime Province News.

Throughout the various churches of the three Maritime Provinces a healthy work seems to be in progress. All the churches have pastors at the present time. We have lost two good men by removal to Ontario. A. N. Simpson, of Summerside, P. E. I., takes the work at Toronton Junction, while R. W. Stevenson, formerly of Charlottetown, has become general evangelist of the same province. Bro. Robert Pegrum has taken the work at Charlottetown and Thos. H. Bates has gone to Summerside.

F. J. M. Appleman has resigned at Pictou, N. S., to take the work at Lubec, Me. This will bring him in touch with my own work in Charlotte county, N. B., from which I am hoping good things.

R. E. Stevenson is doing a splendid work in Halifax. He has one of the most united and energetic bodies of Disciples in the province and it is beautiful to learn of the personal sacrifice they make for the work in that city.

The annual meeting of the churches of the provinces convenes with the church in Halifax next month.

J. C. B. Appel in St. John is having additions almost continuously. His work seems to prosper under his hand.

Coburg street has had a successful year with Brother Floyd.

At Letete the work is progressing most favorably. When I came here one year ago the work was in a pitiable plight, but to-day we are united and working harmoniously. We will build a new church this summer. The contract has been let, and building is to be completed by December 1. It will cost about $3,500 and will seat, with Sunday-school room, about 350 people. We expect to have one of the prettiest churches in this part of country.

At Back Bay children's day was observed and the neat sum of $18 was raised for foreign missions.
G. N. Stevenson.

The Inland Empire Christian Missionary Society.

The I. E. C. M. S., by its official board, have asked me to report to our papers the work of the churches in east Washington. My report has been delayed, by necessity, but I will try now.

At the Washington state convention, held at Pullman this year, it developed that the universal sentiment of the brethren was emphatic that the state should be divided and separate organizations formed on the east and west sides. The convention this year was a good one, but only one delegate came from the west side. Last year, at North Yakima, the convention was good, but only a few came from the east side. Our oldest preachers say it has always been so. The convention has always been an east side or west side convention, according to its location, in spite of the fact of a state organization. The distances are too great. Washington is 375 miles long, 230 miles wide. Our railroad facilities are limited. A great mountain range forms a natural dividing line. The industries on either side are widely different, although the people are alike. Strange as it may seem, there are much better reasons for a bi-state organization between Ohio and Indiana, or between Indiana and Illinois, than a state organization for Washington. And again, Whitman county, on the east side, has been organized for years. Both organizations have done good work; but there has always been this division. It was therefore thought that the best interests of the state work demanded a division. Brother McGaughey, of Everett, was asked to call together the brethren of the west side and effect an organization. A committee of three, consisting of Brethren W. T. Adams, of Waitsburg; B. E. Utz, of Spokane, and H. A. Benton, of Pomeroy, was appointed to confer with representatives of the Whitman county organization and effect a union with them. The officers of the state convention were elected to hold over until all the affairs of the state board were settled and all legal interests adjusted.

The committee for the west side has not been heard from. The committee for the east side was entirely successful. The Whitman county brethren decided to enter the new east side organization, which is nothing more than an enlargement of their work to include all the interests of the east part of the state. The new organization is named the "Inland Empire Christian Missionary Society." Its annual meetings will be the annual camp meetings, usually held by the Whitman county churches. An invitation was extended to the churches in north Idaho and northeast Oregon to co-operate with the I. E. C. M. S. in its larger work. The officers elected were as follows: President, H. S. McClure, Garfield; first vice-president, J. A. Pine, of Dayton; second vice-president, W. M. Roe, of Latah; recording secretary, George Jones; treasurer, W. J. Bennington, Ritzville; two new offices were created as follows: Sunday-school superintendent, Mrs. J. M. Simpson, Spokane; C. E. superintendent, Professor Beattie, of Pullman.

The president called the official board together at Garfield on June 30, when the following business was transacted. It was decided that the interests of the work demanded the employment of two evangelists and a corresponding secretary to give all their time to this work. For the position of corresponding secretary a call was extended to W. S. Lemon, now at Latah. Bro. J. N. McConnell, who has done such efficient work in Whitman county, was unanimously called to be one of the evangelists. The position of the second evangelist was left open for the present. It was decided that in order to carry on the work successfully it will be necessary to raise among the churches the sum of $4,000 or more. The corresponding secretary and evangelist are requested to give all the time possible until Sept. 1, to visiting the churches for the purpose of raising this money. The executive board voted that the plan of work this year should be to send the evangelists into new fields to establish new churches, and to strengthen weak ones. Steps were taken to have the new organization properly incorporated.

The Dayton church has contracted with Brother and Sister L. F. Stephens to do work in the northwest as "living link" evangelists, and will raise $500 for that purpose. It is intended to supplement the I. E. C. M. S. wherever necessary.

The writer understands that the evangelists are to remain in the new fields as long as will be necessary to establish the new church. This is especially gratifying because, in his judgment, it marks a return to the New Testament method of missionary evangelism. It inspires confidence on the part of the evangelist, because the churches, through the official board, are standing by him and holding up his hands in a trying position. It encourages the scattered Disciples to do their best because it is a demonstration of the general interest in them, and an assurance of just the kind of help they need. No failures or abandoned fields will mark the track of the year's work. It advertises the work most favorably among the unsaved. It inspires the confidence and enthusiasm of the churches and makes the financial problem doubly easy. And last, it saves the opportunity.

Brethren of Washington, let's all hands to this enlargement of the Master's glorious work in our midst! "First in Jerusalem, then in Judea, then in Samaria," etc. You are called to do liberal things for the Lord, this year, in Washington. If our plan is successful, the report of the corresponding secretary next year, at the camp meeting, will astonish all for its greatness. It now depends on the loyalty and liberality of all the east Washington Disciples, individually, and of our churches, whether or not this shall be done. May God help us to see the day of our glorious opportunity.

J. A. PINE.

The San Marcos River Camp Meeting.

This great Texas camp meeting commenced on Friday, July 7, and continued for seventeen days, closing on Sunday, July 23. J. B. Boen had been selected by the committee to do the evangelistic preaching, and B. B. Sanders to conduct the Bible readings at the morning services. Both were on hand and performed their respective parts to the satisfaction of the immense audiences that assembled from day to day throughout the entire meeting, and doubtless a great reaping will result in the future from this seed sowing of the kingdom of God.

The association had made perhaps the greatest preparation ever made in Texas for the convenience and comfort of the campers and those who could stay only a day or two. A large tabernacle 120x102 feet had been erected, with as comfortable seats as can be found in any church, and lighted brilliantly with electricity furnished by a dynamo at a large mill near by. Waterworks running through the camp, furnished the campers with pure fresh water, and the San Marcos river was a delightful place in which to bathe, and on which to take boat rides, while a splendid restaurant furnished meals to all those who did not care to do their own cooking. In fact, there was every convenience to be found in a city, and it was to the delight of all attending. Thousands of people attended this great meeting, and our brethren never had a better opportunity of presenting our distinctive features than at this meeting, and considering that these distinctive features were entirely new to most of the people, it is no wonder that no more than forty accepted the plain gospel of Christ. The plain evangelistic sermons delivered by J. B. Boen, and the Bible readings given by B. B. Sanders upon such subjects as: "The Mission and Work of the Holy Spirit," "Conversion," "The Power of the Word of God," "Baptism," "The Baptism in the Holy Spirit," "Change of Heart," "The New Birth," "What are the Means through Which Persons are Inducted into Christ?" "The Primitive Church," and many other like subjects, must find lodgment in the hearts of the people hearing them.

It was a great meeting and great good will result. Any meeting is a great meeting, when a great number of people hear and understand the simple teaching of primitive Christianity. God will take care of the results.

During the meeting, Colby D. Hall, pastor of the Hillsboro church, delivered a series of lectures on "How to Study and How to Teach the Bible-school Lessons," which ought to be put into some permanent form, as such lectures would add much to our Christian literature, and bless many a Christian home. They were thoughtful, well prepared and highly appreciated. Colby D. Hall is one of the coming young men of the Christian brotherhood. Geo. Munro, pastor of the church at Galveston, A. J. Bush, superintendent of Juliette Fowler orphan home, W. M. Taylor, superintendent of Mexican missions at San Antonio, R. L. Courtney, pastor of the church at Gonzales, G. S. Kimberly, pastor of the church at San Marcos, W. L. Ridout, pastor of the church at Luling, T. E. Shirley, president of the board of trustees, Texas Christian university, I. F. Anderson, vice-president of Texas Christian university, Miss Lula Reed, superintendent of the Junior Endeavorers, and Wm. LeMay, a young minister of promise, from Texas Christian university, and Edwin C. Boynton, pastor University church at North Waco, all assisted very much in the progress of the meeting by talks, prayers and sermons. When the time came to break camp, it was like the parting of a great army of soldiers. The "good-byes," the "God bless you till we meet again," was heard ringing all over camp. But the meeting is gone into history, and eternity alone will gather up the results.

The immediate results of the meeting are tabulated as follows: Baptized, 34; from the Baptists, 4; from the Methodists, 2; total, 40. A church and Sunday-school were organized, pastor employed and some $1,300 were raised to aid in the payment of the tabernacle and contingent expenses. Prof. E. M. Douthitt, of Austin, Texas, led the song service, which was simply grand.

The committee is planning for still greater results for 1906. An electric railway is being built from San Marcos to Luling, which passes immediately this great camp ground. This railway will tap the International & Great Northern and M. K. T. railways at San Marcos, and the Southern Pacific and Aransas Pass at Luling, thereby giving easy access to the camp ground from all these trunk lines of railway, and hence the largest gathering of people ever witnessed in all the south land for religious purposes is confidently expected in 1906. Homer T. Wilson and B. B. Sanders have been selected by the committee to do the preaching and Prof. E. M. Douthitt will again lead the song service.

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Eureka Springs, July 24.—Four additions yesterday, two by confession and baptism, two by letter.—J. L. Smith.

COLORADO.

Boulder.—Three grown people made the good confnssion and were baptized Lord's day, July 30. Two others joined by letter.—S. M. Bernard, minister.

ILLINOIS.

Breeds, July 31.—I visited this place June 18 and July 30, resulting in three additions by confession and obedience. I hope to be able to visit them again soon; they need assistance, for they are few but rich in faith.—J. I. Judy.

Roseville, July 31.—The work looks promising. Yesterday we had three confessions, and one two weeks ago.—Charles R. Wolford, pastor.

Ramsey.—Tabernacle too small. Four weeks' work telling in the community. The church had been almost broken down. Confidence is being restored. The church is set in working order. Seventeen have been added; many more are interested. We continue.—E. L. Frazier.

Chicago, July 31.—Four persons were added to the First church yesterday, making 10 added at regular services duriug July, three upon confession of faith and seven otherwise.—Guy Hoover, minister.

INDIANA.

Alexandria, July 31.—Six baptisms and three by letter at our regular services yesterday.—H. A. Wingard.

Covington, July 28 —Please report one more confession. B. L. Allen will be here in a meeting beginning the third Lord's day in September.—P. W. Walthall, minister.

IOWA.

Atlantic, July 31.—Two baptisms—both young men.—W. B. Crewdson.

KANSAS.

Highland, July 31.—Three baptisms here during the month of July.—Hugh Lomax, minister.

Howard, July 31.—The tent meeting by H. H. Hubbell (as evangelist) and A. W. Shaffer, as singer, closed yesterday with 26 accessions and much good accomplished. The work of P. W. Krahl, as pastor, prior to his leaving Kansas for better health, was conducive to the success of the meeting.

KENTUCKY.

Latonia, July 31.—Five additions yesterday.—H. C. Runyan.

Owensboro, August 2.—Large audiences during the summer; 10 additions in the last two weeks.—R. H. Crossfield.

Owenton, August 4.—Since last report a few weeks ago there have been three additions to the church at Owenton. I recently closed a meeting at Gratz with 13 additions, one by statement and 12 by confession and baptism—six young men and six young women. I begin another meeting August 7 with the church in Grant county called Antioch. The work at Owenton is progressing satisfactorily with large audiences at all the services.—W. J. Clarke, minister.

LOUISIANA.

Alexandria, July 28.—My wife and I began a meeting in the big tent at Cheneyville, two weeks ago, but the unprecedented rains, which have already ruined the crop prospect for this country, came in torrents every day and made it impossible to use the tent at all after the second day, and forced us to go to the church building and hold the best services we could. We worked on, and day before yesterday the weather cleared up temporarily. Just at this time a true report of the yellow fever situation at New Orleans came out in the papers, and the people went wild and the quarantine lids were shut down everywhere against Louisiana, and so we are all penned up within the lines of Louisiana and will have to stay here in the state till frost, if the fever does not abate, which those of us who have had experience with it know will not be the case. We closed the meeting last night, and are glad to report we had 18 additions, 15 of whom were by baptism. L. C. Wilson, the author of "The History of Sprinkling" and other good books, is the much beloved pastor of the Cheneyville church. Last night he was unanimously called for another year. Brother Wilson's health is bad at present, and he could not help in the meeting as he wanted to, but there was never a more earnest and willing soul than his. My wife and I will make an effort this afternoon to reach the hill country of north Louisiana, where we can establish a church at some remote place where we will be allowed to hold a meeting.—John A. Stevens.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Everett, July 31.—Two baptisms yesterday, and two confessions.—A. T. June.

MISSOURI.

Mound City, July 31.—In the work at Blanchard, Ia , at Dawson and other appointments, we have had 44 additions since Christmas.—John N. Cole.

St. Louis, July 31.—Yesterday was a good day at the Fourth church. Four added—three by primary obedience. There were eight additions during July, all but one by primary obedience.—E. T. McFarland.

St. Louis.—There was one confession at the First church, August 6, when R. L. Wilson was supplying for J. H. Brandt.

Malta Bend, August 4.—W. C. Cole, of Stanhope, Iowa, is with us in a meeting (two weeks old) with 24 additions, most of them confessions.—Jasper Cole.

Fulton, August 4.—I have just closed a very successful meeting with the Hickory Grove church. W. S. St. Clair is the minister. Thirty additions—twenty-one by confession and baptism.—Madison A. Hart.

Clinton, August 1.—We are in a meeting under a tabernacle, and more than a thousand people in constant attendance. At the close of this revival, we will rest three weeks at home in Ladoga, Ind. The Lord is blessing the harvesters everywhere. We need more evangelists. The joy of rallying souls to the cross is a rich compensation—the greatest privation is the home leaving.—W. T. Brooks.

OHIO.

Wooster.—Three were received into the membership at Orrville by commendation July 23, and there were two baptisms at Wooster.—W. L. Neal.

Marion, July 31.—Work moves on and the new church is going up. If any who read this know of persons moving to this city please write me so I can look them up.—O. D. Maple, pastor.

Findlay, August 3.—Two baptisms and three letters is our report for July.—C. H. Bass, pastor First church.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Williamsport.—The Second church, W. L. Dalton, minister, has begun a great tent meeting under the direction of C. R. L. Vawter, of Indianapolis, Ind. A number have already made the good confession.

Ellwood City, August 2.—One added by statement July 30, and there were two baptisms. We have begun our skirmishing for the battle in October. Open air meetings have been begun, also noon-hour meetings in the different shops where permitted. Many are becoming interested, and we hope to take the entire city for Christ.—Ferd F. Schultz, minister.

Vigan, July 16.—Another baptism in Vigan and one in Bonggued.—Hermon P. Williams.

TENNESSEE.

Jellico, July 31.—Two by letter this week. I preach at Halsey, this county, Thursday and Friday nights. There is no church of any kind there.—Wren J. Grinstead.

TEXAS.

Sabinal, July 31.—I closed a 15 days' meeting here Sunday night. In all, there were 27 additions, 20 baptisms, six by statement, and one from the Baptists. Of those who were baptized, 18 were from the world, one from the Methodists, and the other from the Roman Catholics.—Ernest J. Bradley.

VIRGINIA.

Petersburg, July 30.—Portsmouth meeting closed with 100 accessions, including about 20 of our own, who wanted an organization, and several who were connected with the various denominations. It was the strategic point for the state board this year. Secretary H. C. Combs and President W. F. Fox advocated the meeting, put up a big tent, and called the writer to hold the meeting. Great crowd continued to the last, often as many as 2,000 in and around the tent. It was pioneer work entirely, and the opposition made by the old conservative churches reminded me of the earlier days. I started at Petersburg yesterday, another state board meeting. The tabernacle seats nearly a thousand. It was packed last night. C. B. Richards is the popular pastor.—Herbert Yeuell.

THE FORM AND REALITY OF RELIGION.

—2 Tim. 3:5; 1 Cor. 6:19, 20.

What is Religion? By one great thinker of our own time it has been defined as "The life of God in the soul of man." This expresses very well the meaning of religion to an intelligent Christian, but can hardly serve as a definition of the religion of the heathen idolater, unless qualified greatly. Its only definition in the scriptures is that given by the apostle James, "To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world" (Jas. 1:27). But this is a statement of the result of true religion, rather than a definition. Perhaps we may venture, as a simple expression of its meaning, "the recognition and worship of a superhuman power." In this sense religion is universal, for everywhere men worship, even though ignorant of the beings, real or imaginary, to whom they do reverence (Acts 17:22, 23).

Religion has its forms. Worship must express itself, and temple and altar, priest and sacrifice, are found wherever men exist. It should be the purpose of these forms, rites or ceremonies to aid the soul in noblest expression of its reverence, and in teaching to others the higher principles of the religion to which they belong. Judaism had its ordinances of divine worship that spoke of human sin, divine holiness and mercy and helped the sincere worshiper to a clearer conception of God and his will (Heb. 9:1-7). Christianity has substituted for these multiplied ordinances the two simple ones of baptism and the Lord's supper. The former represents the death of the sinner to sin, and his revival, in Christ, to a new life of righteousness (Rom. 6:1-6). The latter is an abiding witness to the reality and power of the gospel, and is to be kept as such by the church through all time (1 Cor. 11:23-26). Besides these, Christianity has its forms of worship, such as prayer and song, sermon and offering, all of which should be saturated with the spirit of sincere and spiritual communion with God (1 Cor. 14:15-26).

Forms may become substitutes of realities. This has ever been the great hindrance to true religion. The very beauty of religious rites may delude the soul into mere "lip service." Very wicked men have often been punctilious observers of church forms. Members of the "Holy Inquisition" would turn serenely from the murder and torture of the saints of the Most High to the observance of the mass and the keeping of the feasts of the church of Rome. Such religion is little more than travesty of the true (2 Tim. 3:5; Titus 1:16). Even good people may fall into the error of making the outward ceremonies of Christianity a substitute for its spiritual realities. How many thousands there are in our large cities who call themselves Disciples of Christ because they were at some time in the past baptized by Christian preachers, but are now denying the Lord who bought them by refusing to have fellowship with his people in the communities where they are living. They need to heed the words of the Master, "Why call ye me Lord and do not the things I say?"

True religion is a glorious reality. (1 Cor. 3:16; 6:19, 20.) To be a temple of the living God, to be honored as the abiding place of the Holy Spirit, is the unique privilege of the true believer in Jesus Christ. In his heart are implanted the purest impulses, and in his life are developed the noblest traits of character possible to man (Gal. 5:22-24). For such an one, earth is a fruitful field of happy service, and heaven a sure and satisfying home. Devoting to the love and service of Christ the short years of time, he shall find in the unending presence and the blessed likeness of Jesus his eternal reward.

JEHOIAKIM BURNS THE WORD OF GOD.

—Jer. 36:20-32.

Memory verses, 22-24.

Golden Text.—Amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God.—Jer. 26:13.

Even the great reform under Josiah could not prevent the final crash and the humiliation of Judah. Events were moving rapidly in the history of the great world powers. For a century, Judah's foreign relations had been practically confined to her dealings with Assyria and Egypt. Syria and the northern kingdom of Israel had long since fallen, and Assyria dominated the civilized world. Judah acknowledged the rule of Assyria and paid tribute. Egypt—free except for a brief time when she herself had been tributary to Assyria—was looked upon by Judah at times as a possible ally in case of a revolt from Assyria and at other times as an invader disturbing the peace of her comfortable vassalage.

The time of Josiah and his contemporaries witnessed some great changes. The invasion of the fierce Scythians from the north introduced a new element and furnished a new danger to which the prophets could appeal to enforce their messages of warning. The Scythians pushed their marauding course south until they threatened Egypt. This barbarian invasion came at a time when the world-empire of Assyria, apparently at the zenith of its power, was decadent and ripe for destruction. Babylonia, which had been a vassal state of Assyria, made itself free, formed an alliance with the Scythians, captured Nineveh, the Assyrian capital (607 B. C.), overthrew the empire of Assyria and became in turn the dominant power among the nations of the known world.

Just at this time, when Assyria was tottering to its fall, the king of Egypt, Necho II, undertook an expedition to conquer and annex the territory of the decaying empire. As he passed by the province of Judah, Josiah led out an army to stop him. There is no apparent good reason for Josiah's interference and the Pharoah warned him to withdraw, since the expedition did not concern him (2 Chron. 35:21). But Josiah fought, and was defeated and killed (608 B. C.).

The result of this was twofold: First, it brought to a premature end the reformation which Josiah was still conducting and opened the way for a reaction; Second, it made Judah a vassal state to Egypt for a few years, until the rising power of Babylon, after completely frustrating Necho's ambition to control Mesopotomia, robbed him also of his Judean province.

Jehoiakim, a son of Josiah who succeeded to the throne after his brother Jehoahaz had reigned three months, was completely the tool of Egypt; 2 Chron. 36:1-8 shows how Judah was pulled and hauled between Egypt and Babylonia, utterly despoiled of national dignity. In such a case, it was natural that there should be another religious relapse, and so there was.

The prophets were playing an increasingly prominent part in the affairs of the nation. Isaiah was Hezekiah's best adviser and had furnished the heart of the resistance to Sennacherib. Micah at the same time was arraigning Judah for her sins, and for her superficial religious observances, and threatening punishment. Under Manasseh the prophets were silenced by persecution but probably carried on literary activity in private. Half a century later Nahum broke forth with his fiery attack upon Assyria and his prediction of the fall of Nineveh. In Josiah's reign, Zephaniah assisted in preaching the reformation, rebuked the nobles who were slow to forsake their sinful luxuries, and saw in the threatening Scythians God's instrument of punishment upon the wicked. Jeremiah began his long prophetic ministry about the middle of Josiah's reign. His forty years of service covered the period of the reformation, the reaction under Josiah's successors, the subjection to Egypt, the capture by Babylonia and the beginning of the captivity. Throughout these years (about 625-585 B. C.) Jeremiah was the leading figure in Hebrew history, and his prophecies give us our fullest record of the times.

Jeremiah's prophecies or sermons fall into three groups: (1) Those during the reign of Josiah, while the reformation was in progress; warnings and denunciations of sin, but with a clear note of hope. (2) Those during the reign of Jehoiakim, when the revival of idolatry and the threatening approach of Egypt and Babylon left no doubt of the fall of Judah; final warnings and laments over the general degeneracy, including a good deal of historical material. (3) Those during the reign of Zedekiah, during and after the final catastrophe, the fall of Jerusalem and the beginning of the captivity; dirges over the fall of Zion, assurances that there would be no speedy return as the false prophets declared, and hints of a distant deliverance. In the book of Jeremiah as at present arranged these groups overlap and intermingle somewhat.

The present belongs to the second group, in the reign of Jehoiakim. It is a clear narrative needing little comment and shows how a wicked king disregarded the word of the prophet and attempted to destroy his message.

THE DUTY OF WINSOMENESS.—Prov. 15:13-15; 17:22; I Cor. 9:19-22.

For the Leader.

Surely we have the opportunity this evening to make some good points in the betterment of both ourselves and our society. We can not all give large sums of money. We can not all have the talent of the first magnitude. We can not all be equally successful in bringing results in our work. We can not all be equally pretty. But we can all smile. We can all look pleasant. No one need be without a pleasant face. This is a wealth the church does not always appreciate. How much we can do by kindness! A smile is a passport to many a sad heart.

Then there is another phase of this question: Act pleasantly. Gruffness is more often ill-breeding than it is frankness and fearlessness. It is a cheap way to get notice—to flay someone every time we get a chance to talk. To give harsh criticism is the easiest way and the cheapest way of feeling that we are somebody. Let us avoid harsh criticisms of our friends, of our fellow Endeavorers.

For the Members.

1. Winsomeness does not mean pretty in the conventional sense. Indeed, many who are pretty and who know it, are vain of the same until they are very far from being winsome. Some of the homely people we know have enjoyed the grace of being winsome, for winsomeness is of the heart. Have we not seen some persons noted for beauty, for being "pretty," as people call it, and yet these same persons the most unlovely in disposition?

2. Winsomeness does not mean winesomeness. There are those who would be winsome were it not for being winesome. Strong drink in society is as bad as in the lower, so-called, walks of life. Beauty instead of being enhanced is destroyed by drink. The "fast" habits of some young people in which wine plays a prominent part are the sure destroyers of both beauty and winsomeness. If we would be handsome, if we would keep the blessing of physical beauty, let us avoid being winesome. If we would be winsome, let us stick to the habits of temperance in food and drink that are compatible with the laws of our nature.

3. Winsomeness does the one who is winsome good. It is a tonic to the one who can practice it. The soul within controls the body without. Good health is conserved by winsomeness. Those who can rise above the load of daily toil and care with a cheerful disposition, get strength from the effort. And not only does good come in the way of better health to the one who is winsome, but a good to others. Those we meet are depressed by our downcast dispositions. They rise with us, or they go down with us. A cheerful countenance is a good medicine. Think of it! We can all be good physicians, scattering blessing right and left. It is given to men and women to thus be like the Divine Being.

4. This is all from within first. The winsomeness of the hypocrite does not win. No one who makes it a perfunctory matter to be affable can palm this deceit off on the public. The people soon find out. The children know it from the beginning in their teachers. Look out! You are not fooling any one by acting. It must come from the heart. Jesus taught this doctrine. He said that out of the heart came the things that defile man. We are what we mean to be, not what we happen to be. There is no such thing as an accidental or incidental person. There are accidents and incidents in life, but the persons we are, are willed, conscious. We are what we are, in a broad sense, because we desired to be that. Let us, then, cultivate the heart, the soul. Let us desire to be cheerful, to love our fellows; to have an interest in them. Then the face will never be untrue.

Quiet Hour Thought.

How many have I slain with my absence of the winsome spirit and countenance?

Current Literature

August Magazines.

The Atlantic this month has been carefully planned to be a summer fiction number of the first interest. The editors hope that the suggestion of such titles as "The Clammer," "In Swimming," "An Apology for the Country," "Above the Clouds at Metequi," may be found cooling and seasonable. No literary study could be more appropriate for a fiction number than Mr. Henry James's notable paper on "The Lesson of Balzac." This number contains a paper upon "The Literature of Exposure," by George W. Alger, with whose point of view we do not agree.

The Review of Reviews is strongly a foreign number, with some of the ablest specialists supplying the articles. Dr. Dillon writes on the "Progress of the Russian Revolution" and Count Apponyi on "Hungary's Side in the Crisis with Austria." Of course the war and the peace negotiations come in for discussion, while another article presents our tariff differences with Germany. There are two articles on John Hay. "Canada's Canal System," "Electric Traction on German Rivers and Canals," and "The Coming Eclipse of the Sun" are articles full of information and interest.

The North American Review contains articles that discuss a number of subjects that are of great interest and importance at the present time. The Scandinavian Crisis, for instance, is treated by representatives of the two nations involved, while other articles of international interest deal with maritime responsibilities in case of war, the historical relations of Russia and the United States, the future of Crete, and Ireland's representation in the British Parliament. There is a thoughtful article on "Federal Regulation of Life Insurance," by James M. Beck, and another on the present conditions in the anthracite coal industry, in which the writer expresses the conviction that there is no occasion for any disturbance.

Perhaps the most remarkable article in this month's number of the Missionary Review of the World is that on "Obstacles to Christian Missions in China," by a native Chinese Christian. It is thoughtful, suggestive and interesting. There are a number of valuable articles on Africa dealing with the "Distribution of Missionary Forces," "Lourenco Marques Country," "Angola" and "Negro Missions." Other subjects treated are "Evangelistic Effort Among the Young," "The Caravan Mission to French Gypsies," "The Gospel in Brazil," "Signs of the Times in India," "The Williamstown Band," etc. What should be the death blow to the ignorant remark that "it costs a dollar to send a dollar" to missions is dealt in a forceful way in the frontispiece.

Country Life in America for August is an outdoor summer number. The first article shows the possibilities of Shetland ponies for pets and for hunter's companions. The photographs bring out in detail the method of training to bridle, saddle, walk and trot. An article on "Handling a Racing Automobile" reveals the art of modern chaffeurs so that the layman can understand on what principles the race is conducted. "Making Successful Rugs in Country Homes" tells how one woman in a New England community set the villagers to work hooking artistic rugs. Mr. William Sinclair Constant in his "Buying a Sailboat for $300" shows the wide choice of types that a man of limited income has at his disposal on the bay side or river front when he goes forth to buy a boat. "The Country Home Reminder" gives its usual full line of practical advice on what must be done about the estate, large or small, in the month of August—care of the poultry, live stock, lawn, roof and interior and exterior of the house. In "The Triumphant Eastern Progress of Alfalfa," E. V. Wilcox tells a fascinating and true story of how this now famous grass is becoming essential and widely successful in the middle west and eastern states. Dr. Wilhelm Miller in "Profitable Farm at $10 an Acre" shows up an astonishing situation. By careful personal investigation he has found that New England is full of abandoned farms, priced at $10 an acre, that lie side by side (in identical soil and fertility conditions) with farms that have been successfully worked by inexperienced city people.

"John Knox as a Preacher" is the theme of President W. Douglas Mackenzie's topic in the Homiletic Review. He thinks that "no one understands John Knox nor the Reformation movement in Scotland who does not clearly realize that all his labors were concentrated in preaching, and that his influence upon the social and political life of his country was primarily that exercised by his eloquence in the pulpit." Other leading articles in this number are by Prof. Borden P. Bowne on "Moral Training in the Public Schools"; S. Parkes Cadman, D.D., who gives a second paper on "Efficiency in the Pulpit," and Prof. James H. Hyslop who writes on "Psychical Research and the Future Life," urging a plea for a better recognition of the legitimacy and value of psychic investigation. In the department of Sermonic Criticism and Suggestion is a lively paper, the third of a series on "The Experiences of a Sermon Reporter," in which certain prominent divines may see themselves through the reporter's eyes. For instance, Dr. George F. Pentecost is characterized as "a sort of ecclesiastical commercial traveler, who handles a side line in theology," and Rev. W. J. Dawson is taken mildly to task for exaggeration, thus: "When in the course of a single sermon he twice says: 'I never was so moved in all my life,' the reporter is in doubt which incident to suppress, for the readers will attribute the apparent error to the stenographer." Under "Living Issues" is a helpful treatment of "The Servant Girl Question," while the pastoral department contains abstracts of the principal papers read at the recent International Sunday-school Convention at Toronto. A number of ministers wrote their views in a symposium on the Church and Theatre. The sermon department includes such well-known names as Henry Van Dyke, Alexander McKenzie, Herbert Symonds, A. C. Dixon, Charles Edward Locke, James I. Vance, etc.

JARRETT.

Margaret Jane Jarrett, wife of Henry D. Jarrett, died at Springfield, Mo., June 19, 1905. She was the daughter of Samuel Hutton, and was born in Alton, Ill., Dec. 27, 1839. Her parents having died when Margaret was 12 years of age, she was reared in the home of her brother, Jas. T. Hutton, at La Grange, Mo., and at this home, on Nov. 18, 1856, she was married to Henry D. Jarrett. This brother, now of St. Louis, and Wm. D. Hutton, of Los Angeles, Cal., both survive her. In 1879 Brother and Sister Jarrett moved to Canton, Mo., and in 1883 to Springfield, Mo., Brother Jarrett's present place of residence. Their eldest child, an only daughter, died at the age of 12 years, while four sons, E. A., J. H., A. C. and T. B. Jarrett, together with their aged father, yet remain. These sons are all honorable, Christian gentlemen, and reflect in their lives the beautiful character of their beloved mother. The writer has known Sister Jarrett for a number of years, and rejoices to be able to bear testimony to her gentleness as a Christian, her faithfulness as a wife and her Marylike devotion to her sons and their young families. Her heart was in the work of the church to the very end, and her last act of business was a request that her dues be promptly paid into the treasury of the aid society. On Tuesday, June 20, one of the most beautiful days, the remains of Sister Jarrett were deposited in Maple Park cemetery, amidst the smiles of flowers, the songs of happy birds and the whisperings of breezes as tender as the breath of angels. As we stood around the grave, covered as it was with the fresh flowers of June, the offerings of many friends, we felt like saying, with Whittier:

> "I cannot think that thou art far,
> Since near at hand the angels are;
> And when the sunset gates unbar,
> Shall I not see thee waiting stand,
> And white against the evening star
> Behold the beck'ning of thy hand?"

SMITH.

Dr. Jesse Henderson Smith was born near Bowling Green, Ky., in 1825, and died near Carlinville, Ill., on June 27, 1905, at the age of 79 years, nine months and six days. He practiced medicine in Kentucky and preached first in the Presbyterian church, but then identified himself with the Disciples of Christ and followed the double ministry of healing and saving men for more than forty years. He was the pioneer at Carlinville in 1865, preaching in the old court-house. He did valiant service for the cause in central Illinois for many years and was noted for his generous heart and strength of intellect. His abilities were of a high order in the pulpit and the home. He was twice married, first to Eliza Jane Norman in 1854 and eight children were born to them. The wife and six children have preceded him to the beyond. He was married to Mrs. Margaret Taylor in 1876 and it was to their generosity that the existence of a good church building at Carlinville was largely due. Sister Smith, a daughter, Lillie, and one son survive the doctor. He was a good man and his deeds remain to bless. Funeral services at Carlinville by the writer and Bro. W. H. Applegate. Interment at Chatham, Ill. EDWARD O. SHARPE.

TRICKETT.

Mrs. Maggie Trickett, beloved wife of the well known preacher, writer and song composer, H. R. Trickett, died very suddenly, of heart failure, at her home in Macon, Mo., June 23, 1905. Sister Trickett was a native of Illinois. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cox. She was married to Brother Trickett in 1871 and for 35 years she was his faithful helper. She was well known and highly esteemed in East St. Louis, Lancaster and Macon, Mo., and in Bloomfield, Ia., where Brother Trickett labored. She was a devout Christian and a domestic woman. She loved her husband and her home. She is at rest. Her influence enriches earth and her presence will make heaven richer. SIMPSON ELY.

Questions on the Holy Spirit.

Brother Garrison:—I have read carefully your book on "The Holy Spirit." I like nearly every feature of the book. I like the warning against narrowing the work that the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit do for us. It is needed. I like the warning against the other extreme, the vagaries and extravagances of mysticism and fanaticism. I like the exhortation to learn all that the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit do for us, and to enjoy such work. I like the lucid style in which you say what you do say.

My criticism is stated in one objection. You utterly failed to do the very thing, that before all else, above all else, you should have done. You do not state, you do not even hint, what you are contending for, what you mean, what you desire us to accept, believe, enjoy; though you claim that it is a boon inestimable.

We know of five senses that men have, what each sense does for men, how it does its work. If our good Brother Garrison, in the goodness of his heart, were to write a book on "The Sixth Sense," expatiating on the estimable blessings to be enjoyed through this sixth sense, and exhorting all to enjoy these inestimable blessings, would not common sense demand, "Define this sixth sense, its nature, its characteristics, its work, how it does its work, how men can avail themselves of these inestimable blessings, so that all can understand for what you contend, what you mean, know what you desire them to accept, believe and enjoy"?

Now we know that the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit, exert on the human spirit a rational, a moral power, influence, through ideas imparted to the human spirit by words and acts, that represent ideas—a rational, moral power, influence, that produces rational moral change.

Now some persons stop there, contending that reason, human experience, psychology, mental science, moral science, jurisprudence and revelation hint no other rational, moral power, influence, that the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit, divine Spirits, superhuman spirits, human spirits can exert on human spirits, a rational moral influence that produces rational, moral change. Is such contention correct? If it is not, where is the error?

Some persons contend that this rational, moral power, influence, exerted through ideas imparted to the human spirit by words and acts, that represent ideas—a power, influence admitted by all—exhausts the meaning of the language of the Bible in regard to the indwelling of the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit in men, the rational, moral power, influence that they exert on their spirits, in producing rational, moral change. Is this position correct? If it is not, in what is it incorrect?

Some persons refuse to go one hair's breadth beyond this rational, moral indwelling power, influence of ideas, imparted to the human spirit, by words and acts of the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit, that represent ideas, until some one so states, defines, explains any indwelling power, influence, there can be in addition to it, distinct and different from it, outside of it, that they can understand what is contended for—what is meant—know what they are expected to accept, believe and enjoy. Is not such demand reasonable and just?

And above all, until it has been proven that the language of the Bible hints that there is such indwelling power, influence, they do not question the rational, moral indwelling power, influence stated above. They challenge the assumption that there is any indwelling power, influence, in addition to, distinct and different from, outside of, such rational moral indwelling power, influence.

Now, my dear brother, standing on the Pisgah of reason, human experience, psychology, mental science, moral science, jurisprudence and revelation, we can clearly see a promised land of rational, moral indwelling, power, influence of ideas imparted to the human spirit, by words and acts of the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit, that represent ideas; a rational, moral indwelling power, influence that produces rational, moral change.

All can see, understand and comprehend that promised land. There is no dispute over it. All accept such indwelling, such power, such influence of the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit. Does our Moses claim that he has ascended a peak, higher than this Pisgah? That he sees in reason, human experience, psychology, mental science, moral science, jurisprudence, and revelation, another and most desirable promised land, an indwelling, a power, an influence exerted by the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit, on man, in man, that is in addition to, distinct and different from, outside of, above and beyond, any rational, moral indwelling, power, influence of ideas imparted to to the human spirit, by words and acts of the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit?

Now, my good brother, will you favor us with a candid, explicit answer? If there is such indwelling, power influence, what is it? Define, describe, explain it, so that one can understand what you are contending for, what you mean, what you desire us to accept, believe and enjoy.

Is this influence, indwelling, for which you contend, in any sense, degree or manner, inspiration? If it is inspiration, what does such inspiration do for men? Please tell us explicitly.

How can inspiration, how can a superhuman spirit comfort a human spirit, strengthen a human spirit, help a human spirit, aid a human spirit to understand the Scriptures, or any idea, do any rational moral work for a human spirit, that the ideas of the Scriptures do not do for it, except by revealing additional ideas or making a better expression of the ideas of the scriptures? Please give us at least a hint of such work. Do you claim that the Father, the Christ, the Holy Spirit now do such work for men? Specify a single new idea so revealed. An idea that has been better expressed? Give us a single instance of the indwelling for which you contend. A single specimen of what it has done.

For what are you contending? What do you mean? What you desire us to accept, believe and enjoy?

We patiently wait for this wonderful light, that has arisen for those who sit in darkness. Fraternally,

Clark Braden.

Is Marriage a Failure?

By John G. M. Luttenberger, M. D.

This is one of the most important questions of our present age. Nothing is so interwoven with all the five senses of human reason and responsibility as that simple and yet complex question before us.

Marriage may be divided into the following four essential qualifications:

1. Knowledge, to understand love.
2. Love, to appreciate the reciprocation of affection.
3. Adaptability, education and social habits.
4. Physical, moral and spiritual conditions.

The first qualification is knowledge. Without it, there cannot be an intelligent response to cultivate love. Love has always been regarded as the most essential element in forming the sacred tie of marriage relation.

Knowledge without love is like an ocean steamer without a compass. Love without knowledge is the most dangerous attribute possessed by the human family. Love without knowledge is powerless and sooner or later leads to a discovery of the hidden, unheard deception so frequently the legal remedy for separation. Knowledge investigates every condition in life. It calculates the unforseen by the history of the past. It begins its research at the beginning. Knowledge is that God-given quality of the intellect of man which binds man to a reasonable understanding of himself, and thus creates within him, through the influence of his Creator, the value of love.

While love is the "greatest thing" in the world, it must be carefully regarded by the limit of perfect understanding. The marriages which are failures to-day, began with as much sincerity of love and devotion as those which are considered successes. It is no uncommon occurrence that people who love each other frequently do not understand each other.

Young people frequently make mistakes in that direction. They think they know and understand each other by frequent association and short acquaintance. In many instances a gentleman would regard inquiry about his lady friends as an impertinence, while a lady is so dignified, cultured and refined as to regard such a procedure as indignity and misdemeanor.

How? Who? When? Where? are questions that are frequently asked too late. Knowledge points to the sacredness of the origin of marriage. If men and women were united together after God's plan and with God's will in this all important relation, divorces would cease to exist and love would dominate the unity of mind. Disbandment, disagreement, division and alienation are the result of disappointment, betrayal of confidence and the incorrigible stupidity of premature love. Many a young man and woman went to an early grave all on account of not rightly appreciating that "knowledge is power."

The second qualification is love. A marriage without love is a complete failure. Love is that uninterpreted virtue of the human heart that appreciatas and reciprocates the most tender impulses of genuine affection.

Love which reciprocates casts out all fear. It only sees fear in wilful ignorance. It binds the heart like that of David and Jonathan. Love produces beauty and self-respect; beauty in walk and beauty in looks; as a rule, a girl in love is at her best; it brings out the finest traits in her character; she walks more erect and is more forgiving and generous.

Young men and women must be careful about the use of language, the force of interesting conversation and the art or ability of establishing confidence.

When husband and wife are joined together in mind and heart by love, no interference of father-in-law or mother-in-law or other kin can separate such a union.

Moreover, marriage should not be regarded as a merely legal contract. The law is only a form of regulation and only a small part to perpetuate the higher standard of morality. The marriage based on love, with the ingredients of patience, kindness, generosity, humility, courtesy, unselfishness, good temper, guilelessness, courage and sincerity will never produce ill results. Love must be mutual in order to be effective. Husband and wife must unitedly stand together. Nothing must come between them. God ordained that the two should be one in mind, heart and purpose. The woman should be a soul-mate as well as a help-mate. Love will bear and forbear under all circumstances. True love sees the good and ignores the bad. What causes divisions, alienation of affection and divorce? Perhaps each individual who has tasted the cup of bitterness, deception and disappointment can answer the question better than I can answer it.

which is meeting with great favor, as it enables everyone to make ice cream in their own home with very little trouble. Everything in the package for making two quarts of delicious ice cream. If your grocer can't supply you send 25c. for two pkgs. by mail. Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry and Unflavored. Address, The Genesee Pure Food Co., Le Roy, N.Y.

I entered a home once where divisions and strife dominated and where the storms of life imperiled the home. In the corner of the home played a cat and a dog. The ill-tempered wife remarked: "See how nicely the cat and the dog dwell together in peaceful harmony!" Upon which the husband remarked: "You bind them together and watch the results!"

The third point under consideration is that of adaptability, education and social habits. To prevent the failure in marriage life, adaptability limits the many misunderstandings. All well regulated families have their own little discords. Everything before marriage is lovely, because people have not learned each other's disposition. The living happiness or sorrow and grief begins in many families after the honeymoon. Man finds out that he is really married, and the woman also recognizes the fact that she is no longer the independent "Miss do-as-you-please, and go-where-you-want-to."

The woman is the home-maker, and it is her duty to study the husband's disposition. The home life must come up to the expectancy of the man, or he will spend his time in the lodge, social circle or elsewhere. The woman must not interfere with the ambitions, desires and aggressiveness of her husband's plans. She must under all circumstances, adapt herself to the refinery of the household, educate spirit, soul and body, and hold the esteem of her husband by confidence without doubting his ability. Here rises the necessity for the two in one.

If the wife fails to keep up reading and thinking she will soon discover inharmonious conditions. The wife of a very prominent attorney told me a short time ago that she must continue to "read and study," in order to reach the heights of the intelligence of her husband, in order to keep young and entertaining.

When the husband loves art, science, literature and Christianity, and the wife is given to admire the opposite, incompatibility soon weakens the tender cords of genuine affection. The roads of alienation of affection are too numerous to be mentioned here. When the husband finds out that he has been deceived by constant interference and distrust or ill-tempered disposition and substitution of love, he concludes that God has not "joined them together," and unless conditions change, separation is inevitable. When the home is blessed with children, love and affection grow more perfect. Whenever the woman refuses to "be fruitful and multiply," love suffers irreparable loss.

If a man should fail to estimate the affection of a true-hearted wife, he will likely find his compensation with heart-broken sorrow. No one can read of the triumphs of Napoleon without thinking of the affection and love of the unbought heart of Josephine. Great men have had loving mothers and affectionate wives.

The poor man should never attempt to cultivate the love of a rich woman. Most of them have "their own way." "Poor, sincere, common love and equality, without much superiority, is far more satisfying than the secondary love" crowned with gold. Rich men and poor women generally meet with the same experiences. Love and affection may change conditions of that natural disagreement; but as in the Garden of Eden, Satan is still here demonstrating his power by poisoning the better judgment of the otherwise would-be happy husband and wife. What the devil can not do in causing troubles, trials, envy, hatred and malice, some people are ever ready to do to assist the prince of darkness by imbecility and filthy tongues.

The fourth and last point is: The physical, moral and spiritual condition.

Which one of these three conditions is the greatest, has been discussed in many lands. Why is it that so many men and women become tired of each other so soon after marriage? Is not that physique and beautiful form and graceful appearance attractive in each sex?

It has been said by specialists in anatomy and physiology that physical harmony, purity, chastity and personal knowledge of self make an inseparable unity.

Marriage is generally a failure where there is physical discord and inharmonious affection. Morality is weakened by the incompatibility of such a union. Jesus in speaking on this subject said, "Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh," Matt. 19:6. One flesh is physical harmony. Twain is another word for two, or in our modern language incompatibility. Their morals may be the best and purest. Their spiritual condition may be that of a saint; but what will be the results if there is physical defect?

This is something that each man and woman has to decide. No priest, preacher, doctor or lawyer can change such inharmonious conditions. No court in the land is capable and prudent enough to settle the physical deformity and degenerate condition in existence. Occasionally there are men and women who can overlook the physical conditions entirely; but most of the human race have the tendency to admire physical appearance. How can any man love any young lady he never saw? How can any beautiful young maiden admire a handsome gentleman she never met?

If the civil authority would understand what it ought to understand, there would be fewer marriages and divorces would not be so numerous. There are nearly 3,000 courts in this country that grant licenses to marry, and equally as many to grant divorce. Annually they grant from 42,000 to 47,000 divorces. Or in twenty years there have been granted in the United States 329,000 divorces.

The time will come when marriage shall be regarded as a union, and not a contract; when the union will be based on a physical examination by a competent physician before the license is granted. Many a woman who went to a premature grave, and many a man who went to disgrace and ruin, would enjoy happiness and home and companionship, if the law had been based on practical knowledge.

Moreover, most marriages outside of the church are failures. To send conscience on a short vacation by ignoring the church and favoring the law, means often too much of the legal to be really legal. Some law-makers have not only endeavored to improve on the law of Moses and Christ, but have become legalized law-breakers on the subject of matrimony. No spiritually-minded man or woman will object to a Christian marriage and to the advice given above. Is not the real remedy qualification for matrimony?

The Care of Babies.

A very useful and interesting pamphlet has been issued by the Illinois State Board of Health on the care of babies in summer. While this pamphlet is sent to physicians, it is prepared rather for home distribution, and will be mailed to anybody who will send a request to Dr. J. A. Egan, the secretary, at Springfield. In addition to practical advice on the care of infants there is valuable information for mothers. The explanations and instructions are presented to the best effect by means of numerous illustrations.

It may seem preposterous that boards of health should discover a necessity for this kind of education. But the reason for adopting such a policy is one of most vital concern. Throughout the summer the mortality is not adult mortality, but infant mortality. Summer is, for infants, the period of suffering and death. The illnesses peculiar to babies in hot weather are, when they do not result fatally, detrimental to future health.

"Statistics have demonstrated," says a circular bulletin issued by the Illinois Board of Health, "that from one-fourth to one-third of all babies born fail to live to the beginning of the second year of life. It is not the heat alone that is responsible for this high mortality. By far the greatest number die from improper food, improper feeding or inability to digest and assimilate the food given."

The care of the infant decides more than the matter of survival and resistance; it bears upon the physical strength and the health of the person in later life. Many bodily ills could be traced to that neglect or indifference, in infancy, which was due to ignorance of the rules of health. . . . .

That the proper care of infants would reduce the mortality and tend to improve the adult health is a prospect which should increase interest in authoritative advice. What mothers do not know about the care and health of themselves and their children, physicians do know; and what the physicians know is of particular usefulness, because it is knowledge gathered from many sources in regular practice. The summer is the time for devoting extra care to infants. And that care should be regulated in the manner propounded in such pamphlets as those which the ever-alert and ever busy Illinois State Board of Health is circulating in the homes.—St. Louis Republic.

Summer Toilers.

As I write I am aware of friends on whose faces rests a shadow of doubt or sadness. To them the summer season brings the hardest, most unremitting labor of the year. To their country homes throng boarders from the cities, paying guests, whose rooms must be kept in order, and whose three meals a day mean an unending round of care until the season ends. Mountains of biscuit; gallons of tea and coffee, a constant succession of roasting, boiling, broiling and baking will testify to their skill and their faculty for turning off work during the weeks that their visitors are spending in pleasure. Every woman who takes summer boarders owes it to herself and her family to have an autumn holiday when the boarders leave. She should plan for it. For her there will come bright days in the early autumn when the city people have packed their trunks and gone home; let her make the best of them.—Mrs. Sangster, in Woman's Home Companion for July.

Bees as Acrobats.

When wax is needed, a certain number of self-elected citizens gorge with honey and hang up in chains or curtains, each bee clinging by her front feet to the hind feet of the one above her, like Japanese acrobats, and there they remain, sometimes for two days, until the wax scales appear pushed out from every pocket. It is not hard to understand that, since much honey is needed for the manufacture of wax, a bee after filling with the raw material would produce much more wax by keeping quiet than by using any of the gorged honey for energy in moving about and working. But the necessity of "holding hands" while this work goes on must ever remain to us another occult evidence of the close relations in the bee commune.—Country Life in America.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week with the Woodneys.

Arthur did not yet know that old Mr. Acre looked upon himself as the king of France, but he understood that his mind was unbalanced, and he made it his study to do nothing to thwart the other's wishes. The old gentleman was in high spirits. He recounted to Worth Acre the adventures of the evening. "It has been one of my great days," he exclaimed. "The mob stormed outside the walls. The murmur of their voices, the trampling of their horses, and the roars of the leaders would have moved a heart of iron. But our good courier was not to be frightened. He stood at the barricade ready to defend me with the last drop of his blood."

Arthur understood that he was the courier referred to; but he did not know how he ought to act to sustain the character. He looked doubtfully at the blacksmith. "To supper!" cried the latter, leading the way to the dining-room. As they passed through the kitchen, Worth Acre said to Aunt Tabby, "Arthur will eat with us, Aunt Tabby. But of course he will dine upon a separate table."

"Dey ain't no other table," said Aunt Tabby, showing the whites of her eyes to Arthur in an unfriendly manner.

"I think I can find him one," returned Worth cheerfully. "You know that little table in my room; it will do."

"Dey ain't no tablecloth for dat table."

"We'll spread a nice, clean newspaper on it."

"Dey ain't enough cooked for so many."

"He shall have half of my supper," exclaimed the old gentleman. "He has rendered me faithful services, this day." Aunt Tabby angrily stirred the fire and rattled her pans. They went into the next room and Worth carried in the little table. The other table was already set for two and Worth busied himself at the china-closet, finding dishes for the second. On the larger table was a dish of smoking steak, another of mashed potatoes browned in the form of a pyramid with a golden lake of butter on its summit, and another of fried apples with thin little layers of bacon crisped and curling along the margin. A coffee-pot smoked at the head of the table, near which stood a bowl of bonnyclabber cheese, a stand of strawberry preserves and a pitcher of milk. Wait! That isn't all. At the side was a great round bowl with vines and butterflies all up and down the outside, and fragrant ripe blackberries inside, crusted with sugar; not the blackberries that stand hard and firm between the teeth and leave a sour revenge behind them, but the soft, yielding, melting kind which does all it can to be as good as strawberries. Aunt Tabby entered with hot biscuits, brown and light, ready to come apart at the pressure of a finger.

"Whar must I sit dese biscuits?" demanded the black woman, looking with a frowning brow from one table to the other.

"Just give them to me," said Worth pleasantly.

Aunt Tabby gave him the plate and went out muttering, "Now I got all dem dishes to wash!" She slammed the door.

"Don't pay any attention to Aunt Tabby," said the blacksmith calmly; "if she's spoiled it's our raising, so we mustn't blame her."

Arthur was almost bewildered by the food Worth Acre heaped upon his plate. He had not seen such a meal for years. And yet he could eat hardly anything. He sat at his little table apart from the others, but in such a manner that the blacksmith could face him. Old Mr. Acre was still discussing his narrow escape. But Arthur was thinking about that cock he had buried under the walk before Mr. Woodney's yard. He would never forget that cock—tall, long-legged, young, all white but for a black, proud tail. Alas, how that tail had dragged in the dust to the burial! While old Mr. Acre was telling about other barricades and other mobs, and while the blacksmith was humoring his grandfather by showing never-failing interest, Arthur was going over the tragedy of the morning. For the hundredth time he told himself he was not to blame; the cock had been scratching in the new-set grass of a hostile yard; it had been killed by the aimless throwing of a little clod; Arthur had gone to the Misses Day to borrow a spade—had knocked upon the door—had walked in full view of the windows. Ah, but why had he not told about it afterwards? Why did he not speak up now, and tell Worth Acre? How mingled is the good and evil in one's life! How hard to tell where praise should end and censure begin! Worth was greatly troubled to see that the little musician had no appetite. Arthur ate what he could to please his friend. The appetite of the blacksmith was marvelous. Nothing could long stand before it. The pyramid sank to the level of the plain, the beefsteak vanished, the biscuits seemed to the bewildered eyes of the conscience-stricken youth to roll after each other like revolving wheels. Everything was presently gone but a little strawberry preserves and Worth Acre. Even the old gentleman had disappeared—not, however, down the capacious throat of Worth Acre, but into a small chamber next the dining-room where the old gentleman slept. "We will go to our room, now," said the blacksmith, "though I am sorry you couldn't eat anything. Grandpa always goes to bed as soon as he's had supper. He says eating gives him strength to get to sleep. It takes more strength to sleep than some people imagine."

They went into the court and entered Worth Acre's bedroom. As on previous evenings, Worth drew his big arm-chair into the doorway that the summer draught might cool his heated body. "I'm mighty anxious for those health magazines to come," he remarked. "They're full of funny little gymnastics and one-two-three exercises for generating blood. You've got to eat more, young man, if you expect to swing on to this world very long. But what do you think of the old gentleman?"

Arthur with difficulty detached his thoughts from the white cock. "Sir?"

"My grandfather imagines himself King Louis XVI of France," Worth explained, slowly rising and going toward the desk that stood in the corner of the room next the great bed. "He thinks he's being kept here till the day of execution. He enjoys it immensely." He opened the desk and began rattling some papers.

"King of France!" echoed Arthur. "What a curious notion—and for an American!"

"Oh, well, it might as well be that notion as any other. I like to see a man live up to his notion, whatever it is. I live up to mine—it's blacksmithing. He lives up to his handsomely—and I want you to stay with yours and be a great musician some day."

HIMALYA

(THE KOLA COMPOUND)

The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific, proving that

HAY-FEVER

—AND—

ASTHMA can be CURED.

Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Clossen, 126 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes. Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write today to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York.

He came back to his chair, carrying a large photograph. Arthur ventured, "I heard him ask about his wife and children."

The blacksmith uttered a sound akin to a grunt and placed the photograph upon his knee so that the lamplight could fall upon it. He gazed down thoughtfully.

"Of course," said Arthur, "he imagines his wife is still living. He would have to think that or he couldn't be Louis XVI. Otherwise he'd have to be some other king."

"Well, it oughtn't to strain him to believe it," returned Worth, "for she's living, all right, and a son and daughter, too, as far as that goes."

"Oh, Mr. Acre!" exclaimed Arthur in amazement. "But I understood—But Miss Lizzie Day told Mace that you are all he has in the world."

"Guess that's true," said Worth briefly. "Come here and look at this picture, my boy." Arthur came shyly to his side and looked down upon the photograph of a young lady dressed in white, with a white roll of parchment in one hand and a basket of flowers in the other. "I like that face," he said, impulsively. "It is so like what I want, sometimes. I seem to have seen her somewhere."

"Yes," said Worth Acre softly, still looking at the picture as he held it upon his knee, "you've struck the right words. Her face is just that something every good man wants. Shall I tell you about her? Sit down and be comfortable. She looked this way twenty years ago. She was 18. This is her graduating dress. There was a young fellow in town who just loved her—that's all! He was a blacksmith, like me. We were intimate, that blacksmith and I. He told me all about it. They were engaged to be married. But she had folks. There's nothing like having folks for having trouble." The blacksmith spoke these short sentences with little pauses between, all the time looking at the picture. "Her folks objected to the blacksmith's trade. Wouldn't have her marrying, with all her education and refinement, unless she married a lawyer or doctor or something like that. My friend stood by his guns. He was a blacksmith and a good one, and he couldn't be anything else with half a heart. Then what do you think Clarabella St. Clair did? She married him—that's what she did! Would you have thought it?"

Arthur looked at the picture again and shook his head. "No, she looks so gentle and mild and—and like she would never do anything to hurt her family."

"Well," said Worth emphatically, "what about hurting her lover? Wouldn't she care about that?"

"As long as he was just her lover," said Arthur, "he wouldn't be in the family, you know. She don't look to me like a lady who would marry and hurt her family."

"She did marry though!" cried Worth obstinately. "She married my friend, Clarabella St. Clair did. She left her sisters and the rest of her folks and went to live with him in the back of his shop, and she thought the sound of his hammer was like music. She just put aside all of her life that would have stood in the way. And she was happy. You needn't think she ever regrets leaving all her old life. She never does regret!" cried Worth (as if expecting Arthur to contradict. "No, sir! She's contented. Let me tell you why: She loves him. Haven't they lived together now twenty years? She's thirty-eight, but she looks just like this picture. Talk about married-life being the thing! You ought to see them together. He is as proud of her as if she were a queen. And in spite of his trade, in spite of his leather apron and sooty hands, she's as proud of him as if he were—as if he were Louis XVI, barricades and all." Worth Acre was glowing with the energy not to say combativeness of his speech. He looked at the youth as if to ask, "What have you to say to all this, sir?"

"I suppose it is her love," said Arthur softly. "When we love, nothing else matters. Where do they live?"

"They live—" Worth paused a moment, then said, "they live in Reevetown of this state." He gave a sudden chuckle. "I go to see her every once in awhile. Well, I should think so! Man, you ought to see their daughter. She's about your age. She's the prettiest girl in Missouri, and she adores me; calls me 'Uncle Worth', you know and pshaw! you might say I nursed her from a baby; looks like this picture; the image of her mother Clarabella. She has an old-fashioned name—Lizzie. I like it, though. They wanted to name her 'Lizzie.' I said, 'Just go ahead, those old names mean the most, anyhow. I never cared much for Clarabella.' "

"That reminds me," cried Arthur, "that this picture is something like Miss Lizzie Day. Are they related?"

"Oh, no, indeed! No kin at all. Miss Lizzie Day never heard of my friend, I promise you. But I like to talk about him and his wife and my god-daughter, Lizzie—I've never talked much about them. But I'll use you, now that you're to stay here."

"I would like to ask," said Arthur, "where old Mr. Acre's wife and children live."

"His wife and daughter are in New York," said Worth absently, "and his son lives in Denver. They're fine people, as fine as Clarabella St. Clair's. They all knew each other. But they've had nothing to do with Clarabella and my friend since the marriage. Clarabella has the peacefulest blue eyes you ever imagined. And when they are all lit up and sparkling with curious little points of light—like the sun shining on a pool when the wind is blowing—she looks that way when the gate clicks and her husband comes home from his work. For they no longer live in the shop, dear me, no! He has done pretty well in the world, shoeing horses and mending wagons. And never lonesome—what do you think of that? Pshaw! how could he be lonesome with her? No sitting alone at night brooding and remembering! What's the use his remembering things? There she sits to look at now—nothing in the past is sweeter than that! Why, before you came here, I passed most of my nights before bedtime, here in the doorway in my armchair, remembering—drawing up old ideas from the past—just like letting down a hook into a well; I'd lower my memory-rope and bring up whatever it caught. Sometimes nothing but old tin cups; sometimes little words and smiles; sometimes I could get back almost entire a feeling of twenty years ago. I'd close my eyes and see Clarabella reading her graduating essay on 'Hope.' And I'd feel her hand—she liked me, you understand. Well, my friend the blacksmith never has to content himself with such dreaming and pining. Why, man, she's his wife! You understand?—his wife! The folks tried to prevent it, but they couldn't." Worth spoke so exultantly of the heroine of his story being the blacksmith's wife that Arthur was thrilled strangely, and without at all understanding why, his eyes were suddenly filled with tears. He gazed through them as through a thick mist at the eloquent face and the glowing brown eyes of his companion. "She is his wife," repeated Worth Acre dreamily, "and that means that he is the happiest man alive. And so I might have been, my boy, had I been that blacksmith, and had Clarabella been as brave and true as I have said." He rose and taking a last look at the photograph, replaced it in his desk. His last words confused Arthur, who had divided his thoughts between the blacksmith and his own hidden secret of the slain fowl. There was something in the other's manner to suggest that the account of Clarabella St. Clair was partly real and partly idealistic. But whether or not all was literally as his host had told it, Arthur was sensitive enough to divine a great loneliness in Worth Acre's life, and he felt a passionate desire to bring some warmth of comradeship to his benefactor.

COLLEGE CATALOGS

Campbell-Hagerman College, Lexington, Ky.—This year's catalog is a decided improvement over that of last year, as no doubt the school itself will show improvement the coming session over the first year's work. There are some two dozen in the faculty and the school term begins September 13.

Christian College.—This old-established institution puts out the most model catalog of all teaching institutions that we have yet seen. It is replete with the information desired by students and their parents, and is abundantly illustrated to show the life of the college. The faculty consists of thirty-four members and the next term begins September 18. Address Mrs. W. T. Moore, Columbia, Mo.

Cotner University represents our cause in the west and promises to be more useful next year than ever before. The faculty numbers twenty and the session begins September 11. Address W. P. Aylsworth, Chancellor, Bethany, Neb.

Drury College.—The thirty-second annual catalog of this college, of which the editor of the Christian-Evangelist is a trustee, has been received. The college is situated at Springfield, Mo., and is a co-educational institution which is doing good work. It is preeminently a Christian college, though under the control of no denominational organization. Full particulars can be found in the catalog which will be sent on application.

Hamilton College's thirty-seventh annual announcement shows greater perfection than last year's catalog. The school itself has also shown improvement during the session just closed. The staff of instructors numbers some two dozen. The school will open September 11. Address Mrs. Luella St. Clair, Lexington, Ky.

Missouri Christian College has had a most successful year and looks forward to improvement in the future. Its faculty numbers eleven, while four of our well-known brethren are included as non-resident lecturers. The session will open September 12. Address E. L. Barham, Camden Point, Mo.

William Woods College.—This year's catalog presents us with a very admirable portrait of Dr. W. S. Woods who has done so much for the institution. His little granddaughter is included in the picture. It is the best catalog William Woods has ever put out. The faculty numbers about twenty and the session will begin September 12. Address Pres. J. B. Jones, Fulton, Mo.

For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

The Peace Conference.

The Japanese and Russian plenipotentiaries have been duly received at Portsmouth, N. H., and have begun their deliberations. A favorable impression was produced by their cordial manners. It had been expected that they would withdraw themselves in dignified and mysterious seclusion, but they have shown no hesitancy about moving among the guests of the hotel where they are stopping. This is important, for the study of the facial expression of the envoys is about the only source of information as to the progress of the negotiations. In this way it is learned that the Japanese representatives look as though they are determined to make no concessions from their predetermined demands—Japanese usually look immovable, do they not?—and M. Witte exhibits a cheerfulness which is supposed to reflect his confidence that a settlement favorable to Russia will be effected. This is interesting but not very decisive. It is also given out—on other evidence than physiognomy, we believe—that the Russian envoys have given it out that they will accept no terms involving the payment of indemnity or the cession of territory. If that is really the case, the peace conference will not find much to talk about, for it is scarcely conceivable that Japan will be so modest as to be satisfied with the suzerainty over Korea and the fishing rights of Sakhalin Island. Of course it must be realized, and doubtless Japan does realize, that Russia is not flat on her back, as France was at the close of the Franco-Prussian war. The present war has been in the main, as Russia claims, a colonial war, scarcely touching the empire itself. But, as we have said before, the points which were at issue when the war began have been decided wholly against Russia, and she ought to pay the costs of the case.

Yellow Fever.

The yellow fever quarantine has developed trouble almost as serious as the fever itself. The friction between Louisiana and Mississippi has been fairly smoothed over by the recession of the authorities of the latter state from their position, and the danger of a clash of arms between the militia of these two states seems to be wholly passed. But as the fever continues without abatement, an almost chaotic condition is developing within Louisiana. Transportation has been greatly impeded by the foolish and unnecessary restrictions created by local health boards, citizens' mass meetings, etc. The state board of health, by a proclamation issued last week, prohibited any town or parish from refusing admission to persons from non-infected regions holding proper health certificates, or to persons from infected communities who have spent the required six days in a detention camp. Steamboats and trains which have not violated state quarantine regulations must not be interfered with. Civil action will be taken against persons who designed this proclamation and if necessary the militia will be called out. It is not to be wondered at that people get panicky in a time of epidemic, but it is time for the people in the region liable to be visited by yellow fever to learn a few of the more elementary facts about that disease and the means by which it is communicated. There is a good deal of wholly gratuitous trouble made about the matter of quarantine. Perhaps if the federal forces could occupy Louisiana as they did Cuba we could succeed in cleaning up and eradicating yellow fever from New Orleans as from Havana.

Chinese Exclusion.

So illogical and indefensible in theory and so confusing and absurd in practice is the present Chinese exclusion act that a revision of it is inevitable. We have not been able to take seriously the threatened boycott of American goods in China. That might develop into an embarrassing matter for certain American merchants, but the federal government is not in the habit of allowing itself to be coerced by boycotts, either at home or abroad. The effect of the boycott is more apt to be reactionary than otherwise. The exclusion of the Chinese is supposed to be primarily in the interest of the protection of the labor market, especially on the Pacific coast, against the competition of the "pauper labor" of the Orient. That a certain element of organized labor does clamorously demand the continuance of this policy is obvious. It may be doubted, however, whether a frank expression of opinion among all the working men of the coast would not reveal a preponderance of sentiment quite other than what has generally been supposed to exist. The industrial yellow peril of the west is quite as much of a bogie as the military yellow peril of Europe. The chief peril is that we shall make ourselves ridiculous in our treatment—and that we have been doing. There are two important defects in our present legislation on the subject. One is that it seems impossible to enforce it properly, the result being the exclusion of high-class Chinese, men of education and wealth, who ought, by all the rules of international decency and plain common sense, to be admitted. The other defect is that, even if administered perfectly, the law is unjust, one-sided and preposterous. A new treaty on the question of immigration between America and China is now under consideration. The draft of the treaty, which is supposed to embody the views of the Chinese government, provides that laborers from either country shall be excluded from the other, and that Chinese subjects and American citizens who are not laborers shall be permitted to pass freely from one country to the other. The term "laborer" is defined so as to make it almost equivalent to unskilled laborer. This is a great improvement on the present plan. It has the shining merit—which every good rule should have—of working both ways. There may or may not be any economic reason why China should wish to exclude American laborers. If our frequent boast that well-paid American labor, by reason of its superior efficiency, is really the cheapest labor in the world, is true, then perhaps the Chinese have as much to gain by protection from cheap (because efficient) American labor as we have to gain by protection from cheap (because underpaid) Chinese labor. Anyway, China is entitled to "save her face" by excluding somebody if certain of her people are to be excluded.

Federal Insurance Laws.

It is always more or less perilous to suggest an extension of federal prerogatives, for the "states rights" feeling is still strong in a large element of the country, but there is a good deal to be said in favor of federal supervision of insurance. It is stated that a report favoring such a movement is to be presented at the approaching meeting of the American Bar Association. The problem is in substance the same as that of federal control of corporations. It is obvious that, under state supervision, there will be various degrees of strictness in control and that the policyholder, unless he is a specialist in insurance, is always apt to be more or less uncertain as to the exact protection which the law gives him. On the other hand, federal control means greater uniformity, either for good or ill. But there's the rub. It may be for ill. If the system of inspection, after it has been unified, fails through incapacity or dishonesty of its administrators, the ruin is correspondingly greater. It is not likely that all the state legislatures and all the state insurance inspectors will unite in one unanimous conspiracy of weak legislation and incompetent or corrupt administration, but it is equally improbable that they will ever all be thoroughly wise and able at once in their handling of insurance matters. Federal control would produce results either consideraby better or notably worse. Apart from its constitutional bearings (which must be settled by the supreme court and not by the newspapers), the issue between state and federal control of corporations, insurance, divorce, etc., resolves itself into the question whether we shall follow the old adage and not put all our eggs in one basket, or shall take Pudd'nhead Wilson's revision of the motto—"Put all your eggs in one basket, and watch that basket."

The Pope and America.

In receiving a delegation of American pilgrims recently, the Pope, after graciously permitting each member of the party to kiss his hand, declared that he loved all Americans, even Protestants, because of the liberty which the church enjoys in this country. The Vatican never can get quite used to our large and liberal way of treating religions in America. It is so perfectly simple that it is a wonder that it is not readily comprehended. Our government simply has nothing to do with the churches. There is no occasion for special gratitude or affection on the part of the Pope. We do not give liberty to the Catholic church in America because we believe it is a good thing or have any partiality for it, but because we believe in complete liberty of conscience and worship. If the outcome is gratifying to His Holiness, the thing for him to do is not to declare his gratitude and love for Americans, but to express his approval of the principle of separation between church and state, to which is due the condition for which he is so grateful. The trouble is that if he should do this he would be giving up the fight for special privileges for the Catholic church in France and Italy and elsewhere. What the Vatican really wants is not the universal extension of complete religious freedom—such as it professes to admire in this country—but special privileges for Romanism wherever they can be gotten, and religious liberty everywhere else. In the interview above referred to, the Pope also said, "America has a good right to be called the eldest daughter of the church." We waive the right, if we have it. We don't want to be called the eldest daughter of the church—at least of the Catholic church, which is the only church Pius recognizes. Indeed, America is so far from acknowledging any filial obligation to the church that it gives the same treatment (that is to say, no treatment at all,) to all sects alike, Catholic, Mormon, Methodist, Buddhist, Baptist and all the others, good, bad and indifferent. If Mr. Pius pleases, will he kindly be less patronizing in his references to America.

Law versus Business.

The answer of the Santa Fe railroad in the suit filed against it for contempt of court in violating the injunction against granting rebates, contains some remarkably interesting features. It tells the story of the rebate business so far as that road is concerned. It denies that rebates were granted after the injunction was issued, but admits that the road had been granting secret rebates before that time. The granting of rebates on freight rates was unlawful even then, but the competition was keen, it was strongly suspected that other roads were secretly giving rebates to large customers, and so, "to protect its business and get its share of the freight," the same tactics were adopted. It is claimed that the practice was discontinued when the injunction was issued. The Santa Fe is not a sinner above others in this matter, and there is little occasion to single it out for criticism. It was simply practicing a policy which is prevalent in the business world. The theory is that a corporation's first duty is "to protect its business and get its share of the freight," to meet competition and prosper. As a rule, of course, it should obey the laws, especially when these do not interfere with business, but business is to be considered first. It is the modern form of the old fallacy that "a man must live." The assumption of that adage always was that a man was justified in doing anything which might be necessary to enable him to live. In fact, it was doubtless coined as an excuse for actions which could be excused only on the plea of necessity. The genealogy of the dictum runs straight back to Satan's famous remark, "All that a man hath will he give for his life."

Female Imperialism.

The following contribution to the subject of the influence of women on politics and government, in the New York Mail, was suggested by an article in the Paris Nouvelle Revue, the writer of which declares that the world-wide ambition of American women and the complete devotion of American men to the fulfillment of their wishes, are the springs which move us in all our imperial expansion. It quite carries us back to the days of chivalry to read that "Yankee imperialism describes circles of warlike conquest and moral influence about the earth," in order that the world may be laid at the feet of the American woman. The Mail enters into the spirit of the thing with the following comment:

> There is much to bear out this view, when one looks around him. Every one knows that the German entente was established when Miss Roosevelt christened the kaiser's yacht. The St. Petersburg journalists suspect that her visit to Japan is the first step to a formal alliance between Asia and America. We went to war with Spain and acquired our "empire" on the seas because we were indignant over the imprisonment of Miss Evangeline Cisneros. The annexation of Hawaii was due to a desire to make an American citizen of Queen Liliuokalani. Our chief trouble in digging the Panama canal has been to find an engineer whose wife would let him live on the isthmus.
> Let us get away from these small specifications. Our army is kept up to full numbers because the feminine enthusiasm for a uniform inspires American boys to enlist or to go to West Point. Our navy exists in order to exchange hospitalities with the gracious women of Newport and Bar Harbor. The ambition of our bright married women induces men to give up business and embark on a public career at Washington. It is the embattled women of this country who are conducting "the American invasion" of the world.

All this may be true, but just the same the number of American men who will give their seats to women in the street car continues to be painfully small.

What Should Be Taught?

There occasionally arises a popular discussion as to what should be taught in the public schools. About half, if not more, of the participants in such a discussion will be substantial business men who lament the decadence of modern education and sigh for the return of the good old days when the blue-back spelling book was the chief instrument of civilization, and every school went into session as a spelling-bee on Friday afternoon. "What we want," they say, "is more imphasis on the three Rs and less of the fads and frills that encumber the modern school curriculum." Of course reading and writing must always be a fundamental part of elementary education, but these are only the tools and not the thing itself. The modern theory of education is surely right when it maintains that the child is entitled to some of the real joys and beauties of education before he has waded through eight years of disciplinary grind and learned to hate it all. Here is the educational value of that nature study, that work with the birds and flowers, which has its economic value in the production of larger and more profitable crops.

Pressing Toward the Mark.

It is a good plan in every great and worthy undertaking to set marks for ourselves and strive to reach them. Such a mark is fixed for us in our Christian calling in the life and character of Christ. Of that, however, we are not now to speak. We have in mind the marks we set before us in our Christian work to which we hope to arrive at certain times. For instance, the brethren having in charge the Church Extension department of our missionary work have fixed the mark of a half million dollars to be reached this year, that is to say, by the close of the September offering. This will make a very handsome beginning in a great enterprise. When we reach it we will feel that we have attained a solid footing where we may gird ourselves for the million mark. It is by no means an impossible or a difficult mark to reach—this half million by September next. We have already passed $450,000 and are pressing on the last stretch for the shining mark of a half million. There is every indication that it will be reached.

Some of the reasons for this confident prophecy are as follows: Many of our churches who have been standing aloof from this good work or gave only occasionally are going to become regulars and fall into line to round out that half million. And then the churches that constitute the "Old Guard" are going to put forth a little more effort this year in order that we may not be disappointed in reaching the mark designated. And finally, we should not wonder if a number of men of means, seeing what a splendid investment Church Extension offers, will give amounts sufficient for the establishment of "loan funds."

It is to be regretted that on account of the convention coming earlier than usual we shall not have the inspiration of the announcement of having reached the half million at San Francisco, but the best substitute for that will be the assurance from signs which are multiplying that it will be reached by the September offering. We are giving considerable space this week to this important work, because we believe it to be very vitally connected with our future permanent growth and development. We invite attention to what is herein said by the Church Extension secretary, and by other contributors, and we sincerely trust that the watchword, "A Half Million Dollars for Church Extension by the close of September," will be adopted by all the churches, and that under its inspiration we may reach and pass in triumph the mark which has been set before us—A Half Million for Church Extension, by the close of our Current Missionary Year.

The Significance of National Conventions.

We often overlook the significance of familiar things. Our national conventions come every year and there is danger that this very frequency may blind us to their deepest meaning. The coming together of busy men and women from all parts of our great country to spend a week together in council pertaining to the advancement of the kingdom of God is a phenomenon worthy of being studied. What is the significance of our annual National Christian Missionary Convention?

In the first place it is a refutation of the charge sometimes made that Christianity is a waning power, and that old-fashioned faith in the divinity of Christ and in the inspiration and authority of the Scriptures is a rare thing. There will be gathering in San Francisco this week and part of next, thousands of men and women who have traveled long distances at their own expense, to attend and participate in a convention that has no pecuniary rewards or earthly honors to distribute, but whose sole concern is to extend the reign of Christ over this earth. Nothing short of genuine faith in a living, personal God, who has revealed himself through his own Son, and is carrying forward the work of human redemption through the agency of his Holy Spirit, could have brought these people from their homes to attend such a convention.

Such a convention attests the social character of Christianity. It draws men together in associated effort for the promotion of human good. It recognizes the value of unity and of co-operation, both on economic and moral grounds. If Christianity were a religion in which every man cared for himself alone, without the altruistic impulse, such a convention would be impossible. Christ's religion teaches the strong to bear the burdens of the weak, and lays the burden of obligation on those who have received to impart to those who have not. In other words, it has horizontal as well as vertical dimensions. It shows its love for God in its efforts to save and elevate men.

Such a convention, made up of representatives of a religious movement that discards all authoritative human creeds and accepts Christ as its only Leader, and the New Testament as its only guide, is a demonstration of the practicability of building churches upon the New Testament basis and having them held together in a united, aggressive movement by the cohesive power of a common faith in a common Lord. This may seem now to be a commonplace truth, but the time was, not long ago, when the practicability of such an undertaking was stoutly denied, and any such attempt was characterized as utopian and impracticable. But in the presence of such a religious movement as that of the Disciples of Christ, whose representatives are gathering in San Francisco this week, with their membership of a million and a quarter, with their missionary stations girdling the globe, with their missionary societies, religious journals, colleges and benevolent institutions, such a denial is impossible.

It is not without significance that this great convention of one of the leading religious bodies of the country meets for the first time in its history on the western shore of our great continent. It accentuates the fact that the seeds of religious reformation have been carried thither along the lines of migration and by the heroic labors of the home missionaries, until all along the coast states there are numerous churches holding up the banner of religious reform and pleading for a return to the simplicity, unity and power of the Christianity of Christ. No more united are the sister states of our federal union in one great nationality than the churches east and west, north and south, in a common effort to unite the people of God on a common basis of faith, and to extend the saving power of the gospel to all nations.

The convention meets at a time of unprecedented activity in all lines of social and political reform and an unequaled exposure of corruption and dishonesty in municipal government, and in many of the great industrial enterprises of the day. Such a convention at such a time emphasizes the truth that it is only the religion of Christ that can purify our industrial and political life and establish righteousness and justice in all our private and public enterprises. The enactment of just laws and the enforcement of these laws have an important part to play in these needed reformations, but beneath them all, and at the bottom of all, is the purifying and ennobling influence of Christianity, for the advancement of which this great convention has assembled.

Questions and Answers.

1. Do you claim that any influence of the Holy Spirit exerted now is inspiration?

2. Do you make any difference between such inspiration and inspiration in the apostolic age? If so, what difference?

3. My position: (a) No inspiration since the apostolic age such as was exerted on human spirits in Bible times.

(b) Spirit alone in inspiration and revelation.

(c) Word alone in the work that religion now does for men. Clark Braden.

1. Certainly not, in the sense in which we speak of the inspiration of the Scriptures.

2. Most assuredly, we do make a difference. It is a difference both in degree and in purpose. The apostles were inspired for a special purpose, namely, to convey to the world an adequate report of Christ's life, teaching and works, and to establish his church, and they received a supply of the Spirit sufficient to qualify them for that work. This work does not need to be repeated in our age, and hence no gift of the Spirit adapted to that work is needed. But of course Christians are now inspired in a secondary sense, to the extent that they are under the influence and guidance of the Holy Spirit; but never to the degree that justifies any rejection of, or departure from, the revelation given us through the apostles, which is our authoritative guide.

3. As to the three statements in which Brother Braden states his position, the first is of course accepted. As to the second and third they are almost incredible, as coming from a teacher in Israel of the age, experience, and ability of the writer. To assert that the apostles were not inspired by the marvelous life, teaching and works of Jesus, and that the Holy Spirit did not use these in preparing the apostles for their work, is wholly unbelievable, being contrary both to reason and Scripture. No less incredible is the statement that the Holy Spirit now does not work through the lives of others as Jesus positively affirmed (Matt. 5:16), through God's providences, and human experiences, as well as through the word. We are glad, however, that Brother Braden has stated his position so clearly and baldly that no one can misunderstand it. It is this position that we antagonize, believing its ultimate fruit to be a dead legalism that is as loveless and lifeless as the literalism of the Pharisees in the time of Christ.

Notes and Comments.

Bishop O'Connor, a Roman Catholic bishop of New Jersey, in a late baccalaureate sermon advised that "every woman, no matter what her wealth or position in society, should at least for a time become self-supporting in some field of modern usefulness." He suggested teaching as "the noblest profession and that in which she might be of most use to humanity," but adds this healthful warning which is as good for Protestants as for Roman Catholics:

> Above all things, I would warn you against becoming that greatest of modern pests, the idle society woman, who devotes her time to the performance of what she calls social duties or following after social pleasures.

Some men and some religious papers look out at the world and at human life through a very small key-hole. The Christian Leader and The Way of Cincinnati, has an article on missionary work which begins with this sentence: "Until fourteen years ago no missionary work had been done by the churches in foreign lands." We supposed there had been at least a century of mission work in foreign lands by the churches, but the lens through which this scribe is looking does not admit to his vision anything further back than fourteen years. How people impoverish their own lives by lack of vision, because they have shut themselves up in narrow little prison houses, made of their own prejudices and uncharitableness!

Speaking to the question, "Are sinners' prayers heard?" the Sunday-school Times says: "God does not answer prayer because men deserve it. If personal merit were the condition of the answer, prayer would be a discouraging procedure. * * * God's answering of prayer is only part of his unexplained, undeserved, ever-outpouring love for his children. To connect it with the merit of the one who prays is to miss utterly its nature and its richest blessing. Our Lord's answer to the dying thief who prayed to the Savior in the spirit of penitence and obtained forgiveness indicates the Father's attitude to the prayer of the sinner." The mistake has been with many to substitute prayer for obedience in the case of the unconverted. In correcting this error let us be careful not to limit God's mercy in hearing the cry of the penitent who is seeking divine guidance and strength to come into his kingdom. A penitent is sure to be a praying man and he will not defer his prayer until he has been formally admitted into the church or kingdom of God.

Current Religious Thought.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate, in an editorial entitled "Returning to the Faith," says:

> There is a revulsion in Germany against the advanced opinions of the theological radicals who have gone so far that they reject the inspiration of the scriptures, the doctrine of the atonement and the divinity of Christ, thus removing altogether the foundation of reasonable Christian faith. A few weeks ago a call was issued by the adherents of what are termed "the older principles of faith," for a meeting to be held to institute a propaganda against the radicalism of the universities and advanced clergy generally. The result was a surprise, for thousands of clergymen from all parts of Germany attended the meeting and no church nor hall in Berlin was found large enough to accommodate the gathering. Its proceedings were important, for its members took a determined stand against the radicalism of the universities and passed a series of resolutions affirming the orthodox principles of Christianity.

The Herald and Presbyter gives the following piece of advice to the presidents and professors of the colleges who at this season of the year are giving lectures and courses of instruction in summer schools:

> Allow us to remind you that your great work is to make men and women out of the boys and girls who have been entrusted to your care. With this supremely in view, parents have sent the members of their household to be under your care for several years in the most important and impressible part of their lives. You will be judged by the results of your labors. It is not sufficient that you hear so many recitations in the course of the year, any more than it would be for a farmer to simply drive a team so many miles in the course of a season. He must raise good corn and wheat, or make a failure. You must produce actual results in the lives of your students, in the way of true and good character, or you will be counted failures. Theoretical scholarship, imposing degrees and professional standing are as chaff before the absolute demand that you send out well-developed and noble characters as a proof of your ability to fill the places you have been called to occupy.

Under the heading "Choosing Masters," the Sunday-School Times states an old and recognized truth in the following terse but convincing paragraph:

> There is no "leisure class." Those who count themselves as belonging to it probably toil the hardest. "Life is a service; whom will you serve?" is the pertinent way in which this truth has been suggested. Self is the hardest master of all. If one does not believe this, let him give himself up wholly to satisfying self for a day or a month or a year, and confess the failure. But there is not such a multitude of masters to choose between as to make the choice confusing. There are only two; and God is the other.

From the Toronto Presbyterian we glean a few sentences bearing upon the question of what inducements the work of the ministry offers to young men. Our contemporary across the border says:

> If a young man has been reared in an atmosphere dominated by the commercial spirit, and has imbibed the idea that a man's life consisteth in the abundance of the things which he possesseth; if he has been taught to believe that success in life is to be measured in terms of dollars or by social rank, or if he regards the ministry simply as one out of many ways of making a living, he will not enter it, and it will be far richer and stronger for his absence.

The accompanying extract from an editorial in the Religious Telescope is recommended to those (if such there be) who are inclined to dwell upon the great things that "I and the Lord" have accomplished:

> An empty wagon usually makes three times as much noise as a loaded one. The experienced ear can tell as far as the sound can be heard whether it is carrying anything or not. An unloaded wagon is generally driven faster and with less care; but there is something about the quality of the sound it makes which betrays its emptyness.
> The weight of religion a man carries is not in direct ratio to the racket he makes; neither is it in inverse ratio. We are coming to believe less and less in what a man says; that is, pinning all our faith to his assertions, and we are looking more and more at how he lives. A profession is all right till it approaches the egotistic. From that point it is discounted, because it sounds too much like a wagon without any load.

Editor's Easy Chair.

At nine o'clock p. m. Wednesday, August 9, the Christian-Evangelist Special pulled out of the Union Station at St. Louis, bearing three carloads of perspiring delegates bound for the San Francisco convention. The Burlington Route had been chosen for our Special, and we were soon crossing the Missouri river and running north along the western shore of the Mississippi, drinking in the cool night air which was doubly welcome after the hot-air bath in the Union Station. It was soon apparent that we had a goodly company of people aboard, having a common aim and destination. There were hurried interchanges of greetings between friends new and old, the location of passengers in their appropriate berths, and soon silence had settled upon the scene of sleeping delegates. To one standing still and witnessing a rapid express train go by loaded with passengers who are wrapt in slumber as the engine plunges forward through the night, as if on the wings of the wind, it seems a miracle of trust in the fidelity of engineer, conductor, brakeman, train-dispatcher, track and cars, but those on board retire for the night with as little thought of danger as when they are retiring in their own beds at home. So valuable a thing is faith, even in relation to temporal affairs.

When the morning broke upon the Special, and its passengers woke from their slumbers, we were passing though as fair a portion of God's country as one could find anywhere beneath the Stars and Stripes—northwest Missouri. The rich fields of tasseled corn waving in the morning breeze, the harvested wheat standing in golden shocks, the meadows clothed with grazing herds, the neat homes and thrifty orchards, all told of a land of plenty, and of an enterprising and industrious farming community. The people who would not be satisfied with such a country would be hard to please. By 8 o'clock the train had pulled into Kansas City, which has not yet built its new passenger depot. After some difficulty we found our way across tracks and through and around freight and passenger trains, and reached the station, where we met numerous other delegates, swelling our Special into a large train. Here the Easy Chair and his wife were met by Brother and Sister W. F. Richardson, who escorted us to breakfast at a nearby hotel and gave us a lunch box of delicacies which will last us most of the way out. Elijah was fed by ravens, but we have been fed by the Richardsons. Their recent vacation greatly improved them, but by reason of this enforced vacation they feel that they must deny themselves the pleasure of the San Francisco Convention. Here the streamer, "Christian-Evangelist Special," was stretched on the side of the train and at 9 A. M. we departed via Burlington Route to Denver. At St. Joseph our numbers were still further augmented, and almost every stop now adds to the number of our delegation.

Our Special has the honor of carrying two newly wedded pairs who are making this their wedding trip. Two of our brightest young preachers, J. Murray Taylor, of Washington, D. C., and L. W. McCreary, of East St. Louis, conceived the bright idea of marrying the girls of their choice and bringing them along on their western trip. So quietly did they conduct the preliminary negotiations leading up to the final treaty, offensive and defensive, that not even their own churches were aware of what had happened until they were on the way to California. Of course no other special heading toward the Golden Gate is likely to have this distinction. Newly-married people, going on a wedding journey, would naturally be drawn where they are likely to have the largest amount of both "sweetness and light," and every one knows that Christian-Evangelist readers are characterized by these qualities. This fact is illustrated by the good nature with which the delegates all bear the discomforts of the journey. The weather is very warm thus far, and coats and vests are at a discount. We are passing through the cornfields of Nebraska, at this writing, and we are wondering if the corn crop for 1905 in the United States will not break all records. This week's Christian-Evangelist has just been distributed among the delegates, and all are reading except your scribe who is writing, as scribes must do.

Only one mishap has marred the journey up to this writing. The manager of our special train who has given so much time and labor in providing for the comfort of our delegates, Bro. G. A. Hoffmann, had the misfortune of losing his pocketbook containing between two and three hundred dollars, while in Kansas City, and discovered his loss only as we were pulling out. If some honest person should find it, it will be returned, as the card-case containing the bills had his name on it. But otherwise, he will probably never hear of it. There is one other distressing circumstance of a purely personal nature. The hay fever, which we escaped on the lake shore, has found us on these Nebraska prairies, and we are paying a heavy penalty for the privilege of attending the convention. We are hoping for relief when we get into the mountains and on the coast. The six o'clock vesper service is now going on in one of the cars, and the familiar strains of some of the sweet old songs are mingling with the roar of the train as we hasten onward toward the setting sun. Oxford, Neb., is yet more than fifty miles ahead, but we must reach it before the train pauses for the evening meal.

Our "Special" reached Denver about on time, 5 a. m. Friday morning, and our delegation went right to the Central Christian Church, where, according to arrangement, breakfast was served. It was a spendid breakfast, too, and afforded the delegates an opportunity to meet Brothers Craig and Tyler, who were on hand to greet the delegates. After breakfast automobiles and tallyhoes were on hand to take the delegation on a ride to see the city. The Easy Chair was located on the driver's seat of a six-horse tallyho. The air was cool and bracing, the drive was through the finest residence parts of the city and its principal parks, and was thoroughly enjoyed. Denver was voted to be a most beautiful residence city, and its citizens a most enterprising, tasty people who take pride in their homes, streets and parks. Our delegation was still further enlarged here, and we are now en route to Colorado Springs with a train of seven coaches and a baggage car, all bound for San Francisco. The Nebraska delegation joined us at Denver and has 28 delegates from the church at Harvard. Brother Shirley, the pastor, says his church has formed the convention habit. We are now running south parallel to the Rocky Mountain range which looms up to our right, covered this morning with a mist as if it might be raining or snowing up there. On arrival at Colorado Springs, we will most of us take a special trip to Cripple Creek and return in time for the Seven Falls, and then we are to have a meeting in the Christian church, whose pastor, Crayton S. Brooks, is on our train with us, having been up to Denver to attend the state convention now in session at the Central church. About our rally to-night and the sights we are to see to-day we shall write next week. Our party is enthusiastic over the journey, and the grandest scenes are yet ahead of us.

Federation of Churches.

Aside from our national convention at San Francisco, no gathering of the religious world will be watched with as much interest by our people as the inter-church conference on federation which is to meet in the city of New York on November 15.

The sessions of the conference are to be held in Carnegie Hall, and practically all Protestant forces will be represented in the deliberations.

Not "theology" but the practical workings of Christianity—how to save the lost—will be the burden of the deliberations. Verily there is reason for disciples to rejoice and take new courage at this relegating to the rear of the questions which divide and distract. The consideration of the real, vital questions of our everyday conflict with sin will unify, not divide.

Let our earnest prayers ascend to the throne above for a blessing on this step toward the fulfillment of our Lord's prayer for the unity of those who love him and are interested in the success of his mission on earth.

The Pan-Baptist Congress

By William Durban

By far the most interesting religious event in England during July was the Baptist World Congress. It is the first convention of the kind ever held in all history. I have just returned home from the first meeting. The program of the congress is a formidable one in extent, but it is of absorbing interest. A few words concerning certain curiosities of Baptist history in England will here be in place.

The formation of the Baptists as a separate community in England took place in 1633. The pastor of the first Baptist flock was a Mr. Spilsbury, of whom nothing at all is known. After 1649, the tragic year when King Charles I. lost his head, their numbers rapidly increased, especially in Cromwell's army. In 1654 Vavasour Powell (once a clergyman of the Church of England) rebaptized some 20,000 converts in Wales, and no less than 30 Baptists crept (under the pseudo-Episcopal authority of Cromwell's "Triers") into certain Church of England livings, enjoying their tithes and parsonages, and were not extruded until the restoration of the monarchy under Charles II.

Prince Arthur, eldest son of Henry VII., King Edward VI., and Queen Elizabeth were all immersed as infants. The first instance of pouring or sprinkling being permitted instead of immersion is in the first prayer-book of Edward VI., which says, "And if the child be weake, it shall suffice to pour water upon it." One of the singularities of history is that what was the exception in the English church became a rule. But the explanation is simple. A lady belonging to the court asked that her child, as it was very feeble, should be sprinkled. At once, many mothers discovered that their babes were also too delicate for immersion, and soon not an infant in all the land was strong enough to bear immersion! But the wrong subjects, the unreasoning infants, had for many centuries been baptized, and as the great apostasy had thus perverted the ordinance intended for believing penitents, the perversion also of the mode was easy. Thus the whole symbolism of what Henry Ward Beecher called "the beautiful ordinance of immersion" was lost.

The Baptists to-day represent a large yet imperfect restoration and reversion. No reformation is ever absolutely complete. Restoration must, it seems, be accomplished in stages. The Disciples of Christ seek to complete what the Baptists began. I like the distinction that where the Romanists differ from the Anglican church the former are wrong and the latter right; where the Anglicans differ from Congregationalists the Anglicans are wrong and Congregationalists are right; where Congregationalists differ from the Baptists the former are wrong, the latter right; where Baptists and Disciples differ Baptists are wrong and Disciples right. The misfortune is this, that in all ecclesiastical corporations the tendency is to cling as persistently to what is erroneous as to what is accurate. Otherwise all sincere Christian people would fly together and Christian unity would be the universal rule.

It is to be noted that your America is chiefly in evidence at this Pan-Baptist Congress, so far as delegates from other countries than Britain are concerned. At the Hotel Cecil alone there are 200 American delegates belonging to one party. And these are but a fraction. America is the great Baptist home of the world. I was interviewing Dr. Whitley, the special secretary appointed to aid Mr. Shakespeare, the Baptist union secretary, in organizing this monster gathering. I was eager to know whether the Disciples of Christ, as immersionists and therefore members of the great Baptist family, had been invited to send any representatives. He replied that he thought not. Naturally I asked, why not? The reply was that he thought it had been assumed that they would not be willing to come. But Dr. Whitley did not seem to be dogmatically certain on this point. It seemed to me that perhaps the matter had never been seriously considered at all. Perhaps some day it may be thought advisable to try to rally representatives of all the various Christian bodies holding common ground as to the ordinance which was once the common symbol adopted by all Christians. A conference on a great scale between the Baptists and the Disciples would be a momentous event. It seems to me inevitably destined to occur at no distant date.

I shall in my next tell something of the doings of the congress. As it began only a few hours ago that cannot be done in this letter. Here I will now say something which appears to be shirked, so far as the great program is concerned. It needs animadversion. I wonder why Congregationalists, Baptists and Disciples, as well as Anglicans, do not approach in a very serious spirit the fault common to the organizations among them all, which fatally mars their system and hinders their progress at all points. In one signal aspect the Methodists and the Presbyterians immeasurably excel them. We are as much to blame as Anglicans, Baptists and Congregationalists. And we are suffering as they do, and deservedly. I refer to the incorrigibly evil inequality and gross injustice involved in the ecclesiastical finance so often but so vainly criticised. I am a higher critic, a rabid destructionist, on this one point. Presbyterians and Methodists here in Britain will not allow any man whose qualifications are not severely tested to occupy any recognized position in the ministry. And they will not permit any qualified and recognized minister to languish in semi-starvation or genteel penury, while another feasts on a plethora of pastoral plums year after year. The anomalies of ministerial positions among Baptists and Congregationalists and Churchmen here in London are shocking. I speak unselfishly, because I am not now in a regular pastorate but am unattached, helping my brethren as opportunity offers in our churches of Christ. May I say that theory has little to do with my statement. The extraordinary prosperity of Methodists and Presbyterians gives the proof of the validity of my argument. Their rich churches have to aid the poorer missions and they aid them munificently and magnificently. The common people have much more respect for this system than for the one supported so fatuously by us and by Baptists and Congregationalists and Anglicans.

I write thus because for years I was a Baptist minister and made observations never to be forgotten. I am disappointed that there is no sign of financial penitence or economic reform so far as this magnificent Baptist World Congress is concerned. So the vicious system of anomaly and inequality will be perpetuated. But this cannot endure forever. I am an old parson and a careful student, and from careful comparison of methods and results have learned lessons which others might not be too proud or too conservative to learn if they would only take Oliver Cromwell's advice and believe that they were sometimes mistaken.

BABY'S INSTINCT

Shows He Knew What Food to Stick To.

Forwarding a photo of a splendidly handsome and healthy young boy, a happy mother writes from an Ohio town:

"The enclosed picture shows my 4 year old Grape-Nuts boy.

"Since he was 2 years old he has eaten nothing but Grape-Nuts. He demands and gets this food three times a day. This may seem rather unusual, but he does not care for anything else after he has eaten his Grape-Nuts, which he uses with milk or cream, and then he is through with his meal. Even on Thanksgiving day he refused turkey and all the good things that make up that great dinner, and ate his dish of Grape-Nuts and cream with the best results and none of the evils that the other foolish members of the family experienced.

"He is never sick, has a beautiful complexion, and is considered a very handsome boy. May the Postum Company prosper and long continue to furnish their wholesome food!" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Preacher and His Money Problem

By W. J. Lhamon

"Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." This, according to the apostle Paul, is the divinely ordained order. The simplest solution of the preacher's money problem is bravely to trust the Lord's ordination in the matter. He who can preach and must preach, who feels himself impressed into the service, whose soul cries, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," who works hard and who forgets himself while he glorifies Christ, whose heart burns with his message and yearns for the people—the Lord will not let such a one starve.

But the man who makes a sinecure of his calling, who gossips or fishes or reads the sporting dailies or simply vegetates six days in the week, who is more adept at drawing his salary than at drawing an audience, who has no grip on vital truth, whose heart is cold and whose brain is flabby, who is merely a Sunday preacher perfunctory—he is the man for the most part whose hard financial experience accentuates the money problem of the ministry. Too often his impecunious condition is attributed to the covetousness of his congregation and not as it should be to his apathy and incapacity. I say for the most part, but not altogether, since there are good and earnest and hard-working men in the ministry who are poorly remunerated. But many times such men minister to people unable to do better by them. Then let them not murmur. Why should the preacher seek to be better housed or better fed than those to whom he ministers? Let him thank God for a place to work, a town or cross-roads in which to declare his message, and for such bread as the people at his cross-roads are eating. The apostle Paul was not guilty of saying, "He that preaches the gospel shall make a fortune out of the gospel." It is not intended that the pulpit shall be a bait to lucre-loving men. I speak plainly, for it seems to me there has grown up a notion that if we can't make young men see ease and wealth awaiting them they will not turn to the ministry. Grant that it is so, and we are driven immediately to one of two conclusions, either that our young men are spiritually and morally degenerate, or that the gospel is a waning power. We surely are not ready for this dilemma. The gospel is yet young, and there are men who do espouse its ministry in the ancient spirit of Peter and Paul.

In a previous article it was stated that seven out of eighteen who responded to the question why so few young men, comparatively, enter the ministry, spoke of meager salaries as a deterrent cause. I have received a number of letters showing general interest in this vital problem. E. B. Barnes, of Noblesville, Ind., writes, saying: "I hope you will devote considerable attention to the matter of the preacher's living, as no discussion is worth anything that ignores that phase of the subject. It is as difficult to support one's ministerial ideals while struggling with poverty as it is to support a sealskin wife on a muskrat salary." E. J. Lampton, enforcing justly another phase of the subject, writes: "I know of no calling in which men are so well paid at the beginning as are preachers." He tells of the experience of the ablest lawyer in his county, whose average income during his first four years of professional life was $400. And of another whose income during his first three months was seventy-five cents! Brother Lampton is right. Many a young man makes his way through school by his pulpit work, while young men in preparation for law and medicine and engineering go on expenses till the year of graduation without dreaming of an income for professional services. As soon as the preacher graduates, if he is at all efficient, churches are waiting for him. Indeed the demand is such that many are pulled away from the colleges before graduation. W. J. Corwine, of California, Mo., writes: "Small salaries and lack of conviction are hindrances." Lack of conviction, I should say, rather than small salaries. The man of conviction will preach—he will preach—spite of salary considerations. The Apostle Paul waived his salary rights, and made tents for his bread, and kept on preaching. There is needed a race of "heroes of the faith," who can still hear the Master saying, "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head," and who hearing this still follow him, and preach him. Not one of the above must be construed as an excuse for the non-performance of duty on the part of congregations and individuals toward their preachers and pastors. I am pleading for such a heroic faith as will conquer all enemies, the salary enemy included. That is all. On the other hand, the people who can support their faithful and devout and consecrated preachers and who do not, are under a curse of covetousness deeper and more shameful than that of the man who starves his horse to save a per cent on hay. I dare say the preacher's pinch comes not so much from meagerness of salary as from relatively unequal conditions. The man in the pulpit has a right to feel his poverty if those to whom he ministers roll in wealth, summer in Europe, winter in southern hotels, display palatial luxury, clothe themselves in purple, fare sumptuously—he has a right, if such people leave him in want, to feel it, and to thunder judgment at them, but he has no right to leave the pulpit. At bottom it is not meagerness of salary that thins the pulpit, but something more cruel or more serious. What is more cruel is mistreatment. What is more serious is lack of faith.

The Summer Shower.

A tinkling as of tiny bells,
A tap upon the pane;
And hark, the pleasant news it tells,—
To parching hills and thirsty dells
Has come the blessed rain,—
The blessed summer rain!

Meadows, renew your robes once more;
Drink deep, ye fields of grain;
Hold up your cups, each tiny flower,
Receive the grateful, cooling shower,
The blessed, blessed rain,—
The blessed summer rain!

Ye brooks, that gurgle faint and hoarse,
Ring out a merrier strain;
And scatter freshness in your course,
In grateful memory of your source,
The blessed, blessed rain,—
The blessed summer rain!

MECHANIC AND COFFEE

The Old Coffee Troubles Left When He Quit.

"Since quitting coffee I am hearty and well at 63 and go to my work every day and feel stronger and better in every way than I used to when I was considerably younger.

"I am a mechanic and have been a great lover of coffee and used it all my life until a few months ago when I made up my mind that it was hurting me. I suffered from constipation, indigestion and kidney troubles and I used to bloat up and have pains in my back.

"Something had to be done, and I quit coffee, the old kind, I mean, and began to use Postum Food Coffee. In a few weeks I was a well man again. My bowels became regular, my food digested comfortably, the bloating and pains in my back no longer troubled me and my kidneys resumed healthy, normal action. That improved condition remains. I am sure I owe it to Postum Coffee, for I have used no medicines.

"I like Postum much better than the old kind. It seems to be more satisfying and I and my whole family drink it morning, noon and night. This is my honest statement of what Postum has done for me." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

SERMONS IN STONE*

BY

E. L. POWELL

Souls are not won in air castles.

Said Carlyle to Emerson, as they spoke together of immortality and how things remote and near are related: "Christ died on the tree. That built Dunscore kirk yonder." Every church house is a sermon in wood or stone. Whether a magnificent cathedral or a simple wayside chapel—whether reared in the great city or the quiet village—the message with multiplied variations is always the same—"Christ died on the tree." Whatever else Christian thought may have attached to the sacred edifice it has indissolubly associated the Christ of Calvary and the structure which has no meaning apart from his sacrifice. The poet says:

> "Earth proudly wears the Parthenon
> As the best gem upon her zone."

And while it is true that the Parthenon is the highest expression in architecture, the humblest frame building, speaking in mute eloquence of God's eternal and continuous love for man, is grander by virtue of its splendid appeal than the mightiest utterances in marble of mere form and color.

The Church Building Glorifies its Surroundings.

The church house because of the message it silently proclaims, glorifies its surroundings. "Does a country place appear naked, dreary, desolate? Introduce a rural steeple and the whole instantly becomes animated." It gives beauty to the most splendid landscape; it adds dignity to the most squalid environment. The church building speaks of unseen realities—realities although unseen—realities which to the soul are as palpable as the physical objects of nature to the eye of sense. It speaks of God and Christ, of duty to man, of the immortality of the soul, and the rest which sounds sweeter when we call it heaven. If the poet by the power of his imagination can convert material stars into "living cars of light for gods to journey by"; surely faith—that splendid faculty of the soul which can actualize the invisible, may associate with a material structure all the unseen and glorious realities of our most holy religion. Paraphrasing the great words of an inspired writer, let us say: "We have not come unto a house that may be touched or unto audible voices within its walls, but we have come unto Mount Zion, unto the innumerable company of angels, unto Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, unto God, the judge of all, and unto all the spiritual blessings and privileges which belong to the kingdom of our Redeemer."

A Protest Against Materialism.

The church house is thus a protest against materialism reminding us that there are realities which cannot be weighed or measured or handled—that Mount Zion is as real as Mount Shasta—that there are harmonies which the ear of sense has never heard whose glorious melody fills the soul, and visions of beauty upon which the eye of sense has never gazed in whose loveliness the inner man is ever rejoicing.

Every church house, by an alchemy more cunning than that of the chemist, transmutes the material into the spiritual even as the dull carbon under the electric touch becomes a dazzling glory. It converts wood and stone into a gospel; it writes, "Holiness unto the Lord," on bricks and mortar; it consecrates things by setting them to holy uses. The material that was wrought into Solomon's temple took on a new meaning and glory in the light of its higher purpose. The bricks which go into the temple of God are of greater value than those which rear the walls of the house of feasting. Church Extension makes the stones of the field to be in league with righteousness; it sets the lumber of the forest to preaching. The woods—fashioned anew—become once again the temples of divinity. Every church building represents so much lumber and brick and iron and stone ennobled by the high task to which they are dedicated. Is it not partially in this way that inanimate nature shall be delivered into the glorious liberty of the sons of God? Commercial ambition says: Let the rivers be harnessed and the seas become a pathway and the mountains be tunneled for trade. Church Extension says: Let the trees be felled and the stone from the quarries be dug for Christ and truth. Christianity would lay under tribute not only thoughts but things, not only men but external nature. It would sanctify the world by converting its material things into spiritual uses.

Church Buildings of Disciples of Christ Give Forth a Distinctive Note.

But while all churches in a large and general way speak of spiritual realities, it will not be thought sectarian if it be here affirmed that the church buildings erected by the Disciples of Christ give forth a distinctive note. Says a thoughtful and most charming author: "To me every civilization has given out its distinct musical quality; the ages have their peculiar tones; each century its key, its scale. For generations in Greece you can hear nothing but the pipes; during other generations nothing but the lyre. Then, again, whole events in history come down to us with the effect of an orchestra playing in the distance." So of religious denominations and the church houses in which they worship—each gives its distinctive note. The churches erected by our own Extension Board, speak to those who know us of a simple Christianity, whose doctrines and ordinances receive their significance from the Christ and not from councils or convocations—a Christianity whose integrity is preserved by a simple faith in Christ as the son of God—and simple obedience to his authority rather than the acceptance of propositional creeds whether true or false—a Christianity in relation to which that individual is orthodox who is consciously loyal to the historic Christ and in relation to which that congregation is orthodox that heeds the great commission of the Master—a Christianity that bids us hold fast to that which is essential to the faith and structure of the church, and to claim as a consequence the wideness and sweetness of our liberty in Christ. This, it seems to me, is the sermon preached by the church buildings among the Disciples of Christ.

Stand for Simple New Testament Faith.

In this time of theological unrest—when the thoughts of men are turning to the simple Christianity of Christ—when propositional creeds are buried without eulogy or flowers—when men are asking for a word of power that shall prove itself, needing no certificate from priest or professor—when the cry goes up, "Sirs, we would see Jesus"—surely every church building that stands for the simple New Testament faith and order—without adornment or addition—is as a light set upon a hill. Surely it is the bright, shining day of opportunity, and the ring of the trowel sould be heard in the land. If Longfellow could find a song to stir slumbering pulses in the "Building of the Ship," there ought to be material in the construction of the humblest house of worship for an inspiring anthem. The materialist does not believe in Church Extension, for a church is to him bricks and mortar—nothing more. It kindles no vision; it opens no vista. Of such an one, it may be said, as of one of Dickens' characters: "Everything he put away in his mind was a grub at first and a grub at last. In all his life he never bred a single butterfly." The pessimist does not believe in Church Extension, for church houses suggest hope and proclaim a vigorous and virile faith in the final supremacy of righteousness. And certainly the man who thinks he has outgrown the religion of Christ does not believe in Church Extension, "for he cannot so narrow him but he still exceeds" any church structure that represents the simple gospel of Christ. While the church building stands for culture, it stands for the culture of faith. You may call the most splendid building a church, but if there be no fervent faith, it is only vaulted roof and stained window. The great idea which the humblest building houses, if it be in any sense a church, is faith in the Christ of the New Testament. Take away the Christ of the New Testament, and your church building becomes a lyceum, or an academy, or a university. But to him who can see the flame of God in every bush—who can recognize the ministry of the imperfect in the evolution of the perfect—to him who can hear the tread of myriad worshipers in the coming time—to this man of faith and hope and love—to him the work is all too slow and his cry is: "Build and build faster."

*An address delivered at the National Convention in St. Louis in October, 1904.

Its Monuments All About Us.

Lives there a man among the Disciples of Christ who has never thought or heard or read or felt anything concerning the young, healthful, buoyant, progressive and enthusiastic enterprise known as the Church Extension Board of the American Christian Missionary Society? Certainly such a man is not to be found in our ministry, and if he should show his provincial face in one of our congregations, his photograph would be interesting. The purpose of this annual address is not so much to impart information as to convert information into inspiration. We have the facts and fire ready for use; we need the ascending flame of sacrifice.

"If you seek his monument—look around you." So Christopher Wren finds his monument in the abbey he planned and in which he sleeps. Church Extension has its monuments in more than forty states, in Canada, in Hawaii. Its work is its monument. Its achievements are its authority for being and continuing. It was voted into existence; to vote it out of existence would be as futile as to seek to dispense with the indispensable. As Thorwaldsen's Lion of Lucerne was cut on the mountain's side—made an essential part of nature's landscape—so Church Extension has made itself essential to the outward and administrative life of our brotherhood. It is a part of the mountain.

A Symmetrical Work.

I wonder if Church Extension has any chief and pre-eminent qualities. It is so symmetrical in its good points that no one point has a superior dignity. Notice some of its combinations as revealing its even and balanced character. It is watchful, but not intrusive. It keeps its eye on the needy fields, but does not enter until invited, and thus its coming is as welcome as the morning. It renders help without loss of self-respect to the beneficiary. It is a loan; it is not a charity. It fosters self-respect by imposing obligation. It furnishes corn for the years of famine and confidently asks for a return in the years of plenty. It is not a refuge for the indolent, but a present help in time of trouble. It makes itself an ally of all our missionary agencies, while preserving its autonomy. Does the Foreign Society ask for larger returns? Church Extension says: Let us establish new sources of supply. Does the evangelist lament that the fruits of his labor are dissipated? Church Extension says: Build a sheep-fold. With malice toward none, it is the ally of all. It concerns itself with physical needs and knows how to keep within its business. It comes to a struggling congregation and says: You are right in desiring a residence. True, you might worship God out of doors, but civilized man needs a house. You might go a-visiting among your religious neighbors, but to eat at your own table is certainly more comfortable, to say nothing of security in getting the right sort of food. You might rent, but we can show you a more excellent way. Thus Church Extension, after conversion, comes first, as shelter comes before the feast is spread. It deals with primal physical needs. It helps the family to go to housekeeping and does not presume to regulate the domestic economy.

We Have a Great Work To Do and Can Not Come Down.

Church Extension appeals to me as a positive contribution to the cause of Christianity. Its genius is constructive. Its answer to doubts is an outward, visible, practical demonstration of faith in the form of foundation, walls and roof. Said a painter: "The more materialistic science becomes, the more angels I shall paint." Church Extension answers all criticism by going right along with its church-building. It says with Nehemiah—holding a trowel in its hand—"We have a great work to do and cannot come down." A church building is an outward confession of faith. It has all the advantages of a printed confession without any of its objections. It is known and read of every passer-by—faith in God, in Christ, in the truth of Christianity, in a life beyond death. Church Extension is too refreshingly busy in strengthening the stakes and enlarging the borders of the kingdom to trouble itself about questions of speculative and imaginative interest. It bids us listen to the music of hammer and trowel as a new temple of God arises, rather than to any such strain as may lull us into inactivity or indolent repose.

Combines Business Methods with Magical Results.

Church Extension, furthermore, combines business methods with almost magical results. Some one has written: "You never saw such marvelous use of money, it is geometrical and arithmetical progression combined." It makes $2,500 in five years do the work of $6,221, and it is perfectly free in telling you how the thing is done. There is no trick about it. It simply keeps the money going. It starts it, and before you can say "Jack Robinson" it is back again and waiting for a fresh commission. It has just enough mystery about it to excite the imagination and to keep us on the qui vive. Church Extension comes on the field in the very nick of time and rallies the discouraged hosts. It awakens hope by giving help. Its word in season is spoken in the ring of the hammer and the sound of the saw. The timeliness of its aid multiplies its power. It reaches forth its hand to those who are ready to sink and the waves of discouragement are converted into a pathway of progress. It repeats in its work the miracle of the loaves and fishes—multiplying the little and creating accommodation for the multitude. It converts threatened defeat into splendid victory. It is timely and inspiring.

Criticism Ruled Out.

But the work of Church Extension does not call for eulogy. If it has any bad points, it is remarkable that the critic has not discovered them. It is an interesting fact that in the presence of our Church Extension work, criticism is ruled out by universal endorsement. As a business enterprise, it receives the hearty approval of business men; as a consecrated business enterprise, it commends itself to the head and heart of every one who is interested in the progress of the kingdom of Jesus Christ. Did you ever hear of anybody who seriously declared himself as opposed to the work being done by our Church Extension Board? The man who doesn't want churches built is out of sympathy with Christian progress, or is one of that number:

> "Who lives for himself and thinks for himself,
> For himself and none beside,
> Just as though Jesus had never lived,
> As though Jesus had never died."

It is not opposition that we need to fear; it is lack of Christian ambition to lift this

ARROWS OF CONVICTION NECESSARY TO BRING MONEY

The hearts of the congregation are reached by the facts concerning a great missionary work.

It takes a long time for an idea to percolate down through the mind of a great brotherhood. It seems a disgrace, almost, that out of a total of nearly twelve thousand churches only 1,269 took the offering last year for Church Extension. There is really no excuse for such a record, except lack of interest, lack of knowledge or because of unbelief. There is no church in our ranks so weak and poor but that it could make up from one to five dollars on the offering day and send it to this fund. The trouble is that our churches are either not interested or are unwilling to send small offerings, forgetting that small amounts make up the great sum total and that there is great inspiration in the knowledge that every church is engaging in the annual offering.

But first of all, men must have conviction before they will give their money. The Disciples of Christ are as liberal as other religious bodies when convincing facts are presented by a warm-hearted and enthusiastic man. Therefore the need of education on a work like Church Extension. Our secretary has gone to churches that refused to give because they felt too poor or because they believed they had enough to do at home. After hearing about the work from a man who believed in it himself, the churches voted to make an offering each year, and felt that they could not afford to have no fellowship in so useful and necessary a work. Arrows of conviction had gone to the hearts of the people. It is worth while for those who have charge of a church to present the facts concerning Church Extension. Few, if any, can find fault with the Church Extension plan. It furnishes material for the most convincing speech. The right presentation charms the people beyond measure. At least one address each year should be made in all the churches. The people have a right to know the facts. To keep them from the people is a sin for which somebody must give account—is a sin, because to withhold the facts means the loss of thousands of dollars to the work.

A young preacher who had charge of a village church, told an experienced preacher that he would like a city pulpit because he thought he had been in a small town long enough and ought to be rewarded with a larger field. The veteran preacher replied: "Don't you think your field is about as large as you will want to be responsible to God for on the day of judgment?" What a fearful responsibility that remark revealed to that young man! Will not God hold his ministers responsible? Governments on earth do; why not the great King?

There are arrows of conviction in our Church Extension work that go to the heart:

1. There is the absolute need of a large Church Extension fund. There are eleven hundred homeless churches that can borrow nowhere else. Church Extension is their only way to get a building.

2. Visible results. You can see your money work, and can see now nearly nine hundred buildings erected by aid of this fund. The results need not be waited for. The good effects of having a building can be seen at once.

3. The money you give to Church Extension is not spent, but goes into a permanent fund to be loaned and reloaned in the building of a church every five years.

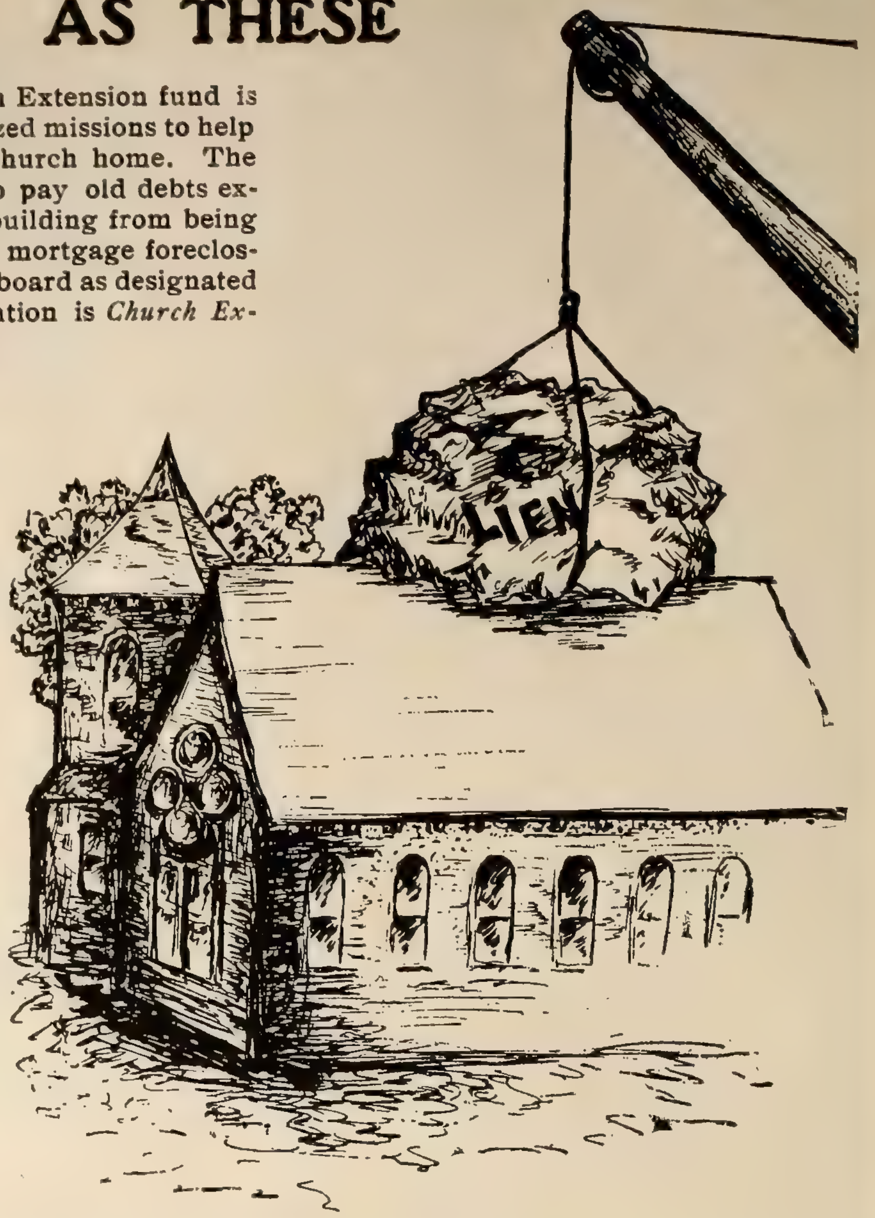
4. Your money thus repeats its good work. Bishop Kingsley said of the church building fund of the Episcopal church: "Your money builds a church this year, and, returning in five years, says, 'Here I am the second time, send me out again.' You send the same five hundred dollars down to Florida. It builds a church there, and comes the third time singing the song of goodness done to that church and says, 'Send me out again,' and we send it up to Michigan to house a church; and so it goes in endless rotation of good, building a church every five years, as long as the church militant shall stand."

5. The loan is made in a strictly businesslike way, so that when the money goes to the church to complete the payment on the building, the congregation is always grateful for the lessons they have learned in transacting the Lord's business. Losses are thus avoided.

Many other strong points present themselves. Churches are helped that first help themselves. Churches aided raise on an average three dollars for every dollar loaned. A loan to a church stimulates self-reliance, which is one of the first laws of life.

All of these points are arrows of conviction that should bring liberal gifts in our September offering.

HELP US TO LIFT SUCH BURDENS AS THESE



Primarily the Church Extension fund is loaned to newly organized missions to help them build their first church home. The funds are not loaned to pay old debts except to save a church building from being sold for liens or under mortgage foreclosure. The work of the board as designated by our national convention is Church Extension, building new churches upon the outposts, but sometimes the board can wisely practice Church Retention, because a building saved to the brotherhood is a building gained, just as a penny saved is a penny earned. Many a time a congregation starts out to build upon their own resources. They have abounding faith and great courage. They think they have counted the cost and see the end. But unforeseen circumstances keep them from completing the building or from completing payment. Liens are filed and the church, having exhausted its means, not being able to borrow the money on the ground, is forced to the wall and with heavy hearts they see their church bought in for the debts by some other religious body.

Many a time this calamity came to our missions before our Church Extension fund acquired some strength. The burden of a lien, or the burden of a mortgage at a high rate of interest past due, or under foreclosure, holds a church down and crushes out its spiritual life. We ought to make our Extension fund strong enough to lift such burdens promptly. The majority of them have been acquired in an honest and faithful effort to build up the Master's kingdom. The mission church sees that it must build a house or fail. They know the great demand made upon our Church Extension fund and, therefore, try to build alone. They feel that they had better fail trying than record a failure by sitting still.

Are not these faithful ones worthy of all consideration? We sometimes think that there is no sentiment or pathos in Church Extension work. What is more pathetic than to see a poor family turned out upon the street? The result is that they become separated, the houses of charity take in part of the family and the kindly disposed neighbors the rest. This is no more pathetic than to see a church family separated and broken up by the loss of its home. The apostle tells us that we are to do good unto all men, particularly unto those who are of the household of faith. These are our own brethren, heirs of the same promises and children of the common Father of us all.

In his last speech on Church Extension George Darsie said of our struggling missions: "They stand for the same great struggle for a pure Christianity that all of us are making, the only difference being that they stand in weakness and homelessness, against overwhelming odds. It is not too much to say that these are the heroes of our cause in this great land. They had enough faith in God to shoulder the responsibility of forming a church with no hope of a church building. And now it is ours to say whether or not such faith and heroism shall be allowed to go unrecognized and unrewarded. It is for us to say whether they shall perish in their helplessness, or live by the power of the helping hand of Church Extension. If it was worth while to call them into existence it is ten times more worth while now to perpetuate that existence."

work to its proper eminence. We must speedily give it the high place it is entitled to hold among the great interests of a great brotherhood. It is second to no enterprise among us. Logically it occupies the very first place. Given the church building, with a converted membership, and all else in the way of all other kinds of work follows. How shall they hear without a preacher? How shall he preach with prospect of attention and interest, without the house? And how shall there be education in all that constitutes the work of the church save as the people are housed and unified? It is a logical proposition that Church Extension is entitled to the first place on the program. If it does not wear the crown among our missionary enterprises, it feels at least the blood of royalty pulsing in its veins. It is not embarrassed in the presence of the purple.

It is thoroughly at home with all the great interests of our brotherhood.

Millions are spent to furnish platforms for fads; shall we give our paltry thousands to furnish a working basis for the simple gospel of Christ? With the half million goal in sight, let us lay aside every weight and the besetting sin of indifference and run with speed to reach it. A strenuous camgaign for the coming year—with something of the enthusiasm of our political friends—will do the work.

IF NO FRUIT---BEWARE

The axe is laid at the root of the tree.

When Jesus was preparing his chosen ones for their future ministry which was to be a lesson to his church for all time, he led them one hot, dusty day, near the close, to a fig tree which was making great pretensions of abundant life. It was a fig tree full of leaves but barren of fruit. Christ and his disciples were tired and dusty, hungry and thirsty. What a disappointment, you say, to find no fruit to satisfy their hunger and thirst! It was enough to provoke Jesus to the cursing of the barren fig tree.

However, Jesus did not curse the fig tree because it failed to satisfy hunger and thirst. He was too great a teacher to curse a fig tree in a fit of anger because it failed to satisfy a temporal want. Why then did Christ curse the fig tree?

It was the nature of that species of fig to put forth first its blossoms, then the fruit appeared and lastly the leaves. Therefore on a fig tree that was in a normal condition you had a right to look for fruit when there was an abundance of leaves. And so Christ was disappointed in two ways: First, he expected to find fruit; second, he wanted fruit, not to satisfy hunger, but because fruit meant seed, which meant that this tree was able and willing to reproduce its kind. With no fruit it meant the dying out of this particular species of fig. Therefore the Savior cursed it so that it was withered up root and branch.

The following day he led his disciples by the same route and when they saw the tree withered up root and branch they were amazed. While they were in this receptive mood he spoke just four words, "Have faith in God." What lesson would the Great Teacher impress? Simply this: If you have faith in me you will bear fruit. If you do not you are not my disciples and your end is death. If the fig tree bore no fruit it would fail to perpetuate its species. If the disciples whom he had chosen for the nucleus of his church bore no fruit they would fail to perpetuate his church and his whole life would be a failure and the world would be lost.

Trees do not blossom and put forth leaves for show. Nor do they produce fruit primarily to satisfy hunger. The fruit covers the seed and is produced for the purpose of protecting that seed and fertilizing the ground into which it falls—all for the sake of perpetuating its kind. We are not saved for our own comfort and enjoyment, but that we may save others. Saving others is bearing fruit and perpetuating the church. Had the first disciples failed to make disciples of others the early church would have died in its cradle.

May we not take warning here and learn our lesson? But few of us can preach the word from the pulpit for the increase of the kingdom, but we can give our money to the missionary societies on their appointed days for collection and thus help to sound out the word. The work of all our missionary funds is important. No one is secondary. Hereafter let us resolve to give to each on its appointed day, and begin to carry out this resolve on the first Sunday of September when the annual offering is being made for our Church Extension fund, which has already shown by its fruits that it has a right to live and be liberally supported in its particular way of helping to increase the number of the saved.

The Truckee Carson Project.

By J. H. McCollough.

This is what the irrigation enterprise in Nevada is called. The water has already been turned into the first canal and its tributaries, covering about 30,000 acres. I want to say a word to the young men, readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, concerning the chance to make a home and do good.

I was called some months since, to take the oversight of the mission church in Reno, Nevada. I was there two months, and during that time found time to make inquiry and learn something of this great work. The United States government proposes to utilize the waters of three rivers, flowing from the Sierra Nevada range east—the Truckee, the Carson and the Walker rivers. One day I stood on the bridge in Reno, and looked at the waters of Truckee flowing beneath. The stream was about 100 feet wide and five feet deep at that time, and flowing so rapidly that, it is said, very few men who have ever fallen into it got out alive. Citizens told me the river was often ten feet deep. So you see what a large volume of water flows, and you can imagine what a tract of land it would irrigate. The Carson river, about twenty-five miles south, is about two-thirds as large, and the Walker, about thirty miles south of the Carson, not as large. The project contemplates utilizing the waters of all three rivers. The plan is to turn the water of the Truckee from a point about thirty miles below and east of Reno, into a canal leading into a reservoir some forty or fifty miles southeast of the dam. Between the dam and reservoir lateral canals and ditches will irrigate about 30,000 acres. This is the part already done, and the water is flowing. Below the reservoir will be canals and ditches irrigating a large body of land. As soon as this is done, a dam will be made across the Carson, and its waters turned northeast through a canal emptying into the same great reservoir. Between the Carson dam and the reservior, some 20,000 or more acres will be brought under ditches. This is said to be very fine land, and will have the advantage of being nearer the fast growing mining cities of Tonapah and Goldfield. After this is done, which will not be for several years yet, a dam will be made on the Walker and its waters diverted south over a fine body of land.

Now, I want to say to the young men, here is an opportunity to get a home in a rapidly growing community, where, in a few years, you will have a fine living on a farm of rich land and with a never failing supply of water for irrigation. Here, in California, we have demonstrated the utility of plenty of water. In southern California they count land worth $5.00, and water to irrigate it worth $95.00 per acre. Under these ditches in Nevada you can homestead 40, 80 or 120 acre farms. It will cost you nothing—only a little land-office fee, say $15.00 or $20.00—but you must live on it. You will be required to pay for water $2.60 per acre for ten years. After ten years, water will be free. You will then own your farm, or ranch, as we call it out here, and a perpetual water right in which all the canals and lateral ditches will be kept in order by the United States government.

The land is first-class grain land. They raise the best potatoes I ever ate, and a large yield. Alfalfa grows well. Some kinds of fruit, apples, pears and plums, are said to do well. The great mining interests, now very large and all the time extending, will create a market at fine prices for many years to come. I should like to see our young people go in there and make homes near enough one another to establish three churches to begin with. One on the canal extending from the dam on the Truckee to the Grand reservoir. One on the canal extending from the dam on the Carson to the reservoir; and one below the reservoir in the fine tract in Churchill county. Suppose three young brethren would agree to co-operate—one aspire to become elder of a church, the other two to be deacons, and settle in there and start a church. The word of God says, "If any man desires to be a bishop he desires a good work." It is right to aspire and lay yourself out to do a good work. Of course you would be expected to marry some of those good Missouri or Illinois girls, but the girls will be willing, as I see it. Some nice young man gets it in his head to come and get a home under these fine ditches, on the Nevada sage brush land, and asks you to come along, you just say "Yes!" It's just the thing to do.

It rarely rains in that country, and it does not take much money to put up the building needed to care for horses and other stock. You would need two horses and farming implements, one or two cows, some pigs and chickens.

A young man can get plenty of work for his spare time for himself and team at good figures, working for Uncle Sam on ditches. Come, as they used to say in Posey county, Ind., on the first load of poles.

Our Budget

—D. N. Wetzel has resigned at Baltimore, Md.

—August 17—the opening day of the great convention at San Francisco.

—Albyn Esson, of Portland, Oregon, has been called to the pastorate at Silverton, Oregon.

—C. R. L. Vawter, of Indianapolis, is in a tent meeting at Williamsport, Pa., a city of 45,000 people.

—Remember the motto for Church Extension—"A half million for the fund by the close of 1905."

—L. A. Betcher has resigned the work at Orange, Texas, to accept the pastorate at Alexandria, La.

—The congregation at Roff, Ind., has just completed a new building costing $2,500. E. S. Allhands is pastor.

—Those desiring the services of Chas. E. McVay, singing evangelist, may address him at his home, Benkelman, Neb.

—Richard S. Martin, evangelist, assisted by Miss Edna Faye Martin, singer, has begun a meeting with the church at LeRoy, Kansas.

—W. J. Lhamon, of the Bible college, at Columbia, Mo., led the church at Princeton, Mo., a series of Bible studies during the past week.

—T. J. Legg will dedicate the beautiful new church at Plymouth, Ind., September 3. The dedication will be followed by a protracted meeting.

—The church at Caldwell, Kan., is engaged in improvements on their building preparatory to a meeting in October with Brother Donaldson.

—W. J. Dodge delivered two discourses in the church at Burgin, Ky., and secured about $25 in cash and pledges for the work at Jackson, Ky.

—Rochester Irwin preached his farewell sermon at Forrest, Ill., Aug. 6, and began work with the First church at Rochester, Minn., one week later.

—The obituary notice which appeared in the Christian-Evangelist of Aug. 3 should have read Raymond Victor Smith instead of Richmond Victor Smith.

—The church at Davis, I. T., is in need of a good pastor, and prepared to employ him for full time. Applicants should address A. C. Parker, Graham, Texas.

—We are just receiving from the bindery Bro. E. L. Powell's new book, entitled "The Victory of Faith" containing 20 addresses and sermons. Price $1.00 postpaid.

—The Church Extension fund is loaned at a low rate to help weak churches build their first church home. It is a matter of both benevolence and business enterprise.

—M. Lee Sorey, of the Highland park church, Des Moines, Iowa, filled the pulpit of the Central church, July 30, and Aug. 14, in the absence of the pastor, Dr. H. O. Breeden.

—J. F. Oathout is preaching for the church at Marion, Iowa, during the vacation season. He returns to his studies at Drake university with the opening of the fall term.

—The boys' and girls' rally day exercises for this year have been prepared by J. W. Carpenter, of Virginia, Ill., and the title of the exercises is "Seed-time and Harvest."

—S. J. Carter, formerly pastor at Olin, Ia., will take special work in history and literature at the University of Chicago this fall in preparation for the teaching of these branches.

—R. F. Thrapp, pastor at Jacksonville, Ill., writes that the work of Guy B. Williamson as musical director and assistant pastor is proving of great assistance to the work in that city.

—Our offerings on September 3 to the Church Extension fund will be somthing of an index to our business sagacity as a people. There is no work among us that pays better returns.

—T. E. Bauer is getting hold of the work at Battle Creek in a good strong way. It is expected that this work will grow rapidly under his leadership. This is one of the missions of our Home Society.

—J. A. Holton has closed his work at Hattiesburg, Miss., and accepted a call to the pastorate of the St. Matthews and South Louisville congregations, Louisville, Ky. His address will be St. Matthews.

—The Christian-Evangelist Special left St. Louis on the evening of August 9, with five sleeping-cars and over 200 passengers. Many more will join the excursion between here and San Francisco.

—W. T. Groom has resigned the pastorate of the Christian church at Bellefontaine, O., and accepted a call from the church at Butte, Mont. He will preach his farewell sermon on Lord's day, Aug. 13.

—Those who have not read Bro. J. H. Garrison's book on the Holy Spirit are missing the author's best and most helpful work. Send $1.00 to this company for a copy of this much-talked-of publication.

—This is our Church Extension number. Let us not overlook the importance of strengthening the home ties in the church work. No congregation can be considered permanent until it is provided with a home.

—The few brethren at Elmwood, Cal., have engaged W. J. Hastie, of Albia, Ia., to hold a meeting after the adjournment of the national convention. It is hoped that a church may be established at that point.

—In the absence of J. T. Boone, pastor at Jacksonville, Fla., who is attending the national convention, the pulpit is supplied by one of the elders of the church, Rufus A. Russell, managing editor of the Daily Metropolis.

—The tent meeting at Pekin, Ill., conducted by J. A. Barnett, assisted by C. A. Altheide, singing evangelist, is growing in interest. The meeting began Aug 6. There had been one confession up to the evening of Aug. 11.

—Among the multitude of things to be remembered, do not forget that Sunday, Sept. 3, is Church Extension day. An inincreased offering for this important work should be the response to the call of the secretary.

—Eighty-one church buildings have been erected in Oklahoma during the past two years. This is as many as were erected during the preceding fourteen years. J. M. Monroe is corresponding secretary of the work in Oklahoma.

—The annual basket meeting of the church in Mercer county, Mo., will be held at Princeton, Mo., Lord's day, August 13. Dean W. J. Lhamon, of Columbia, and Professor Wakefield, of Hiram, Ohio, will be the speakers of the day.

—A card has been received announcing the marriage of Miss Daisy Taylor, of Connersville, Ind., to J. Murray Taylor, pastor of one of our churches in Washington, D. C. The marriage occurred on Tuesday, Aug. 8, and the couple will be at home after Sept. 1 at 475 F St., Washington.

—The annual convention of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society will be held at Decatur 4-7, in the Central Christian church, of which F. W. Burnham is pastor. We hope to find space for the program in another portion of this issue.

—On Sunday, Aug. 6, the Central Christian church, Springfield, Mo., was treated to the pleasant sight of the burning of a $2,800 mortgage—the only debt which rested on the congregation. D. W. Moore and his co-workers are to be congratulated.

—Will H. Betts, who has ministered to the church at Allegan, Mich., since January 24, 1904, has resigned the work there in order to enter Drake university at the opening of the fall session. There have been sixteen additions under his ministry.

—H. M. Barnett has resigned the work at Wellington, Kan., and accepted the pastorate of the Forrest avenue church in Kansas City, Mo., to begin the first Lord's day in September. The Wellington church is in need of a good man to take up the work.

—The Christian-Evangelist for the next few weeks will contain much interesting news from San Francisco. If this item comes to the attention of one who is not a subscriber, it is to be considered as an invitation to subscribe. Price, $1.50 for a whole year.

—S. B. Moore, pastor of the Hammett Place Christian church, St. Louis, is spending his vacation in Connecticut and occupied the pulpit of the Christian church in Danbury on the morning of Aug. 6, and of the Methodist church at Bethel on the evening of the same day.

—Give your money for church building purposes at mission points to our Church Extension fund. The board has loaned nearly $900,000 in seventeen years, and lost in bad debts only $563. They have time and opportunity to carefully investigate each case; you have not.

—The Central Christian church of Columbus, Ohio, under the leadership of W. S. Priest, sold its church property, which is located in the business section of the city, for $31,000. This means a new church located in a more quiet section of the city, and yet to be kept central.

—The church house at Sterling, Ill., is being renovated and repaired preparatory to a Bible institute which is to be conducted in it by Knox P. Taylor, beginning Sept. 10. The Christian Endeavor Society recently gave a patriotic cantata, the net proceeds of which were $50.

—Permission has been asked to translate into French and to publish in France, Brother Wharton's tract on "The Christian Use of the Tithe System," and of course it has been granted. Thus this tract of our devoted missionary is having a wide influence both at home and abroad.

—J. L. Thompson, minister of the First church, Peru, Ind., announces that that congregation will celebrate its twelfth an-

Protection and Investment

at the same time. The whole business world says "Yes" to it. Our little "The How and the Why" (free booklet) is used in the commercial colleges for teaching first principles. Get it. It tells of safety and profit.

niversary Oct. 1, 2. All ministers who have served that congregation are invited to be present. Charles M. Fillmore, the first minister, will prepare a special musical program for the occasion.

—Geo. W. Wise, pastor of the church at Monroe, La., has been granted a leave of absence and is spending the time thus granted at Mountain City, Tenn. The work at Monroe is being looked after meantime by John A. Stevens. Brother Wise has been chosen as the living link missionary of the Compton Heights church of St. Louis.

—Bro. Francis M. Green, well known throughout the brotherhood, was united in marriage to Mrs. Sybil G. Wright at Akron, Ohio, during the week ending Aug. 5. (Our correspondent failed to state the day.) The ceremony was performed by G. W. Moore, pastor of the East Akron church.

—The St. Francois county co-operation of Christian churches will hold its annual convention at Libertyville, Mo., September 14-16. An excellent program has been prepared, to which we would be glad to give publication if space permitted. We are fully justified in saying, however, that it is an excellent one.

—Lee Furgeson closes his four years' ministry at Bedford, Ia., September 1. The mortgage and other indebtedness of the church have been paid off, and many improvements made. A parsonage has been built, the missionary offerings tripled and two hundred additions have been made to the membership.

—Hundreds of Sunday-schools and churches throughout the brotherhood are taking up a systematic course of Bible study, using the "Normal Instructor," prepared by W. W. Dowling, and published by this company, as a text book. This course is published in seven parts. Price 15 each or $1 for the set of seven.

—The drawings which we are using to illustrate this Church Extension number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST were designed and executed by F. J. Mason, superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Central Christian church at Detroit, Mich. Brother Mason is president of a line of lake and river steamers, with headquarters in that city.

—The Salt Lake City brethren are planning to have a great rally meeting with the delegates going on the Christian church special, including our national secretaries, at Salt Lake City, Wednesday, Aug. 16. After the rally held in the church, there will be an excursion to Saltair, the great bathing beach of Salt Lake City, with visits to the places of interest about the city.

—E E. Davidson, evangelist, writes to us from Uniontown, Ark., telling us of the great progress made in the methods and work of the church there since the introduction of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and other church papers, in their midst. He says very truly that "literature tells." A church can hardly be expected to progress without the aid of literature published for that purpose.

—J. C. Ogden and wife spent Lord's day, August 6, in St. Louis, and Brother Ogden occupied the pulpit of the Hammett Place church at the evening services. Brother and Sister Ogden are on their way as missionaries of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society to Thibet. They will spend Lord's day, August 13, with the First church, Los Angeles, Cal., take in the national convention, and sail from San Francisco on the S. S. China, September 6, with some ten other missionaries of the Foreign Society.

—The annual report of the church at Independence, Mo , for the year ending August 1, shows amount expended for all purposes, $4,500; for missions, $1,700; number of additions at regular services, 63. This church supports its own missionaries on both the home and foreign fields. L. J. Marshall, the pastor, is spending a month's vacation at the Lakes, and will return to his work Sept. 1.

—Churches which really desire music of the very highest order, cannot afford to overlook the new hymnal published by this company, "Gloria in Excelsis." It is thoroughly first-class in every particular, and it is only stating the matter mildly to say that it has never had a companion of the same class among our people. Send us a postal card if you are interested, and we will give you particulars.

—G. D. Edwards has accepted a call to the church at Honolulu, Hawaii. Our Home Board has decided to help them in their work. That will be the western-most mission of the A. C. M. S. Pictou, Nova Scotia, is the most eastern, Porto Rico the most southern, and Montreal and Winnipeg the most northern. You see what a large territory is covered by our Home Board.

—E. F. Spencer, the son of I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., has become minister of the Calhoun street church, Baltimore, Md. Brother Ainslee and a large part of the congregation have inaugurated a new organization, but a large number remained at the old church. They have attempted to build a new temple at Calhoun street under the leadership of Brother Spencer and the Board of Home Missions.

—J. Carroll Stark, pastor of the church at Tullahoma, Tenn., reports the work progressing along improved modern lines. They are realizing their duty toward missions, making offerings for the support of such work, and are employing musical instruments to aid them in praising the Lord. This may seem very ordinary to the brethren in some localities, but it is an advanced step for the Tullahoma church.

—Sister Louise B. Cole, of Michigan, has just made her third annuity gift of $500 to our National Benevolent Association. By reason of heavy appropriations made for enlarging the old people's home at Jacksonville, Ill., and providing for a new orphanage at St. Louis that the present one may be converted into a free hospital, this gift is especially appreciated. Geo. L. Snively, 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis, will cheerfully give information to all inquirers concerning the annuity method and the ministries of the association.

—A. O. Walker, minister of the Christian church at Loveland, Col., writes to us that an earnest effort is being made to provide the necessary cottages for the accommodation of the children being cared for by the Colorado Christian Home, a branch of the Benevolent Association work. About $4,000 are needed, of which one-half is now in sight. Those benevolently disposed may address contributions to Mrs. M. B. Warren, Loveland, Col., or to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

—A reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST writes: "A day or so ago I listened to the story of Napoleon's retreat from Moscow, told by a man who had it from the lips of one of Napoleon's soldiers—one of the 300,000 who went to Russia and also one of the 22,000 who came back." This shows how closely we are connected, after all, with historic events that seem to us to be in the distant past.

—S. P. Gross, who has for several months been preaching for the churches at Knob Lick and Mountain Oak school, Mo., was regularly ordained to the work of the ministry on the evening of Wednesday, Aug. 2. The sermon was by J. W. Bolton, and the ordination service was conducted by J. T. H. Stewart. Brother Gross closed the meeting with appropriate remarks concerning his purpose for the future.

—The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first ten months of the missionary year amount to $207,800, a gain over the corresponding ten months last year of nearly $38,000. The receipts during August and September must amount to $42,200 to insure the $250,000. It now seems altogether probable this amount will be reached, but we must not permit over-confidence to compass our defeat when we are so near victory.

—Guy Hoover closed his two years' ministry with the First Christian church of Chicago on the last Lord's day in July. During that period, in addition to maintaining the expenses of the congregation, $1,000 was given to missions and benevolences, a fund $945 was accumulated for a church lot, and a net gain of 115 made in the membership. Brother Hoover is now taking post-graduate work at the University of Chicago.

—A State Christian Citizenship Assembly will be held at Winona Lake, Ind., on Friday and Saturday, August 18 and 19, immediately preceding the opening of the great Bible conference which is held annually at that place. The assembly is called by the National Reform Association. Dr. Sylvester F. Scovel, of Wooster university, president of the association, will speak at the first session on "The Moral Accountability of Nations."

—A new telephone device invented by J. R. Klippelt, of Warrington, W. Va., was installed in the new Christian church in that city. By means of this device the sermons of Clarence Mitchell, the pastor, were heard as far away as Wheeling and Pittsburg. Brother Mitchell and his congregation are delighted with the arrangement, and believe that many who cannot go to the church house may be thus reached by the preaching of the gospel. Brother Mitchell asks us to announce that he will continue in the evangelistic work and can be addressed either at Warrington, W. Va., or Lima, O.

—W. H. Rogers writes to us concerning the work at Swampscott, Mass., which so many of the brethren have had the privilege of assisting during the present year. He states that, while a great load has been lifted by means of the financial aid already given, necessary repairs must still render the load somewhat heavy, and that if any of the brethren are disposed to contribute further the aid will be thankfully received. He writes hopefully of the work and states that there is every prospect of its becoming self-sustaining and a power for good throughout the eastern country. Those who know Brother Rogers will have no difficulty in reading between the lines the situation as it is. The work is worthy of all aid that can be given it.

—A gathering of the heads of the various departments of the Christian Publishing Co. at luncheon in the dining-room of the building on Tuesday, Aug. 7, was arranged by the young ladies of the office force. It was planned as a surprise to Bro. J. H. Garrison, a reminder of his birthday, and as an opportunity to wish the members of the company who were to attend the San Francisco convention a safe and pleasant journey. A bountiful supply of good things for the physical man loaded the table, and good fellowship enlivened the entire company. Sister Garrison sat with her husband at the head of the table and relieved the masculine monotony of the circle. A statement that the luncheon was in honor of Brother Garrison's birthday brought from him the correction that it was a postponed birthday. Every one present immediately manifested an intense interest in having him explain how to postpone birthdays, but up to present writing he has not revealed the secret.

Pacific Gleanings.

The old Oregon country is coming to the front not in material prosperity alone, for the moral and spiritual forces are springing to the front with vigorous tread.

In the state of Washington there is a good anti-gambling law. In Seattle, Tacoma and lately in Walla Walla, the gambler with his paraphernalia is turning to other fields. Here in Portland, Judge Frazier has rendered a decision shutting out pool-selling at the racetrack and last week the races were declared off.

Dr. C. M. Sheldon, of Topeka, Kansas, was engaged by the Fair commissioners to preach at the Auditorium Sunday, Aug. 6, at 3 p. m. On his arrival in the city, he learned that "The Trail" was to be opened on Sundays contrary to expressed agreement. He therefore promptly declined to fill his place. At the First Congregational church on Sunday evening, the following resolution was passed by a rising vote:

"Resolved, that we the audience of 2,000 people at the First Congregational church, Portland, Oregon, Sunday evening, August 6, heartily express to the Rev. C. M. Sheldon our grateful appreciation of his prompt decision in declining to speak in the auditorium of the Lewis and Clark Exposition, whereby he would have been made a party to a flagrant violation of the Lord's day, and contrary to an expressed agreement, whatever the pretext, upon the part of the board of managers of said exposition."

Recently in Portland was convened the congress of charities and corrections. It was a notable gathering. Some 250 came from east of the Rocky mountains; among them I was pleased to note our own busy and wide-awake (to all good works) Bro. W. H. McClain, of St Louis.

The church of Christ is buckling on the armor, with the slogan of victory, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." However slow she may be to enter into all the various and diversified avenues of useful endeavor, as indicated by these numerous congresses, sure it is that this plain, old story is the very heart of reform. Its plea is not unheeded in this busy west, as note the many meetings held in the last twelve months.

At Turner were reported for the year in Oregon more than 900 baptisms; in Whitman county co-operation more than five hundred additions, with several new churches established, and to crown all with brilliant hope for the future, the churches of Dayton, Washington, and Athena, Oregon, in addition to supporting pastors, are sending out evangelists in their respective fields, pledging to stand by them for the year.

Some changes are being announced in ministerial forces. Albyn Esson goes to Silverton from Rodney avenue church, Portland. W. A. Moore has taken up the work at the First church, Tacoma. B. H. Lingenfelter, from First in Seattle, settles with Fremont church, one of Seattle's suburbs.

At the First church in Portland, Pastor Muckley grows steadily in favor and power, and additions are noted almost every Lord's day. Visitors to the Exposition drop in to swell the audiences and leave good cheer in their Christlike greetings.

From China, A. E. Corey, and from India, the Gordons came to recount their wonderful experiences and to tell of the success of the missionary enterprises in which they are engaged. A new reality seems dawning upon the church of the west, standing as it were at the very gateway of this vast mission field for America.

Then in anticipation looms up the convention at San Francisco. Already the "thrill of joy" is rising. Many will, for the first time, "feel what it is to be there." Among those who must await the postlude, and hear only reports from the workers, will be many in Portland and other cities of the northwest to greet the co-laborers on their return by the northern route.

To all such is extended a hearty handshake and a "God bless you."

The Shorter Catechism on Church Extension.

Question. What is the Church Extension fund? Answer. It is a fund organized for the purpose of aiding in building houses of worship.

Q. Where is the office? A. In Kansas City.

Q. Where and when was the fund organized? A. In Cincinnati, at the general convention of 1883.

Q. Why was the fund organized? A. Because of a need in our home mission field, and to stop indiscriminate appeals, and to help by loan instead of sinking money in gifts.

Q. How many organizations have the Disciples of Christ? A. About 11,000.

Q. How many of these have church buildings? A. About 9,800 own their own buildings in which they worship.

Q. Then we have about 1,200 unsheltered organizations? A. That is the fact; 650 would build at once if we could promise aid from this fund.

Q. Does Church Extension pay? A. Yes. By the encouragement of a loan to a mission in a new town, it secures lots when cheap, which become very valuable in after years, and the churches helped by this fund generally raise three and four dollars for every dollar loaned and they also become missionary.

Q. When was the present board elected? A. During the general convention of 1888, held at Springfield, Ill., which was the real beginning of this board's work.

Q. Is the treasurer under bond? A. Yes. A bond of $20,000.

Q. How much money has the fund loaned out? A. About $900,000.

Q. How many churches have been helped? A. 907.

Q. How many are waiting to be aided? A. 650.

Q. On what conditions can one of our churches receive aid? A. (a) That the building is actually needed. (b) That they have done all they could toward first buying the lot and commencing the building. (c) That the loan asked pays every debt. (d) That they give first mortgage security. (e) That they insure the house for full length of loan.

Q. What interest is charged? A. Four per cent.

Q. Why charge interest? A. It stimulates the congregation to return the loan, and pays the current expenses of handling the money and disseminating information.

Q. Then this is a perpetual fund, is it? A. It is, and will go on continually building houses when we are gone from earth.

Q. Why not give the churches the money? A. Because a loan at four per cent, to be paid back in four or five years, answers the same purpose as a gift, and the money is saved to help another congregation every four or five years.

Q. Are the churches returning the money? A. They are. Over $455,000 has been returned. They pay back loans much easier than they pay hall rent at the rate of $150 or $200 a year.

Q. How much has been paid back this year? A. $71,557.29 in loans and interest.

Q. If mission churches do so heroically in returning money borrowed, ought not older churches, who have their houses, gladly raise large offerings this coming September? A. Yes. And each one who reads this should help in his church collection by his own contribution to swell this fund.

AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

ANNUITY BOND.

CHURCH EXTENSION FUND, Kansas City, Missouri.

Whereas Jacob E. Miller of Buchanan, Michigan, has donated to and paid into the treasury of the Board of Church Extension of American Christian Missionary Society, the sum of One Thousand dollars.

Now Therefore, the said American Christian Missionary Society, in consideration thereof, hereby agrees to pay to said Jacob E. Miller, during his natural life, and after his death, to his wife, Mary G. Miller, during her natural life, an annuity of Sixty dollars in semi-annual payments of Thirty dollars each, said payments to cease on the death of said Jacob E. Miller and Mary G. Miller and the said sum donated by them, as aforesaid, is to be considered as an executed gift to the American Christian Missionary Society, for the Church Extension Fund of said Society, and to belong to said Society for said Church Extension Fund, from this date, without any account or liability therefor.

Cincinnati, Ohio, September 1-1903.

Attest, Signed by SECRETARY.

AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
By Signed by Chairman,
ACTING BOARD OF MANAGERS

OUR ANNUITY PLAN IN CHURCH EXTENSION.

The Annuity Plan of the Church Extension work is getting popular the more it is understood. The board can pay six per cent on annuities at the age of fifty years or more, and find prompt investment at the same rate of interest, helping build churches that would never be erected except by this aid. Churches that we cannot help with four per cent money from the general fund, are glad to get annuity money at six per cent, and be in the hands of the brotherhood by aid of funds controlled by this board. People intending to leave money to this fund at their death, will find it to their advantage to give to the Church Extension Fund upon the annuity plan. We receive gifts of $100 or more, at any time, and pay annuities semi-annually, until the death of the donor, according to the following rates: During the last year annuities have been offered us from persons under fifty years, and after a careful study of the annuity tables of conservative insurance companies, your board has fixed the following rates: If, when the money is given, the annuitant is between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-nine inclusive, a bond will be issued paying four per cent during the natural life of the annuitant; between the ages of forty and forty-nine, inclusive, the rate will be five per cent during the natural life of the annuitant; at the age of fifty years or more, the rate will be six per cent. The income to the annuitant is regular; no time or money is lost by reinvestment; there are no taxes to pay; the money is building churches while earning a good income for the annuitant, and at death the money is where the donor wants it to be, without any contest of will. Up to July 15, 1905, there have been 141 gifts on the annuity plan amounting to over $115,000 from 115 people.

RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION TO RECEIVE ANNUITY MONEY.

The national convention at Des Moines, Iowa, in 1890, made the following recommendation to the Board of Church Extension: "We request the board to consider and adopt, if practical, the annuity feature in raising funds for Church Extension, believing it will prove, as in the case of other churches, a successful method of raising money for the fund. For further information address, G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec.

Q. How many churches have been helped this year? A 86.

Q. How many since 1888, which dates the real beginning of the work? A. 907.

Q. Is money ever loaned to pay old debts? A. In no case, except to save a church building from being sold for debt.

Q. Why are mortgages being foreclosed on so many of our mission churches that have borrowed elsewhere? A. Because they borrowed money at exorbitant rates and on short time, vainly hoping to pay out to secular loan funds.

Q. What rates are charged out west? A. All the way from eight per cent to 24 per cent a year.

Q. Is it not inviting disaster for our mission churches to borrow at such rates? A. It is, as as all other religious bodies found out long before we did.

Q. How much money is needed each year to meet the demands? A. Not less than $250,000.

Q. Can any preacher or congregation do the best work without a house of worship? A. Many churches die for want of these buildings.

Q. How many congregations took the collection last year? A. 1,269. A gain of 114 over the previous year.

Q. How much was raised last year, and how many churches were helped? A. $146,377.93 including returns on loans and interest; 80 buildings were completed and 128 others started.

Q. What ought we to raise this fall? A. Not less than $50,000 to pay obligations which must be met soon, and to reach the half million.

Q. Where do you send money and how? A. To G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo., by draft, postal note, money order, registered letter or check.

They Speak of Church Extension from Experience.

Here is an array of testimonials that speak eloquently for the work of Church Extension for the past year. The Board of Church Extension has eighty such testimonials from the churches that have been recently helped. It should be remembered that these churches raised from two-thirds to three-fourths of the money on the ground, and paid over in cash all they raised before the board sent their money. They did all they could to first help themselves, and the Church Extension loan paid the last debt incurred by building. Last year the churches aided by the board put into their property over $255,000, while the board loaned to these eighty churches $84,875. Read for yourself.

Dalhart, Texas.

Aided by $500 Loan from Louisville, Ky., First Church Fund.

The Christian church of Dalhart, Texas, was made possible by Church Extension, otherwise we could have had no church. Now we have a nice little building, 32x46 feet, well furnished. The lot is valued at $200, the house and furniture cost us about $2,300. Our growth in membership is gradual. Our Sunday-school is growing. We have a membership of 40. Our Sunday-school numbers about the same. We are proud of our church. We are heart and soul for Church Extension.

Robert Lilley.

Biggers, Arkansas.

Aided by Loan of $300 from Gen. F. M. Drake Fund.

If it had not been for the loan we would have lost our building. I think the Board of Church Extension is a grand thing, something that the Christian people should be proud of. Just think how many more church buildings can be erected and souls brought to Christ by the aid of Church Extension. Our lot is valued at $250; our building is valued at $800. We have 30 members. Our Sunday-school is growing fast; we have 42 pupils. We have been growing and having some good meetings ever since we secured our loan. I can not speak too highly of the loan. We are living in a new town, surrounded by a rich farming country. This is the only church building in town.

R. L. Shaver.

Lexington, Okla.

Aided by Loan of $500 from F. H. Main Fund.

Lexington is a thriving town of 1,500 people, with good prospects of growth. It is located on the Canadian River in the western part of Cleveland county. On July 6, 1903, the church asked for a loan of $500, which was granted on Dec. 1. This at once put life into the church and made our beautiful $1,500 church home possible. The loan enabled us to meet our bills promptly and we thus kept our credit and retained the good will of the community. We know, personally, the value of Church Extension. Oklahoma could do little church work without the aid of this fund. Rates of interest are high and money can scarcely be borrowed from secular loan companies. If the brotherhood only knew what good work the Church Extension Board can do, money would flow freely into its treasury. God speed Church Extension. It has made us friends. Lexington has been the Athens of those who do not believe in missionary work. Our membership is 65 and our Sunday-school 40.

Greenville, Miss.

Aided by Loan of $2,500 from General Fund.

The loan has been of value to us in the following respects: First. It enabled us to build a respectable house of worship, which otherwise we could not have done. Second. It made it possible to establish a self-sustaining congregation. Third. It permits us to aggressively preach the gospel.

Results: First. We have gained the ear and confidence of the city. Second. We have, during the last year, increased our congregation twenty per cent.

Christian Church, Rocky Ford, Col.

Aided by Loan of $1,000 from Dr. J. W. Gill Loan Fund.

The First Christian church was organized in July, 1901, by H. T. Morrison, who preached for the church each alternate Lord's day until the last of August, 1902, at which time the writer was called to the pastorate for full time. Brother Morrison did a splendid work, gathering together about 100 members. The church purchased a lot during Brother Morrison's stay worth $500. Last fall a building was erected and furnished at a cost of about $6,000, $1,000 of which we found it necessary to borrow from the Board of Church Extension and which was kindly and promptly loaned to us. Since entering the new church we have received into the membership 71 persons, mostly by confession and baptism. Average attendance in Bible-school, 121; collection, $3.66; our present membership enrolled is 206; in Christian Endeavor, 40. Much credit is due E. C. Shelton, J. W. Scogin, Sol. T. Wolfe and Alfred Cleaves for the progress of the work here. The church was opened for service Oct. 18, 1903, Wm. Bayard Craig, of Denver, preaching at the morning and evening services when $1,477 was pledged. We will build a Sunday-school room later at a cost of $2,000. The loan made us by Church Extension was a great help and inspiration, and we are very thankful for it.

Millard Nelson, pastor.

Mountain Grove, Mo.

Aided by Loan of $375 from Gen. F. M. Drake Fund.

One year ago we were without a home of our own, but by the help of our citizens and a generous loan of $375 made us by the Church Extension Board, we were able to build a house well worth $2,000; without the loan we could not have completed the building, which is the best in Mountain Grove, well seated and lighted by electric lights.

W. S. Candler, clerk.

Eddyville, Neb.

Aided by Loan of $300 from General Fund.

We had done all we could, and the three-hundred-dollar loan has been of untold help to the church, as it has placed us where we are safe and can make our payments. We trust the loan will be the means of bringing many into the fold of Christ and a blessing to yon and our community.

J. H. Wiley, elder.

Palo Alto, Cal.

Aided by Loan of $1,350 from T. W. Phillips Fund.

Palo Alto is the town of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University. A few years ago, Brother McHatton, state evangelist, came to the town as a result of the efforts of Brother and Sister A. W. Mills, and after a short meeting organized a church. For several years the little organization held meetings wherever it could—in a hall, when it was not being used for dances; in a tent, when the weather would permit—one place and another, until it became absolutely necessary to build. The membership was few in numbers and poor. A substantial brick building was erected, but it was impossible to raise enough money to pay for it. The Extension Board was appealed to. It responded, and we now have property easily worth $5,000. It is the only church of our plea between San Francisco and Santa Clara, a distance of forty eight miles, through a densely populated valley. We are located at one of the greatest universities in the world. The future holds wonderful possibilities for our work at this place. Property is advancing rapidly in value. Over $300,000 have been expended in cottages in this town in the last seven months, and the work is increasing; the Catholic people are building a $100,000 addition to their seminary; at Stanford University a $30,000 gateway is under erection, a $250,000 gymnasium is nearing completion, while the foundation is being laid for a $500,000 library building. This city gives promise of being one of the largest between San Francisco and San Jose. This church will be a lasting monument to the wisdom of the Extension Board. Chas. L. Beal, pastor.

East Church of Christ, Toledo, O.

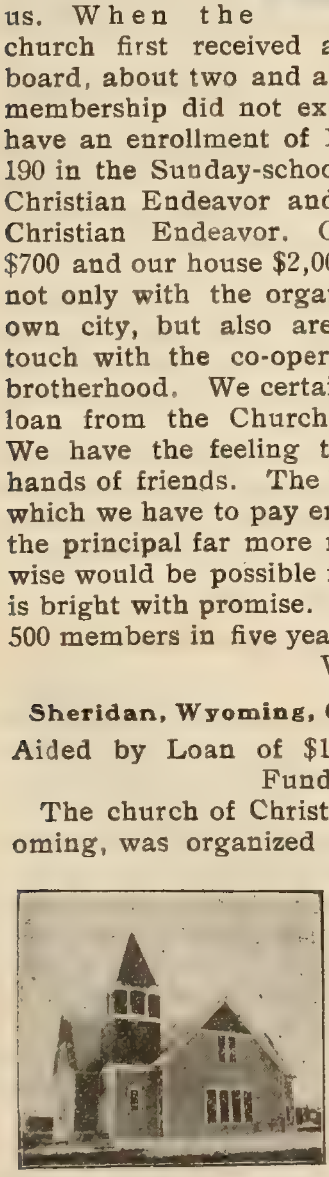
Aided by Loan of $1,000 from General Fund.

The East church of Christ, Toledo, O., occupies one of the most strategic points of the great state of Ohio. The city of Toledo is growing at a remarkable rate. We are located here in the center of a growing population of 30,000 people. There is a noticeable scarcity of churches, so the coast is free for us. When the church first received a loan from your board, about two and a half years ago, its membership did not exceed 35. Now we have an enrollment of 140 in the church, 190 in the Sunday-school, 60 in the Senior Christian Endeavor and 30 in the Junior Christian Endeavor. Our lot is worth $700 and our house $2,000. We are in line not only with the organized work of our own city, but also are keeping in close touch with the co-operative work of our brotherhood. We certainly appreciate the loan from the Church Extension Board. We have the feeling that we are in the hands of friends. The low rate of interest which we have to pay enables us to reduce the principal far more rapidly than otherwise would be possible for us. Our future is bright with promise. We expect to have 500 members in five years.

W. D. McNaull.

Sheridan, Wyoming, Church of Christ.

Aided by Loan of $1,000 from General Fund.



The church of Christ in Sheridan, Wyoming, was organized February 15, 1903, at the close of a successful meeting held by W. H. Harris, of Princeton, Idaho, and consisted of 105 members. The new organization held regular meetings in the Y. M. C. A. hall. J. T. Webb, called to minister to the congregation for three months, rendered efficient service in pushing forward the building that was begun immediately after his arrival, laboring with his hands through the week and preaching on the Lord's day. His services ended in the middle of August and the church was without pastoral care till the middle of October, when F. E. Blanchard arrived with his family to take charge of the work. The next day after his arrival, Brother Harris came from Princeton, Idaho, to assist in the dedication of the church building, which the congregation, in the absence of pastoral care, had carried forward to completion. It was found that it would be necessary to raise more than $3,000 to clear the house of all indebtedness, and a loan of $1,000 was secured, without which failure must inevitably have been the result and the doors closed. Now we are able to report 24 additions since dedication, an active Christian Endeavor society, the largest Bible-school in the city with an average attendance of 180, an aid society doing efficient work, and a modern church building, seated with circular pews, lighted by electricity, heated by furnace and worth more than $5,000. The congregation is in perfect harmony and will meet the missionary apportionment of every board. Back of all was the timely assistance rendered by the Church Extension Society.

A Word from the Secretary of Church Extension.

The Board of Church Extension faced a serious condition at its August meeting and will not be able to make any more promises of loans until after the September offering. As our annual offering for Church Extension is approaching, it is well for the board to state the condition of its treasury and the present demands upon our Church Extension fund.

A GREAT WORK DONE ALREADY.

The board has closed eighty-six loans from October 1, 1904, to July 31, 1905, aggregating $118,000; $40,000 has been paid out in closing loans during June and July. On the first of August there was a cash balance on hand of a little over $30,000, which will be paid out on loans that will close now in a few weeks. The board has granted loans aggregating $100,000, which means that we have $70,000 of obligations above what we have money to pay for. These loans will close this fall for the winter work, and if the board is to meet its obligations there must be a liberal response to our annual call for money in September. We calculate that there will be loans paid back to meet part of this demand. The largest part must come from the annual offering and from individual gifts. We are confidently counting upon responses from 2,000 churches this year. This board has a right to expect that the churches will stand at its back. The annual offering, coming last in the year, has never been "a square deal." Other offerings have been allowed to crowd it out and our preachers and churches should now see that the Church Extension offering receives the attention that the work of this board merits.

APPEALS THICK AND FAST.

At our last two board meetings there were forty appeals for aid. We can see the great demands which this board must try to compass. Through our district, state and national boards these churches have been called into existence. To let them die would be a calamity and a shame, if not a sin, to a great brotherhood. They are our children. We should not let them die for lack of buildings.

THAT HALF MILLION.

This is the year we are to complete our first half million for Church Extension. Shall we fail? We cannot afford to fail. We will not fail. Yet, to succeed means a mighty effort, because last year the churches sent only the small sum of $23,423.97, and only 1,269 contributed. It ought to be that we shall get at least $40,000 in our offerings this fall. This is a small sum for a great people to raise.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR 2,000.

We face another fact. It is that only a few over 1,200 churches have thus far promised to take the September offering. It is true that more will promise and many will fall in line that do not promise. Let the churches rally to this campain.

THE APPORTIONMENT.

The apportionment letters are going out. The churches should take pride in reaching and going far beyond the apportionment. The apportionment is only a suggestion, but it should be followed because it is never burdensome. It is only a statement of what this board can and will do if you will do your part.

A FINAL WORD.

The state secretaries have sent word to our board that we have 1,200 homeless churches, 657 of which would build at once if our board could promise aid. This fact of itself should bring response from all churches. And now, may the grace of God abound among us in good works, is our prayer.

G. W. Muckley,
Cor. Sec., in behalf of the Board.

Edgar C. Riley was at Belleview, Boone county, one-fourth time, one officer appointed, $11 for self. Work in good condition.

Jas. C. Ogden makes his last report of Cannel City and Chestnut Grove before starting on his long journey to Thibet. He had four additions and $13.90 for missions. Building at Cannel City is begun.

H. C. Runyan continues to prosper in his work. He preached ten sermons and aided three; $100 paid on Church Extension debt. He secured 200 subscribers for one of our papers and with his wife goes to the San Francisco convention during August.

J. K. Osborne was at work 14 days, 12 sermons, one added. A partial paralytic stroke has prevented him from work all the month. He is a good man and we hope for his early recovery.

D. C. McCallum was at Irvine half time. Work on house nearly all completed. Meeting to be held soon, assisted by J. H. Stambaugh.

Earl B. Barr was at work 21 days at Bromley. A meeting was held and Henry Robb aided. Ten additions and much good accomplished. The work is in best condition during his connection with that field.

W. J. Dodge reports 26 days in interest of Jackson, Breathitt county. Much of this time was spent soliciting money for building; $189.50 was raised in cash and pledges.

In Lee and Owsley counties Z. Ball was at work 22 days; added eight, six places visited, $17 for self. Work in good condition in his field.

L. B. Haskin was at Erlanger all the month. Meeting to be held in October. Howard T. Cree preached for them one Sunday. He was much enjoyed.

W. L. Lacy reports full time, 26 sermons, 11 aded, $9 for self and $5 for local work.

H. L. Morgan was at work 13 days in Clay and Laurel counties: 16 sermons, 11 added by confession and baptism, $3.50 for self.

C. A. Van Winkle was at work all the month in Jackson county; 27 sermons, one added by baptism. He says: "We are yet in a meeting at Middlefork, Jackson county. The condition of the church spiritually accounts, I think, for the fewness of confessions. The moonshiners have terrorized the place for years. Moral suasion has been tried until it ceases to be a virtue. We shall now try the efficacy of the law."

S. J. Short was at work in Big Sandy Valley 26 days, 19 sermons, 18 added, $7.25 for self. Work in good condition.

C. M. Summers has been at work all the month in Johnson, Magoffin and Carter counties, 22 sermons, 12 added, four officers appointed, 23 visits, one prayer-meeting started.

Wren J. Grinstead began work at Jellico, Tenn., the first of July. The Tennessee and Kentucky boards aid in the support of the work in this border town. He has preached eight sermons and added four; $25.50 for self—$317 for local work. He thinks the outlook for the cause full of promise. The great need is a house of worship, and he hopes to be able to visit some of our churches in Kentucky in the effort to raise money for a building. The Jellico Disciples are worthy of all help that may be given. The amount given by them for their own work will put to shame many of our older and stronger organizations.

H. W. Elliott was at work all the month in the interest of Kentucky missions. He collected for the work $641.37; $252 50 of this belongs to permanent fund and is not to be used for current expenses. We are rapidly approaching the annual convention. Many good churches are not yet represented on our books. On many of these we are confidently relying for help at an early date. We are still hoping that other friends will be "one of 50" to give $10 to our emergency fund. The time is short. What is done must be done quickly. September 27 and the Maysville convention will soon be past history. Give us a helping hand now—for now is our day of need.

Cincinnati Notes.

A. McLean, Chas. M. Fillmore, Howard Cramblet and W. J. Wright, of Cincinnati, attended the School of Evangelism at Bethany assembly recently.

A. C. Gray and wife, H. C. Runyan and wife, Geo. A. Miller, and Miss Ida Hanna will be among the leaders of the Cincinnati work to attend the national convention.

The plans for our fall campaign are nearing completion. Bro. Jas. Small will assist in a union meeting at North Side, where the Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists will co-operate with our people. They begin by special arrangement on Oct. 1. Bro. Harry D. Smith will assist Brother Armistead at Norwood. Brother Thompson, of Peru, Ind., will be with Brother Fillmore at Carthage; Bro. J. C. Burkhardt will be at Lockland with Brother Loucks; Brother Hill will go it alone at the Central; Bro. J. H. Gilliland will be with his old friend at First church, Covington; Brother Miller is ready for the best meeting in a twelve years' ministry; Bro. E. W. Elliott and Brother Garrison make a team fit for Newport. Other churches may have made selections.

Herbert L. Willett will address the fall rally of the churches Sept. 15 at Newport. Oct. 6 there will be a reception given by the churches to the evangelists in the Y. M. C. A. building, if present plans are carried out. These meetings will be fully reported in the Christian Evangelist.

Texas Notes.

The evangelistic season is fairly upon us now and Texas is alive with meetings which are being held by our own evangelists and others from outside the state as well as many of our pastors. Scoville, Northcutt, Bowen and others from afar, Sanders, Marshall, Haddock and all our entire state force are busily at work.

The San Marcos River camp meeting that has just come to a close, which was conducted by B. B. Sanders and J. B. Bowen, is the most complete effort of its kind with which we are acquainted. A huge permanent tabernacle, electric lights, waterworks, markets, restaurants, barber shops, free mail delivery, and in fact every convenience that can be found in a well equipped city are in operation there, though this place is 12 miles from any town. Thousands of people have camped there and heard the gospel from the lips of these famous evangelists.

The rains seem to have ceased for a time and crops are beginning to respond to the active labor of the farmers and prospects are getting brighter with the process of the suns.

T. B. Larrimore has been holding a few meetings in the state.

Our schools are preparing for the largest enrollment of their history this fall and the number of boys who are to prepare for the ministry will exceed that of any previous year.

We had a glorious day here in Henderson county yesterday. We had a county rally at one of our country churches and raised enough money to keep a county evangelist in the field.

The Palestine church announces that the architect is now at work on the plans for their $20,000 church which they will erect in the near future. W. O. Stephens.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Now is the season of the county convention and our co-managers are urged to see that our work has a place on the program of each one. Our brethren are usually glad to give us time, if our women will only use it to advantage. If any one knows of county conventions that are to take place soon, on which you are not sure as to C. W. B. M. having a place, please write to the secretary and if possible we will have a representative there. Mrs. J. L. Moore will be glad to attend as many as she can, and teach with her lantern, of the work we represent. Only let us hear from you.

All auxiliaries are urged to collect closely for the report of the next quarter, the first of Missouri state year, will be the report which will give figures for the national report. Therefore, if any auxiliary fails to send its report on time, the state will be short, just as many members and Tidings as it has. Blanks will reach each auxiliary. Let us all be faithful in these small things which are so important to the full rounding up of the whole.

The new Honor Roll has been sent to each president, and the auxiliaries should have had it in the August meeting. I will repeat the requirements, that all may know them.

1. Auxiliaries must average at least ten cents a month per member to national fund and five cents a month per member to state fund.

2. Auxiliaries must observe C. W. B. M. day.

3. Auxiliaries must report each quarter to state secretary.

4. Auxiliaries must reach their apportionment of special money.

In order to stimulate auxliaries that are always faithful, we have inaugurated a "Certificate Roll." To be on this roll, auxiliaries must be on Honor Roll, and in addition, reach their apportionment of members and Tidings.

The apportionments will be sent to each auxiliary early in September. We are telling you of these rolls now, that you may have them in your minds from the very beginning of the year and lose no time in making your calculations to win a place on them.

The "Certificate Roll," as its name indicates, entitles auxiliaries that win to a certificate suitable for a small frame.

May God help each one of us to do as well as we know this year.

Ohio Letter.

One of Ohio's "boy preachers" has taken unto himself a wife. The said preacher's name is Frank M. Green. The happy bride was Mrs. Sybil Wright, of Akron. The daily press says the age of each was 68 years. Their future home will be in Akron. The Ohio Letter man wishes to extend most hearty congratulations and best wishes for a long and happy life.

Youngstown is to have two new preachers. The Third church has F. D. Draper, formerly of Lakewood, who is already at his post of duty. September 1, J. R. Ewers, who was at Bowling Green, but for two years has been at Chicago university, will become pastor of the First church. These two men, with W. S. Goode at the Central, will make things go at Youngstown.

It is to be deeply regretted that J. A. Jackson failed in health and had to give up the work at Shelby. He has gone to northern Michigan to recuperate.

F. A. Bright, evangelist for western Pennsylvania, has been spending his vacation in Ohio, filling the pulpit two days at Warren and visiting at North Bristol and Painesville. He escaped preaching at Painesville by hiding behind a lady's big hat, and thus secreting himself till this scribe had finished his sermon. What a nuisance big hats are anyway!

Three cheers for Tom Johnson, the "best mayor of the best governed city in the country," according to Lincoln Steffens! Glenville became a part of Cleveland July 24. The great race tracks, the finest in the country, are in what was Glenville. August 1-3 was the great track meet. It was "up to" Mayor Johnson to wink at or enforce the state law against gambling at horse races. Mayor Johnson said emphatically, "There shall be no gambling while I am mayor of Cleveland." As a result the races were declared off entirely and all horses sent to Buffalo. But what a comment on the business all this is! Let every good citizen of Ohio drop a card of thanks to Mayor Tom.

Ira H. Durfee, who is gaining a splendid reputation as an evangelist, will move to Hiram in order that his daughter may attend college. He has several meetings booked for early fall and winter.

Good preachers seem to be scarce this summer. Collinwood, Shelby, Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, Lakewood, Massillon, Steubenville, Fourth avenue, Columbus, Hubbard and Wooster are known to this scribe to be seeking men.

By the way, much has been said in our best paper, the Christian-Evangelist, lately about men for the ministry. The discussion by Dean Lhamon and Dr. Davis has been read with deep interest by this scribe.

In all, the emphasis has been laid on the poor financial compensation. But is there not great danger that we put entirely too much emphasis on this phase of the question? Can't we have a symposium or tract from several of our best preachers on motives for entering the ministry and emphasis laid on some of the compensations of the minister's life other than financial? There are many of us who have to squeeze the dollars mighty hard to meet all demands on us, that find a wealth of compensations in the ministry that defy all computation in dollars and cents. Can't we have these things talked about a little and held up before our young men? Now that the question is up let us discuss it fully.

May the dear Lord keep all the brethren as they go to and from the great convention in California, and may his smile be on the convention. May all be harmony, may the fellowship be sweet, may the Christ be exalted and his kingdom greatly strengthened and extended by this gathering.

Painesville, Ohio. C. A. Freer.

Piedmont, Va., Assembly.

The eighth annual session of the Piedmont assembly convened at Gordonsville, Va., July 28 to August 6. This is the annual convention of the Piedmont district, representing some forty churches. The program, under the direction of C. R. Sine, of Charlottesville, was an unusually strong one, embracing such names as C. A. Young, of Chicago, B. P. Smith, of Atlanta, B. A. Abbott, of Baltimore, R. M. Hopkins, of Louisville, J. J. Haley, of Richmond, Va., W. G. Johnston, of Roanoke, F. A. Hodge and Pres. J. Hopwood, of Lynchburg J. D. Homaker, of Strasburg, J. W. West, of the Virginia Anti-Saloon League, Hon. Wm. Hodges Mann, candidate for governor of Virginia, J. A. Hopkins, of Waynesboro, Pa., O. G. White, of Baltimore, James S. Thomas, state Sunday-school superintendent of Virginia, besides a number of local speakers, both men and women.

The program was arranged in the assembly fashion, one day being given to church problems, C. W. B. M., missions, district work, temperance, Sunday-school. C. A. Young gave a Bible study each morning on the prophecies of Isaiah and the epistle to the Romans. J. J. Haley preached the Sunday morning sermons to vast audiences, the last Sunday there being three thousand present. R. M. Hopkins conducted the Sunday-school sessions and led the music for the entire assembly. W. G. Johnston preached an evangelist sermon every night. This year's session was the best ever held in the eight years and great credit is due D. E. Hanna, the chairman, and C. H. Walker, the treasurer, for the financial success.

Have You Rheumatism?

You Can Be Cured. FREE

A Scientific Discovery.

It is now possible to be cured of any form of rheumatism without having your stomach turned up-side down or being half choked to death, and every sufferer from rheumatism should welcome this marvelous discovery with open arms and give it an honest trial. The new remedy was discovered by John A. Smith, Milwaukee, Wis. who is generous enough to send it free to every sufferer who writes at once. It is a home treatment and will not keep you from your work.

As you know if you've tried them, every so-called rheumatic remedy on the market to-day, except this genuine cure, will cause you violent stomach pains, and some of them are so dangerous they will cause heart trouble. And the worst of it is they never cure. When a person has rheumatism the constitution is so run down that he should be very careful what he puts into his stomach.

It therefore gives me pleasure to present a remedy that will cure every form and variety of rheumatism. That remedy is

"GLORIA TONIC."

Before I decided to tell the world about the discovery of "Gloria Tonic" I had it tried on hospital patients, also on old and crippled persons with perfect success. But some people never will believe anything until they know it from experience, so the best and quickest way is for you to write me that you want to be cured and I will send you a package of "Gloria Tonic" free of cost. No matter what your form of rheumatism is—acute, chronic, muscular, inflammatory, sciatic, neuralgia, gout, lumbago, etc., "Gloria Tonic" will surely cure you. Do not mind if other remedies have failed you, nor mind if doctors say you are incurable. Mind no one but write me to-day sure. "Gloria Tonic" will stop those aches, pains, and inflammations, and cure you so that life will again be worth living. This offer is not for curiosity seekers but is made to rheumatics only. To them I will send a trial package of "Gloria Tonic" free.

Never before has a remedy been so highly endorsed as "Gloria Tonic." Among the eminent people who endorsed it are:

DR. G. QUINTERO, X. Medical Doctor and [illegible] the University of Venezuela, whose indorsement of "Gloria Tonic" bears the official seal of the United States Consulate.

HON. EUGENE H. PLUMACHER, UNITED STATES CONSUL, Maracaiba.

STEVENSON MacADAM, F. I. C., F. C. S. of Analytical Laboratory Surgeons Hall Edinburg, Scotland.

L. L. RATHMAN, CALOOTE, South Australia.

THE EDITOR of the famous Medical Journal "Health," London, England, and many others.

So far this marvelous remedy has cured persons of upwards 86 years of age, their suffering dating from 8 weeks to 52 years. It is put up in tabletform and is free from ACIDS and ALCOHOL.

If you are a sufferer send your name to-day and by return mail you will receive "Gloria Tonic" and also the most elaborate book ever gotten up on the subject of Rheumatism, absolutely free. This book contains many drawings from actual life and will tell you all about your case. You get "Gloria Tonic" and this wonderful book at the same time, both free, so let me hear from you at once and soon you will be cured. Address: JOHN A. SMITH, 1506 Gloria Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.

SCALP HUMOR WITH LOSS OF HAIR

Merciless Itching Made Him Wild. Speedy Cure by Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

"For two years my neck was covered with humor, spreading to my hair, which fell out, leaving an unsightly bald spot, and the soreness, inflammation and merciless itching made me wild. Friends advised Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and after a few applications the torment subsided, to my great joy. The sores soon disappeared, and my hair grew in again as thick as ever. I shall always recommend Cuticura." (Signed) H. J. Spalding, 104 W. 104th St., N. Y. City.

JEREMIAH IN THE DUNGEON.

—Jer. 38:1-13.

Memory verses, 8 10.

Golden Text.—Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.—Matt. 5:10.

The incident which forms the theme of the present lesson is taken from a part of the book of Jeremiah; which belongs to the third group (see division as given in the article on last week's lesson), that is, the section having to do with the reign of Zedekiah. Josiah, the good king, who had carried on the reformation of ritual and morals along the lines laid down in the book of Deuteronomy, was succeeded upon the throne by his three sons in turn. Jehoahaz, who came to the throne when his father was defeated and killed in battle against Necho, of Egypt, reigned only three months before the king of Egypt deposed him and carried him away as a prisoner to Egypt. The Pharoah then put Jehoiakim, another son of Josiah, upon the throne. Of his own character and career, we were speaking in the last lesson. The defeat of the Egyptian expedition by Babylon, left this newly risen empire free to turn upon Judea. Jehoiakim lived in fear of Babylon, but lived badly and suffered the panic-stricken people to turn back to their corrupt heathen practices, and at last Nebuchadrezzar, king of Babylon, carried him into captivity at Babylon (2 Chron. 36:5,6). With him were taken many of the best people of Judah, so that the real captivity of the nation may be said to have begun at this time, 596 B. C. But the dynasty, though humbled, was not destroyed. The son of Jehoiakim was made king and took the name Jehoiakin. His reign lasted only three months, when he also was sent in captivity to Babylon. Judah was by this time, as will readily be understood, completely in the power of Babylonia. Whether or not Jerusalem should be spared and the nation permitted to continue its existence even nominally was purely a question of colonial policy to be determined at Babylon. But the king of Babylonia gave Judah another king, Zedekiah, who was either a younger son of Josiah (Jer. 37:1) or a brother of Jehoiakin, and therefore a grandson of Josiah (2 Chron. 36:10).

Jeremiah, prophesying during the reign of Zedekiah, urged the policy of peaceful submission to the king of Babylon. There were rash and hot-headed patriots who had been unable to learn prudence from the fates of Josiah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim and Jehoiakin, all of whom within about twelve years had fallen victim to their ambition to fight against the greater powers. These advisers often took on the manner and garb of prophets and declared in Jehovah's name that he would give victory if the nation would revolt against its masters. But Jeremiah, as Isaiah had done, stood for peaceful submission. It was not cowardice, but a philosophy of history which saw in the conquering power of Nineveh, and then of Babylon, God's instruments for inflicting upon his chosen people the just punishment for their unfaithfulness. Naturally Jeremiah was accused of being a traitor, because he prophesied evil things and advised surrender. The king was weak. He was not without some faith in Jehovah and in Jeremiah as a true prophet, but he was overborne by evil counsellors whom he was powerless to resist. At their insistence he delivered the prophet to be put to death. Afterward he was delivered, by the king's help, and was kept in hiding until the final destruction of the city.

THE MEANING OF THE LORD'S DAY.—Rev. 1:10; Acts 20:7; 2 Cor. 3.

Origin of the Lord's Day. It is unfortunate that the Christian world has fallen into the habit of calling the first day of the week the Sabbath. This custom began with Puritanism in England, when the common desecration of the Lord's day led the pious to seek its protection by applying to it the Old Testament sanctions of the Sabbath. From the beginning it was not so. Immediately after the resurrection of Jesus Christ, the first day of the week began to be kept as a sacred day by the church. While it remained a Jewish church, the Sabbath was also observed on Saturday, but as a Jewish, not a Christian institution. When the church became Gentile in its membership, the Sabbath disappeared, and only the Lord's day remained as its weekly holyday. Being based not on a command, like the Sabbath, but on the sublime fact of the resurrection of Christ, the references to it in the New Testament scriptures are, of course, only in the nature of historical and incidental mention. Such are found in Acts 20:7; 1 Cor. 16:2; Rev. 1:10.

Meaning of the Lord's Day. 1. It witnesses to the fact of Christ's resurrection from the dead. No other reason could possibly be assigned for its choice by the early believers in him. It is a living monument, erected within the bosom of the church, to him who lived, and was dead, and who liveth forevermore. (Rev. 1:17, 18.) 2. It testifies to his divine character and work. He was "declared to be the Son of God with power, by his resurrection from the dead" (Rom. 1:4). He becomes to us the deliverer from death. "Because I live, ye shall live also," he says. He "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." When he rose from the dead he "became the first fruits of them that slept." (John 14:19; 2 Tim. 1:8-10; 1 Cor. 15:20.)

Privileges of the Lord's Day. 1. Rest from the toil and burden of the week's employment. This privilege is more and more being withheld from the world's workers, by that greed which ministers to the material profit and pleasure of man. Sunday laws are deserving of more rigid enforcement, not for the purpose of compelling anybody to worship God, which nobody desires to do, or could if they wished, but to allow of this weekly day of rest for all who labor. 2. It affords opportunity to cultivate the spiritual nature, by giving a season for Bible study and communion with God in prayer and meditation, and by attending the public assembly of the saints, where the ordinances of the church may edify and and instruct. (Heb. 10:24,25.) 3. Its sweetest privilege, to the earnest believer, is that of communing with the Master and his brethren in the Lord's supper, wherein are set forth the great facts of his redemption, his participation in the life of Christ, and his hope of the return of the Savior to receive his own to himself. (Acts 20:7; 1 Cor. 11:23-26; 10:16,17.)

Being in the Spirit on the Lord's Day. How important is a proper preparation for the sacred privileges of the Lord's day. With the common neglect of the services of the church and the reading of the Bible, how can this day bring its blessed ministry to our hearts? They are already so occupied as to afford little room for high and holy communings. If we, like John, were cultivating our spiritual natures, we too would have uplifting visions of our glorious Lord, and our eternal heavenly home.

MISSION WORK AMONG WOMEN. —Acts 16:13-18; Titus 2:3-5.

For the Leader.

Mission work among women is a topic that calls to mind the fact that in matters of religion the women have been the stronghold of its existence. Whether true or false be the religion, she has held to it with all her nature, giving the adoration of her heart and the last drop of blood if necessary. If the religion to which she has given the best of her life be false, the more is the pity, that she should render such devotion in vain. No one has a word of blame for her in her devotion to the gods of paganism. It is only pity and a desire to show her the religion that ennobles woman; the religion alone of all the beliefs of man that frees woman from slavery and gives her a place among her brothers. Let us note to-night some of the things she suffers in pagan lands; some of the good works that have been wrought in these lands in her behalf; and some of the things she has been able to do for her Master since she has found him in the gospels.

For the Members.

1. Let us think of what paganism does for young womanhood. There are many thousands of young women in pagan lands who have not so much hope of ever being anything on their own account, in their own names, as the beasts of the field. They are yet in their teens—many of them twelve and thirteen, some older, some younger, and yet they are widows. The blame of the husband's death is upon them. They are the prey of a mother-in-law's tyranny. Doomed to a slavery worse than the negro in the United States in antebellum days ever knew, they toil on without light or hope unless the missionary of the cross comes near them.

2. Let us think of what paganism has done for all women. The place woman occupies in the pagan world is vastly different from what she occupies in the Christian world. She is the equal of man in this and other Christian lands. This in a religious sense at least. And the political senses in which she has an inferior place are relics of a pagan spirit, not a Christian. In pagan countries she is not thought of as of moral worth; she is not thought of as a person among persons in the world; she has no entity of her own; all she is, is in the right of her husband. She is a convenience more than anything else. She is so treated. Shut up in harems; suspected and veiled; or used as associates of the sensual and sinful. To be loved and respected is foreign to the thought man has of his wife in most pagan lands.

3. How different when we come to consider the Christian religion! Mary and others appear in leading places with the apostles. A woman carries the first news of a risen Lord to men. The exalted Hebrew ideal of woman was intensified by Christ. No difference is put between them in their approach to God. They are servants in the church. With their husbands they expound the gospel more fully to even those who preach, as in the case of Priscilla. They are last at the cross and first at the grave. A woman had faith enough to send for him when her brother died, and at this meeting the most abiding monument of the divinity of Jesus was erected. It was a woman who had the love to break the costly box of ointment and perfume the room in which Jesus sat. Everywhere the Master and those who went out under his commission made no difference such as paganism does between her and her brother. And in all lands she has met this recognition of merit with the truest love, and the most abiding faith, and the undying devotion of womanhood. She is the hope of her fallen sisters now and ever in all mission lands.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Uniontown, Aug. 4.—We have just closed a great meeting. Bro. E. E. Davidson, of Kansas City, did the preaching. There were 68 additions—48 baptisms, two by statement, 2 restored, and 16 from the sects.—COMSTOCK BROTHERS.

ILLINOIS.

Chicago, Aug. 7.—Eight additions at the Ashland church yesterday, six by baptism.—J. F. F.

Saybrook, Aug. 3.—Two baptisms since last report.—JAS. N. THOMAS.

Plymouth, Aug. 1.—Eight additions since coming here July 16.—JAS. E. STEBBINS.

Ramsey.—The tabernacle meeting here conducted by E. L. Frazier, assisted by Sister Myrtle Park, closed August 9. Ten were baptized. Twenty-five names were added to the church roll. The church was set in order, and they want a preacher to locate. It is a good field for a hard worker. Brother Frazier's next post office is Mays, Ind.

Forrest, Aug. 6.—Preached our farewell here this morning. Two additions. These make 32 additions since May 15.—ROCHESTER IRWIN.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Roff.—We have just closed a very successful month's meeting here, with Bro. W. P. Crouch, of Bristol, Tenn., preaching. It resulted in 61 additions to the church—36 from the world, 11 by relation, six from the Methodists, five from the Baptists and three from the Presbyterians. There were 44 baptisms. Of the 61 additions 27 were men and boys.—E. S. ALLHANDS.

IOWA.

Braddyville, Aug. 6.—Five additions yesterday at regular services. One from the denominations and four by confession and baptism. We begin our meeting Aug. 27 with E. W. Bowers and Professor Butler as evangelist and singer.—LOIS M. LAWRENCE, clerk.

Ames, Aug. 11.—Two added to the church since last report.—F. D. FERRALL, pastor.

KANSAS.

Caldwell, Aug. 10.—One baptized after prayer-meeting last night.—LEE H. BARNUM.

Wellington, Aug. 8.—Three added yesterday by obedience and one by letter.—H. M. BARNETT.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville.—Four more additions at the Parkland church Sunday, August 6—two by letter and two by baptism. One more at Boston, in a meeting with Bro. J. S. Shouse.—G. W. NUTTER.

Tilton, Aug. 3.—A short meeting conducted by H. C. Patterson, of Indianapolis, Ind., has just closed with 23 additions—18 by confession, four by statement, one reclaimed.—A. B. ROBERTSON, pastor.

MARYLAND.

Clayton, July 31.—Rev. J. Murray Taylor, of Washington, D. C., assisted by Rev. J. R. Gaff, recently closed a two weeks' meeting at the Jerusalem Christian church. Nine persons made the good confession.—A. V. O.

Jerusalem, Aug. 7.—Two additions last Lord's day.—A. V. O.

MISSOURI.

Gallatin, Aug. 6.—One addition by statement at morning service. Work is prospering.—C. W. COMSTOCK.

Clinton, Aug. 6.—Brooks Brothers just closed a meeting that resulted in 33 additions. One confession yesterday.—G. W. TERRELL.

Willmathsville, Aug. 8.—Began a meeting yesterday. Good audiences. Prospects good for a successful meeting. Expect to organize a church soon.—W. T. CLARKSON, evangelist.

Fayette, Aug. 8.—Twenty-four additions last Lord's day, making 94 since the great tent meeting by Messrs. Brown and Curry closed. Baptized 67 Sunday evening. Since coming here last August 145 have been added to the church.—R. B. HELSER.

NEW MEXICO.

Roswell, Aug. 7.—We had four additions yesterday, and two last Lord's day. The church is united and at work.—C. C. HILL.

OHIO.

Athens, Aug. 7.—Seven additions in the last two Sundays. Work of enlarging the church building begun.—T. L. LOWE.

Dayton, Aug. 7.—Two baptisms yesterday. All departments of work in good shape. Prospects good.—HENRY F. KELTCH.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Ellwood City, Aug. 8.—Three additions last Lord's day. We have started an open air meeting on the main thoroughfare, and it is doing well.—FERD F. SCHULTZ, minister.

TEXAS.

San Angelo.—The meeting conducted by R. S. Martin at San Angelo benefited every religious body. The immediate results are—38 added to the church roll, 19 by confession and baptism and 19 by letter. Five others have made the confession and will be baptized later.—S. T. SHORE.

Graham, Aug. 9.—The meeting held in Davis, I. T., by Bro. Wesley Parker and myself closed last Sunday night with 74 additions.—A. C. PARKER.

Regimental Reunions and Forty-Second Anniversary Battle Chickamauga,

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 17-21, 1905.

On September 18, 1905, will occur the forty-second anniversary of the battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle, and, in addition, to hold at the same time, a grand reunion of all the regiments that participated in the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notable gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first time since they marched from its blood stained fields, forty-two years ago.

Grand and glorious will be the meeting and all who attend will have cause to rejoice. The lowest rate ever secured has been given the entire public for this occasion, one cent per mile, short line distance.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long before none will be left to do this noble work; take this opportunity and don't let it escape you, it is worth six months in the school room to any student.

It may be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

What Does Christian Science Say?

St. Louis, Mo., August 7.

The Editor, Christian-Evangelist:—In the Christian-Evangelist of June 22, there appeared an article, reproduced from the New York Observer, by the Rev. H. D. Jenkins, of Chicago, entitled "What a Pastor Sees of Christian Science." In the article occurred the following quotation, being part of a conversation which Dr. Jenkins had with a lady, supposed to be a Christian Scientist:

" 'Now,' said Dr. Jenkins, 'let us look at the matter squarely. Does God love?' 'Most assuredly,' was the response, 'that is the fundamental article of our creed.' 'Very good,' said I, 'that is Christian. Now let us take one step more. Is God a person?' 'By no means,' came the instant rejoinder." Arguing from this answer, Dr. Jenkins argues that the Christian Science belief is pagan.

The impression which I wish to correct, and which I am sure you will be willing to help me correct, is that Christian Science teaches that God is not a person. In the Christian Science textbook, Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, by Mary Baker G. Eddy, the statement is frequently and plainly made that God is infinite person. The reply of the lady in question would, therefore, indicate that she was not sufficiently versed in Christian Science to discuss it, especially with so able a clergyman as Dr. Jenkins. Christian Science recognizes God as infinite person and man as his image and likeness.

If you can find space for this brief communication I shall be greatly obliged, and I am sure that you are just as anxious that your readers should know the truth about the Christian Science belief as I am.

James A. Logwood.

Publication Committee for the State of Missouri.

[We regret that our correspondent does not quote the exact words of Mrs. Eddy on this important point. We are sure we have seen real or alleged quotations from her writings, which seemed to teach to the contrary of what is here stated, but we do not have her book at hand. The Christian Evangelist has no desire to misrepresent Christian Science, and will welcome a clear statement from some authoritative source on this point.—Editor.]

A Few Words More.

Brother Garrison says I totally misrepresent him when I say that he puts the observance of the Lord's supper upon the ground of feeling. Not for any consideration would I misrepresent him. Did I do so? Here are his words in his issue of July 13: "There is no prohibition of weekly observance for those who feel it to be a duty, while there is no demand for a weekly observance on the part of those who do not yet feel it to be a duty."

The italics are mine. Now if this does not put the observance of the Lord's supper upon the ground of feeling I confess I do not understand simple language. All I had to guide me were his own words.

Brother Garrison asks, "Is the 'Union church in Christ' less biblical, for instance, than 'Union avenue Christian church,' in St. Louis?"

In raising this question he certainly misrepresents me. In this discussion we have not had the location and name of church houses—mere expedients—in mind at all, but the organization of a new religious body, in Monroe, Wisconsin, upon a set of human resolutions, and called the "Union church in Christ." This is a very different thing from naming a church house and its location. Of course the Editor did not intend to misrepresent me. Simpson Ely.

Joplin, Mo.

[1. Brother Ely knows, when his attention is directed to the matter, that to say of a certain act that we "feel it to be a duty," is the exact equivalent of saying that we have conscientious convictions on the subject. There is no other course for an honest man to pursue than to do what he feels to be his duty, for this can mean nothing less than doing what he believes to be his duty. This is something very different from mere good feeling, or pleasant sensations, which Brother Ely seems to have in mind as our meaning. The word "duty" escaped his attention.

2. Our point as relates to the name was that the use of a term to indicate the fact of two churches having united, is no more a departure from "scriptural terminology" than the use of a word to indicate location. They are terms used in the interest of clearness. The "Union avenue Christian church" is not the name of "the church house," but of the congregation worshiping there. It is thereby distinguished from other Christian churches. There was no "new religious body" organized in Monroe, Wisconsin. That is a misconception of Brother Ely. Nor did the two congregations unite "upon a set of human resolutions," but upon Jesus Christ as set forth in the New Testament. Would we not repudiate the idea that the churches of this reformation were built upon the "Declaration and Address" of Thomas Campbell? Let us be fair to others as we would have them be to us.—Editor.]

Address, J. HOPWOOD, President,
Lynchburg, Virginia.

David O. Smart, President Board of Church Extension.

On our cover page is a good likeness of D. O. Smart, president of the Board of Church Extension since its organization, in 1888, and re-elected for the seventeenth year. We give this cut of our president because we believe the people want to see and know the men who are in the responsible positions at the head of our great missionary societies.

Brother Smart's parents were of Virginia stock, and before moving to Missouri in 1833, lived in Kentucky. D. O. Smart was born February 15, 1843, in Independence, ten miles from Kansas City. He married Alice M. Walrond in 1866 and moved to Kansas City, where he has lived since that time.

Mr. Smart has led a busy life and has occupied many responsible positions. As a business man, his judgment has been in great demand. As a counselor in affairs of the church, his presence and appropriate words have always been conspicuous. He has been an elder for ten years in the Sixth and Prospect church, now Independence boulevard, of which Geo. H. Combs is pastor. Before the Sixth and Prospect church was organized, he was first deacon, then elder, in the First church.

As a business man we find him, first, as senior member of the banking firm of D. O. Smart & Co., then in cattle ranching in Colorado and Montana, and at present engaged in the management of his real estate interests in Kansas City.

Mr. Smart was a student at Bethany college. Interested in education, he is also president of the board of trustees of the Bible College of Missouri, located in Columbia. He was in the legislature of Missouri from 1892 to 1894. Mr. Smart sees through a proposition with almost unerring judgment, and is wise in balancing the opinions of men, and therefore his words carry great weight in the councils of the Board of Church Extension.

Mr. Smart has been a most liberal contributor to all our missionary societies through the local church. He has given large sums to the establishment of the fifteen churches in Kansas City, and has donated several thousand dollars to the Bible College of Missouri, at Columbia, and in former days to Bethany college.

"The Victory of Faith."

Our readers will be interested in knowing that our new book by Dr. E. L. Powell of Louisville, Ky., will be ready for delivery by the time this appears in print. The title of the book is "The Victory of Faith," and its contents is made up of twenty addresses and sermons. The book will be bound in silk cloth binding and printed on latest style book paper. The price will be $1 postpaid. An idea of the book can be formed by reading the following table of contents: The Victory of Faith; God's Power; The Natural Man and the Spiritual Man; A Soul Battle; Christ's Treatment of Doubt, or Faith Triumphant; Easter Hopes; Missions, The Crowning Glory of the Century; The Cradle and Christmas; The Three Dimensions of Manhood; Our Liberty in Christ; The Specific for Beauty; Your Own, or Another's—Which; The Minister in the Market Place; An Outline Sermon; Is There a Hell; The All-Conquering Name; The Castaway; Is There a Heaven; Are Those We Call Dead Alive; Was the Ideal of Our Fathers Practicable?

Our Home Missions and the Yellow Fever.

Our home missions is facing a very serious situation in the yellow fever. So many of our home missionaries are in the south that if the fever should become general or epidemic, the Home Society will be compelled to move the missionaries and their families away from that district.

Bro. Marcellus Ely has already gone to Missouri; our Home Board has made arrangements to transfer Brother Crystal from Baton Rouge; Brother Rowlison, of Tampa, has gone north on a vacation, and it is expected that Bro. Claude Hill, of Mobile, will go north shortly. Other missionaries, including Bro. Jno. A. Stevens, evangelist of Louisiana, will be urged to come northward.

If there are any churches that desire the services of these men, while they are driven away from their southern fields, for missionary work, and will write to Bro. B. L. Smith, our corresponding secretary, it is thought that arrangements can be quickly made.

Gloria in Excelsis.

This is a splendid book. It is such a relief to turn from the trashy, cheap books, so prevalent in many of our churches, to a book whose very appearance lends dignity to the worship. The compilers of this book have surely done a most valuable service to the cause of Christ. I am now in a series of meetings at Hickman Mills, Mo. One hundred copies of the new book were bought for $75. It was a wise investment. I had not seen the book until I came here. With an organist I began an examination of the book. "Now," she said, "let us put down on a slip of paper the songs we like." We sang song after song, putting down the number of each, until she exclaimed, "Well, we will have to put them all down." SIMPSON ELY.

Midsummer Song.

Dawnings of amber and amethyst eves;
Soft in the south wind the laughter of leaves;
Breath of the poppy and death of the rose—
Midsummer comes and midsummer goes!

Dapple on cheek of the apple and plum;
Honey bees droning a die-away hum;
Swales in a shimmer and dales in a doze—
Midsummer comes and midsummer goes!

Darting of dragon fly, flutter of moth;
Barley in windrow and wheat in the swath;
Hush song and thrush song—the mother bird knows—
Midsummer comes and midsummer goes.

Moonlight and noonlight all glamour and gleam;
Hillside and rillside a thrall to the dream;
Capture the rapture before the day's close—
Midsummer comes and midsummer goes.

The Charm of Weather.

By James Buckham.

In that most fascinating of all forms of literature, printed or unprinted—the private journal—the privileged reader will find no subject more faithfully considered than the weather. One encounters it upon almost every page. To the recorder its charm becomes a gentle tyranny, to which he yields with habitual delight. If it has rained or snowed, if the wind has blown or the sun shone, the journalist has been so impressed by the fact that he cannot suffer it to be forgotten. It has had a real significance for him. It has been woven into the texture of his thoughts and feelings. He knows that something vital would be omitted from the record of the day if the weather were not mentioned.

Nor is this prevalence of the weather in the private journal—as has sometimes been cynically suggested—any evidence of poverty of material on the part of the recorder. It is not so frequently mentioned because the recorder has little or nothing else to write about. The charm of weather to any really sensitive and observant person—one who has enough of the analytical and emotive in his nature to care to keep a record of his own life and of other human lives closely associated with his—is a legitimate and vital charm. The day's atmospheric conditions are really responsible for a large part of the day's feeling. To leave the weather out of such an intimate and minute record of individual experience as a daily journal, would be to ignore one of the most subtle influences that make everyday life what it is.

Consider how much it really means to the keeper of a private journal, whether a day has been sunny or cloudy, calm or boisterous, gentle and gracious, or raw and buffeting. If he has a susceptible spirit—as is most likely the case with one who daily studies himself and the things that impress and influence him—the recorder is conscious of having been subtly affected by the color of the sky, the temperature of the outdoor air, the voices or hushes of the wind, and all the sights and sounds and odors of nature that depend upon atmospheric conditions. These conditions have, very likely, roused and sustained the greater part of his vagrant feelings during the day. Unless there has been some strong and emphatic human motive governing his emotions, it is nature which has determined the character of his day's moods. These have been subject to the character of the weather—have varied, probably, with atmospheric changes and caprices, have been alternately lightened and shadowed like the landscape under a fitful sky. All this is something that ought to go into a faithful record of a day's life. It is something that was felt to be essential at the time. It may explain something that has entered into the permanent texture of the soul. It may recall in after day a mood, an atmosphere, a glimpse of truth, that was felt to be rare and precious at the time.

This charm of weather is really a most vital thing to all of us, whether we are keepers of more or less elaborate reflective journals, or only ordinary "a line a day" diarists, or perhaps no recorders at all of the passage of time. Let any one of us honestly and thoughtfully estimate for himself the part which the weather plays in his enjoyment and appreciation of life, and the psychological value and significance of changing skies and varying atmospheric conditions will surely impress him. What would be our mental condition if it were not for the charm of weather—that is to say, the relief and delight and stimulus that we derive from frequent atmospheric changes? As in some measure a reply to this question, it is instructive to note the confessed stagnation of spirits suffered by those who dwell for any length of time in climates of such long continued sameness as prevail in many sections of the Pacific slope of North America. The real charm of weather consists not in single and maintained aspects of mildness or fairness, but in variations, contrasts, surprises, that keep one's attention on the qui vive, and stimulate the spirit by a rapid play of responsive feeling. To go out in the morning, as so many of us do in these North Atlantic states, with compact batteries of weather protectors about our persons, not knowing what will be required before night, has a pleasant spice of adventure about it that far more than compensates for the trouble and inconvenience of the extra burden. Think of the deadly monotony of having to use an umbrella and mackintosh, as they do in some parts of the west, every day for four months, and then for eight months to know that there is hardly a ghost of a chance of your new straw hat being spotted by a splash of rain! No wonder that, in spite of all the scenic magnificence, the mild climate, fertility and beauty of the Pacific slope, exiled easterners long unspeakably for the pitiless winters, roaring storms and kaleidoscopic changes of their native land. It is such a mental and spiritual tonic not to know what a day or a night will bring forth in the way of weather; such an antidote for the stupefying sameness of life to encounter two or three huge atmospheric surprises in the course of thirty-six consecutive hours!

Blessed is the man or woman who has an emotional susceptibility to the charm of weather! It is one of those free and universal delights of mankind, intended, we must believe, by a kind and compassionate Creator for lightening the burden of an existence that so often becomes colorless and humdrum. To go from the comfortable, but confined and often oppressive, atmosphere of heated rooms into the hurly-burly of an unexpected east storm, is a real mental and physical awakening. To have a winter thaw whip around in the night and become a piercing northwest blizzard, is a stinging stimulant that is almost unequaled for a hardy constitution. All kinds of weather are charming to the healthy mind and body; and the privilege of encountering them all in succession is their chiefest charm. No species of meteorological surprise is too disagreeable in itself to be less than delightful to the real lover of nature, who, like other lovers, believes that the whims and caprices of his mistress constitute her most piquant attraction. Never so lovely is she as when she changes from mood to mood, now smiling and now pouting, now clinging and caressing, and anon teasing and flouting and baffling. Nature's human vagaries are the source of her subtlest charm. It is when she is most like us that we love her best.

Variety is the spice of weather as it is the spice of life. If we turn to nature for stimulus and refreshment, as so many of us are doing in these days of mental and spiritual overstrain, where shall we find our all-mother more accessible or more gracious than in those alternations of weather that appeal alike to the dweller in city and country?—The Interior.

Is Death Worth Dying?

A society for the prevention of suicide might be constructed on the principle suggested by the action of a St. Louis resident who, seeing an aged man wading into the river for the purpose of destroying himself, called out to him peremptorily to "come back and don't be foolish." When the rescuer landed the intending suicide, he poured philosophy and consolation into the old man's ears until he changed his whole point of view, and came to the determination to live. Suicides in intention probably need, more than anything else, a good talking to of a sympathetic and uplifting nature, and sometimes some material help. There are societies for everything else, why not a society for the prevention of suicide? The melancholy need a jolt, something new to think about and to be interested in. It should be the business of the society we speak of to provide this, to give its proteges a mental shake-up. Why should any one in good health wish to die, when there are so many other places to go than across the Jordan, and something interesting happening every day? The love sickness that leads to suicidal madness is the most baseless of all. Is it possible that in a population of something like two billions on the earth, there is only one "affinity"? Being deprived of that, must the sentimental sufferer, his or her quietus make? Time heals all wounds. It even softens the memory of those horrible, mortifying blunders we all make from time to time. Who knows but an old love affair may be so mellowed by the years that rejoicing that it didn't go any farther, may come to those who contemplated pistol or poison? Those "terrifics" may become even a subject for laughter later on. Men mostly commit suicide through loss of money, women for love, says a philosopher. The possession of either makes life pleasanter, but there is plenty of both in the world. There shall still be cakes and ale. No need to hasten to that bourne from which no traveler returns, for all are sure to reach it soon or late. It will elude no one. —Globe-Democrat.

How Religion Came to Buffalo Hump.

All through the winter of 1901 a straggling procession of fortune seekers made its way through the rough mountains of central Idaho, bound for Buffalo Hump. The cold was intense, the traveling difficult, the suffering great. Everything was expensive; shovels sold for twelve dollars, chickens for five, and wages were as high as fifteen dollars a day. Horse feed was a dollar a meal and whiskey fifty cents a drink. A teamster who owned a horse that could wear snowshoes made $1,500 in four months by hiring him out.

A young Episcopal clergyman thought the Buffalo Hump mines a good place for missionary work. There was no such thing in camp as Sunday. The miners were too busy for that, and gambling and drinking were the only forms of recreation. There was, therefore, great excitement over the expected arrival of a "tenderfoot sky pilot"; some were opposed, some were pleased, and all were excited, for anything "new" was a relief to Buffalo Hump. For the first time religion became a topic of conversation.

When within sixty miles of the mines he was accosted by a well-wisher. He told him that the snow was too deep to ride further, and the well-wisher consented to buy his horse for five dollars simply as a favor. He impressed upon the young preacher the importance of having a full knapsack, and advised him not to eat until he had gone far on his journey. Thanking him for his kind advice, the missionary courageously set out to tramp through sixty miles of snow, with only a blazed trail to guide him. By ten o'clock he was tired and hungry, by three o'clock he was famished and exhausted, and by six he dropped in his tracks. With eager fingers he untied the knapsack to find in it—a rock! The good Samaritan had relieved him of his lunch, and he had "packed" a useless, heavy burden for all those dreary miles!

But he had come to preach and not to cry, and his great good nature, his earnestness and his "gameness" deeply impressed the mining camp, and a wonderful change began to take place. Sunday labor was abandoned, and services were held every morning. Everything was a success but the singing, and that was a dead failure. "If we only had an organ," was the cry. The "sky pilot" said that they should have one. Returning through the silent woods to Lewiston, he purchased an organ and brought it into camp on horseback. That was a day of great rejoicing in Buffalo Hump. The only man who could play became so elated that he drank too much whiskey, and the service was postponed until evening, when it proved a great success. Men who had not been to church for twenty years came to that first service. A furious dog fight took place outside the log chapel during the sermon, but not a man left his seat. Christianity had come to stay at Buffalo Hump!—World's Work for August.

A Hint for Parsons.

A Springfield clergyman is telling a story of his last vacation, which is probably better appreciated by his fellows who have served the Lord in the villages than by those members of the profession who have ministered only to city charges.

"I took over a pulpit in a little country town about twenty miles from here," he says, "conducted the services to an end, then waited for the usual invitation to dinner. Because of some reason it did not come. I was hungry as a bear, so finally in desperation I approached a prosperous-looking farmer whom I had met before the services, and said, 'Brother, won't you come home with me for dinner?'

" 'Gladly, parson,' he answered; 'where do you live?'

" 'About twenty miles from here,' I answered, as airily as possible.

"For one moment he looked dumbfounded; then he saw the fun of the situation, and his hard old face broke into a thosand wrinkles as he grasped my hand, and said, 'Parson, let's go over to my house for dinner. It's a heap nearer than your'n.' "

Facts About the Country of Lewis and Clark.

The old "Oregon country" includes Washington, Oregon, Idaho and a small portion of Montana and Wyoming.

The state of Washington alone is larger than the New England states, together with the state of Delaware and the District of Columbia.

Oregon is larger than New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey together.

The "Oregon country" is equal in extent to the thirteen original states of the union, which now support a population of more than 30,000,000 inhabitants.

The New England states, together with New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, had a population of 21,231,450 in 1900, while Washington and Oregon together had but 931,639.

The combined area of England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Denmark, Holland and Belgium is 4,000 square miles less than the area of Washington and Oregon, and these countries have a population of more than 50,000,000.

France and Germany have each an area just about two-thirds as great as the old "Oregon country," and they support populations of 40,000,000 and 50,000,000 respectively.—From the August World's Work.

Secrecy in the Express Business.

Sixty-six years ago, and but a few years after railways had demonstrated their practicability, William Harnden met what seemed to him to be a real economic need by offering to carry valuable packages from New York to Boston, and for a consideration assume responsibility for loss. Harnden's valise, carried by steamboat from New York to Providence and thence by rail to Boston, was the beginning of a service which has advanced hand in hand with the railway industry, with which it is necessarily closely associated. Recognition of the economic value of the service was immediate. Companies were organized which selected particular sections of the country as their special fields of activity, until now an express service is found wherever transportation facilities exist, whether it be railway, steamboat, or stagecoach; a service which handles almost every form of traffic that can bear the charges imposed.

Of this large transporting agency, whose receipts reach the enormous sum of seventy-five million dollars yearly, which, for certain kinds of service, has become apparently an indispensable part of our industrial mechanism, the general public knows almost nothing. The companies neither make reports themselves nor are reports required of them by any governmental department.—Frank Haigh Dixon, in the July Atlantic.

Scolding Reform.

It is accepted as a truism among educators that no child can be made permanently good by simply scolding. The overscolded child is made worse by the process, and the overscolded politician is equally likely to deteriorate, and for the same reason. Even a good dog will try to earn a bad name, if he has it thrust too often upon him. Probably it would be an exaggerated statement to say that the essential spirit of reform in this country is the spirit of the scolding parent, but it resembles it too often.—Geo. W. Alger, in the August Atlantic.

"The Associated Press."

The Associated Press peports, published throughout the land, of President McKinley's assassination, last days and death, were the wonder and admiration of every reader. The Associated Press gave to the world, at the cost of thirty thousand dollars and its correspondent's health, the first adequate account of the Martinque disaster. Word of the death of Pope Leo XIII, in spite of many barriers, reached New York in just nine minutes, and San Francisco in just eleven minutes, after the actual event. How such results are accomplished, something of the difficulties to be overcome, a hint of what a correspondent's life must be, are some of the points covered by Melville E. Stone, in his article in the July Century, on "The Associated Press," and its methods of operation. Not the least interesting feature of the story to most readers this month will be Mr. Stone's account of how national conventions are reported and how campaign and election news is gathered and disseminated.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week with the Woodneys.

THE FIFTH DAY (CONTINUED).

If Arthur Lowell had seen the Woodneys set forth for the grand dinner to be given at G. C. D. Woodney's, he would hardly have recognized Mace. A girl hard at work upon a white batiste, presents a very different view from the same girl in the same batiste. Mace's shoes were not those which showed the place where a hole was coming, and which were wrinkled with age like her grandmother. They were smooth and shining. Her hat was a simple one, white like her dress. The silk sash was white, too, and as she walked along beside old Mrs. Woodney, she looked refreshingly cool in the glare of the August sun; for though it was nearly six o'clock, the sun was still above the apple trees in the Enderthorpe yard. Bob Enderthorpe had strolled down to his front gate, but if he had entertained the mad thought of saying, "Good-evening," when the little party should pass, he realized at the first glimpse of Mace that on a state occasion such as this his awkwardness, his red hair and his freckles would be out of place. He hastily made for the house, as if he had just thought of something to do. Mr. Woodney, with his hand on Mrs. Woodney's arm, went in advance. As they were far enough ahead of Mace and her grandmother to be safe, Mr. Woodney whispered, "My dear, how does Mace look?"

His wife whispered emphatically, "Fine enough for any company!" Mr. Woodney chuckled.

"Oh, father!" called Mace reproachfully, "You and mother are having secrets." She had forgotten all about being tired. Her spirits were high, and her body and limbs were as strong and full of life as if she had been tucked up in cotton all day. That's what it means to be young. Marcia Winterfield was standing at her father's gate. Mace was glad, because she wanted Marcia to know of the dinner.

"Awfully sorry I wasn't at home when you called, said Marcia as they paused to speak. Mace knew she had been at home, but Marcia looked so sweet and pretty and innocent, Truth blushed with shame in her presence, and would fain have been a gentle deceiver. "We are going to have all of you here before school begins," Marcia continued warmly. "When will it be convenient for us to call?"

"Just come at any moment!" cried Mr. Woodney. Old Mrs. Woodney gave her son a glance which, luckily, he could not see. Marcia suddenly exclaimed, "Oh! Have any of you seen our young white dorking? It is a perfectly beautiful rooster and it was given us by a friend from the country. We haven't seen him all day,"

The Woodneys had not seen the cock described. After expressing regrets, they passed on to G. C. D. Woodney's. They entered the yard of four acres, and passed up the granitoid walk midway between two sweeping driveways set with flowers. "Is anyone on the porch?" asked Mr. Woodney.

"Not a soul," replied his wife, "the house seems deserted. Yet it is past the time set for our coming." They reached the splendid mansion and Mace found herself upon the stone porch which she had admired from afar. Her mother rang the bell. "This porch is magnificent, father," whispered Mace. "This is a heavy stone balustrade all around, making a perfect semicircle. Vines hang all along the side. The porch is nearly as big as our entire house. Here are wicker settees and cane chairs."

"Let us sit in them," said old Mrs. Woodney, "for we've had quite a walk, and no one seems ready to open the front door."

They waited. "Yes, mother," said Mr. Woodney, "do sit down; I'm afraid you will be tired out. Perhaps you had better ring again, Geraldine."

Mrs. Geraldine Woodney rang again. "I wish I had brought my book along," she remarked, as old Mrs. Woodney seated herself stiffly upon a settee. Mace began to feel unpleasantly excited. They ought not to have to wait at the door when they came in response to G. C. D. Woodney's invitation. "I feel like going back home!" she cried. Just then she espied a buggy coming rapidly along Main street. It stopped before the yard, and the patent gate sprung open. The buggy swept up one of the front drives. There was one occupant, a young man of nineteen or twenty, tall, dark, handsome. It was Ed Woodney, the son of G. C. D. Woodney. He looked with surprise at the little group on the porch, then leaped to the gravel path and bowed. The horse was restive and required all his attention. "How do you do?" he called. "Is this cousin Benjamin Woodney and his family? I am Ed Woodney." At that moment, a man came running around the house to take charge of the horse and buggy, and Ed approached the porch. "Very nice in you people to come to see us," he delared, holding out his hand. "This is Cousin Geraldine, I suppose. And is this Auntie?"

"I am your Aunt Macie," said old Mrs. Woodney.

"Of course," said Ed, who had forgotten her name. "And this is—"

"Your Cousin Mace," said Mrs. Geraldine Woodney.

Ed shook hands warmly with Mace. He was very much pleased with her appearance, for he saw at a glance that such a cousin must be a credit even to his family. He had feared these poor relations might be like the Enderthorpes or Wrens, and his relief was great in finding that, so far as appearance went, they would "do." Of course, he was yet to learn if they conducted themselves like his associates, but you can generally tell how a woman's tongue hangs by the hang of her dress. Mace was dressed at slight expense, but with no cost to good taste. It is true that Mrs. Geraldine was somewhat loose, as if she had been dressed while thinking about something else, but her colors harmonized. The old lady was stately and severe, and Mr. Woodney, in spite of blindness, presented a scholarly, refined appearance. Altogether, Ed was delighted and could hardly suppress his exultation. They, on their part, were variously impressed. Of course, Mr. Woodney liked him, but Mr.

CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific. Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Clossen, 126 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York

Woodney's likings went for nothing. Mace remembered that she had seen him going to the saloon, but in spite of that recollection, the winning manners and handsome face of Ed charmed her. She involuntarily contrasted him with Bob Enderthorpe and they seemed almost of distinct races. Old Mrs. Woodney, who disliked being called "Auntie," was a little ruffled by the other's breezy manners. Mrs. Woodney tried to think which hero of popular fiction he seemed most to resemble. She hesitated between "Steerforth" of David Copperfield, and Bulwer's "Pelham." It was Mrs. Geraldine's custom to liken her acquaintances to fictitious characters, and treat them as the characters in the books liked to be treated. In this way she had made a good many mistakes, but thus far,she had not profited by them, because she never realized that the fault was her own. One's fault should always be brought home and recognized and acknowledged, for nobody else is ever willing to adopt it.

"Do come in the house," said Ed, graciously, as he unfastened the door with his nightlatch.

"Why, yes," said old Mrs. Woodney, "we were thinking about it."

They went into the spacious hall and saw Jennie tripping down the grand staircase in a fluffy cloud of pink and white. "I am so sorry," she called. "I wasn't quite ready, and couldn't come, and the new maid won't be here till to-morrow. Our cook won't attend the door, and it is so provoking! Come right in the parlor. Ed, we have invited them all for dinner—just think!"

"I am very glad!" exclaimed Ed, bowing them into the parlor. "I am just back from the country—been away three days. I knew nothing of the invitation, but it's jolly to have you all. Excuse me while I run up to my room; I'm awfully frowsy and dusty and limp, you know, from a hard country visit."

When he was gone, Jennie said, "Papa is very busy about putting up the crop of hay, and he doesn't get in till dark, generally. I don't know where mamma is, but she'll be here pretty soon, I think. She must have taken her buggy, for it isn't in the carriage-house."

"I am afraid," said old Mrs. Woodney, "that she has invited us at an inconvenient time."

"Oh, no, indeed," said Jennie, "one time is just as good as another." Jennie was a girl with very little conversation, and having now expended all the words which the circumstance had suggested, she was at very low water indeed. She had been taught to use as many words as possible on the slightest occasion, but she was unimaginative, and the words were likely to be pretty much the same. The Woodneys tried to float her out into the main stream of common interest, but they could not draw her far from shore.

"This is a lovely view from your windows," said Mrs. Geraldine, gazing across the velvety lawn toward the ruins of the brick church, half hidden under the wild vines.

"Yes, indeed, we think it is," said Jennie.

"What a splendid piano!" said Mace, gazing with admiration at a rosewood upright.

"I think it is rather nice," said Jennie.

"I believe I hear a buggy coming," said Mr. Woodney, hopefully.

"Yes, I rather think I do, myself," said Jennie.

She smiled upon them with a kind but rather vague smile. The contrast between her and Mace was striking. Both were brunettes, but of different types. Jennie was small of feature, dainty of form, reserved, aloof. Mace was built on a more generous pattern. Her features were larger, her hands stronger, her eyes full of life and energy, never showing the far-away, uninterested expression of the other's. In brief, Jennie appeared a girl without any enthusiasm, while Mace could become excited perhaps too easily.

"It is your mother!" exclaimed Mrs. Geraldine, as the buggy came in view. "She is coming home!" A thrill of excitement ran through the invited guests.

"Yes, it is my mother," said Jennie. "She has come home."

Business Notes.

"What is Your Life?" by Russell, is one of the books to put into the hand of any young friend, especially one leaving home even for a time. Price, $1.00.

The devotional books, "Alone with God," "Heavenward Way," and "Half Hour Studies," are always in demand and always acceptable. In good silk cloth, 75 cents each.

We have made another order for that splendid, pure, wholesome and uplifting book, "The Simple Life," by Chas. Wagner. Hoping to do good causes us to offer it in cloth binding at 50 cents, postpaid.

In marriage certificates, booklets and such like, we are fully equipped and will take pleasure in sending you our circular, with full list of the stock on hand and prices of same. Command us in any way possible.

We have had to make another shipment of "The Christian Worker's Bible and Christian Worker's Testament," but will be well stocked before these notes are read, and we can fill your order or give you any information.

More inquiry for Home Department and Cradle Roll supplies are coming in than we anticipated, but the stock is now complete and we take pleasure in promptly responding to all calls. Write for circulars or samples.

We are at last able to furnish such cards as will enable us to supply the "Faithful" series of reward cards to those using them, at same prices, too. This has been another tedious delay, but the supply now in hand will soon be gone.

Has your school used the red and blue buttons or has either of your Endeavor Societies tried them? We have them for both branches of the work, selling either red or blue, for either society or school, at 1 cent each in any quantity.

Our "Birthday Banks" are really handsome glass globes on which the margin is very small, but which we carry for the good of the schools; selling them at 35 and 50 cents and $1.35, postpaid, we will guarantee that you can get nothing nicer for the money from any publishing house.

Besides the books listed in this column for summer reading, look over the advertisement in this issue of others of a similar character and note the remarkable price at which we are selling them, making a "bargain" book sale of splendid, good, helpful reading every day in the week.

We have had to make an additional order for Souvenir Buttons, with scripture texts and scenes in the Life of Christ, so popular are they among Bible-school pupils. We are selling them at 15 cents per dozen, or $1 per 100, postpaid. It is a simple device by which to please Bible-school pupils.

We shall soon be compelled to run another edition of "The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, even if one of the reviewers did say, "It ought not to have been printed." By the way the one dollar bills are coming in for it, we guess the brotherhood is trying to find what is wrong with it. Others are welcome to join the search on payment of the $1 fee.

A strike in the book binderies of this city has caused us no little trouble and disapointment in getting out new editions of our book, so that we beseech our friends to bear with us, promising that every order shall be filled as promptly as possible, especially song book orders; but Popular Hymns No. 2, cloth, is now tied up in the bindery for a season.

The vice-president of this company suggests that we secure 500 copies of the Commentary of Matthew, by Peloubet, if it is possible to do so at such a rate as will enable us to continue the sale of them at 50 cents, postpaid, and we are trying to do so. But whether we do or not, those now on hand will go and are going at that price while they last; cloth bound, too, with 400 pages.

A brother kindly suggests to us that we ought to have no trouble about cashing private checks without cost (at least he has none) if we keep a bank account. Well, we have tried hard these many years to keep a bank account, but we have to give it up; it simply will not keep, and if it could it would lose fifteen cents each time a country local check is deposited. This loss amounts to hundreds of dollars to us each year, while we know the exchange often costs you absolutely nothing. Now, just "put yourself in our place."

"Gloria in Excelsis," in silk cloth, postpaid, at $1 per volume, is the cheapest and best song book of nearly 700 pages on the market. It is put up in leather back at $1.25 per copy, postpaid. In dozen lots the cloth sells at $9.50, not prepaid, and in 100 lots at 75 cents each, not prepaid. The leather back, in dozen lots, is $12, not prepaid. In one hundred lots it is 95 cents per copy, not prepaid. In quantities of 50 or more the rate for 100 will apply. More than 1 500 are now in the hands of the brotherhood and every mail brings us strong commendations of the book. It is the Best.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events.

The Peace Conference.

To use the Irish style of making a statement concerning the negotiations in progress at Portsmouth, N. H., between Japan and Russia, the known facts are mostly conjectures. Evidently, however, there is a serious hitch in the proceedings caused by a radical disagreement over several of the articles proposed by Japan. Those concerning the limitations of Russia's navy in the east and the fate of her interned war vessels can doubtless be so modified as to present no permanent obstacle to the progress of peace. The questions of the cession of Saghalien Island and the payment by Russia of an indemnity covering the expenses of Japan in prosecuting the war, are of a much more difficult character. President Roosevelt has deemed it necessary to intervene and, it is said, has proposed arbitration. It is also reported that his efforts to bring pressure to the end that an honorable and lasting peace may be concluded are being heartily seconded by England, Germany and France. War is a costly game and with these four countries urging peace neither Russia nor Japan can very well continue the conflict.

Taft in the Philippines.

Secretary Taft and his party, including several congressmen and Miss Alice Roosevelt, have been received in the Philippines with great eclat. Possibly to atone for the apparent partiality in visiting Japan while the peace negotiations were pending, they visited the Russian ships which are interned in Manila harbor. A formal banquet given by the natives to the visiting party in Manila gave Secretary Taft an opportunity to re-state the attitude of the administration toward the Philippines. There was nothing particularly new in it, but it was clear-cut and comprehensible. There are, he says, three opinions among Americans about the American occupation of the archipelago: First, that it gives America a chance to grow great in world politics and commerce and is therefore a good thing (true imperialism); second, that territorial expansion is criminal aggression, that it is contrary to our constitution and unjust to the inhabitants of the islands to hold them; and that they should therefore be given independence at once (true anti-imperialism); third, that the control of the Philippines for the present is a disagreeable and burdensome task which has been laid upon America by the fortunes of war, and that the discharge of this duty requires us to hold and educate them until they are fit for self-government and then to give them independence (the position of the administration). If no serious insurrection arises, says Mr. Taft, a popular assembly will be called to meet in April, 1907.

The President at Chautauqua.

The President made a visit to Chautauqua recently and, very naturally, made a speech. He spoke particularly about two things—the Monroe doctrine and the regulation of corporations. Of course one would not expect on such an occasion any new or startling declaration of policy, but he gave some sound and sensible talk. It is just as well to have occasional reassurance, from the President's mouth, that the Monroe doctrine will not, in any case, mean territorial aggression. Even in the last emergency, says the President, if some of our southern neighbors should become so turbulent and intolerable that interference were necessary, some way would be found to protect the rights of foreigners and terminate the impossible condition without territorial aggrandizement at their expense. Such assurances, if taken seriously as they should be, will help not only to make the Monroe doctrine acceptable to South America, but also to further the development of opinion by which it is becoming, if not a point of international law, at least an accepted item of international tradition. The gist of the remarks about the control of corporations was that regulation rather than prevention should be the aim, that additional legislation is necessary, and that we should proceed conservatively and carefully.

The Governor and the Law.

That Governor Hanly is willing to take his own medicine and enforce the law even when it is distasteful to him, is evident from a recent decision by him in a case where the governor's prerogative is usually considered quite ample. An appeal was made to the governor in behalf of a convicted murderer who had been sentenced to death. The governor is opposed to capital punishment on principle, but he has decided that he has no right to prevent capital punishment on that account when the law provides for it. His own statement of the case is interesting.

> Personally, I am opposed to capital punishment. I have a profound conviction that the state has no moral right to take the life of a citizen, save in self-defense, as in the enforcement of the law, the maintenance of peace and order, or as in case of riot, insurrection or rebellion.
> Human life is too sacred to be otherwise taken, even by the state itself. Were the state to adopt that policy, it would do more to inculcate respect for human life than it can do by any number of executions.
>
> Feeling as I do upon this question, I have greatly desired to spare this man's life, and have even considered the adoption of a policy that would preclude the execution of any death sentence during the present administration. But, much as I desire it, I am unable to justify the adoption of such a policy. The law provides for such punishment, in the discretion of the jury, for the crime of murder. When a jury, duly impaneled, after fair trial and full consideration, has imposed the death penalty, I am convinced that the governor has no right to adopt a policy the effect of which would be to suspend the law in every case, even though he possess, technically, the power to do so.
> I stand for the enforcement of the law as it is written. That seems to me the highest duty that is devolved upon me, or that could be devolved upon any one in executive office. That position I can not abandon, however difficult it may become for me to occupy it. There is no choice. I must not only enforce the law as it is, but I must also obey it.

Pay and Efficiency.

The statement has been published that Admiral Togo receives a salary of only $3,000 a year, while Rojestvensky gets $55,000. Probably parsimonious employers will think they see in this a glimmer of reason for cutting salaries, on the hypothesis that efficiency is in inverse proportion to pay. We are inclined to think, however, that Admiral Togo would have done just as well on a salary more nearly in accord with his worth, and that Rojestvensky would not be radically improved by cutting his pay. The most that the figures prove—if they prove even that—is that, given the right sort of man, he will deliver the goods whether well or ill paid, and also that, given the wrong sort of man, high pay will not make him better. It is one of the besetting sins of almost all of us to think we would be ten-thousand-dollar men if only, by some lucky chance or shrewd maneuver, we could get ten-thousand-dollar jobs. But it does not work that way. It remains true that, with ordinary mortals, who are neither saints, heroes nor rascals, the best results will issue when the man is paid all that he is worth and no more.

Railway Statistics.

The following are some railway statistics which will be interesting or dull according as one has or has not the imagination to make them seem real and to interpret them in terms of the country's industrial and commercial life as a whole. The figures are from the report of the interstate commerce commission just issued for 1904. The number of miles of railroad in the United States is 297,073, owned by 2,104 corporations. (The report does not exhibit the fact that a majority of this mileage is controlled by half a dozen men.) These miles of railroad have an average capitalization of $64,265 per mile, or a total of $13,213,124,679. It will be observed that the average capitalization per mile does not exceed the average assessment per mile for taxation in any greater ratio than the ordinary citizen's actual valuation of his real and personal property exceeds his assessment. The number of employes is 1,296,121, or 6.11 for every mile of road. If they were lined up at equal intervals along all the railroad tracks in the country, there would be a man every 864 feet, or within hailing distance. These employes receive in wages and salaries for the year $817,598,810. Dividends were paid on only 57.47 per cent of the stock and the average dividend on the dividend-paying stock was 6.09 percent. And here is the sad chapter of the story. Casualties: 10,046 killed; total killed and injured, 94,201.

A Summer in the South.

The Current Events man has wandered far from the centers of the world's life. It is only by many miles of hard riding over the mountains that he can get the newspapers, already stale, and learn what the peace commissioners were doing several days ago and who is the latest candidate for the Republican nomination in 1908. But the deprivation does not seem grievous. On the foot hills of the Sangre de Cristo range or on the ranch in Tesuque valley, under the deep bright sky of New Mexico, where our swarthy fellow citizens of mingled Indian and Castilian breed are innocent of the Saxon tongue and shed all perplexities from them with a shrug and a vague "Quien sabe?"—here politics seems a small matter and neither the presidential succession nor the progress of the peace negotiations strikes one as a matter of really first-rate importance. There will be plenty of time to find out about those things to-morrow—mañana.

Some time, probably at no remote period, someone with a genius for the discovery of the obvious will find out that the vicinity of Santa Fe, New Mexico, is one of the finest summer resorts on the continent and will disseminate that information to those who are in search of such places. At the present time one who announces his intention of going to New Mexico for a summer vacation is in danger of having his sanity called in question by those who don't know anything about it, but are sure that the summer temperatures of New Mexico and Gehenna are about the same. Of course one may temporize and equivocate and say he is going "to the mountains" or "to Colorado or somewhere out there." Such a statement excites neither ridicule nor argument, and under cover of it one might sneak over the state line into New Mexico with a fairly clear conscience and an unsullied reputation.

But why not face the issue squarely and have it out with your ignorant friends who think that the great American desert reaches clear up to Colorado and Texas? I am aware that figures are odious, but here are a very few which ought to be interesting. The elevation of New Mexico above the sea ranges from 3,000 feet in the south to 8,000 feet in the north, not counting the mountain chains and peaks, which rise to 13,000 feet or more. Santa Fe is over 7,000 feet above the sea, or nearly 2,000 feet higher than Denver. It is impossible to have an oppressive degree of heat at that altitude. Even the City of Mexico, at approximately the same height but 1,500 miles nearer the equator, has a delightful and moderate summer climate. At Santa Fe the maximum temperature last summer—not the average but the very highest mark that was reached on the hottest day—was 86 degrees. There are a good many more interesting and authentic figures that I could give, but I do not want to obscure the main fact by a too detailed proof of it. The point is that the neighborhood of Santa Fe is cool and comfortable in summer, with air of crystalline purity that is a joyous surprise to lungs clogged with coal smoke, and sunshine radiant and penetrating but not oppressive. I don't care to go into superlatives, but this is the exact fact. I insist upon it in self defense because I don't care to be set down as foolish for going south in the summer.

And yet, though New Mexico is not a section of the great, low, hot American desert, most of it could be called desert without injustice, though the inhabitants do not like the term. It suggests the irreclaimable, the wholly uninhabitable, the incorrigibly arid. New Mexico is arid enough, for the most part, but not hopelessly and permanently so. The soil of much of it looks substantially like seashore sand, and one may ride through scores of miles of it seeing no vegetation but sparse and scrubby pinyon pine and a few dry weeds which make starvation pasturage for even a burro or a goat. Only one-half of one per cent of the area of New Mexico is in cultivation, and as one rides through it even that seems a generous estimate, so small do the fields and orchards look against the vast background of sandy valley, baked clay and gravel foothills and rugged mountains.

But New Mexicans boast not of what their country is agriculturally, but of what it may become. It is all a question of moisture. The average rainfall for the year at Santa Fe, which is about the mean for the territory, is a fraction over fourteen inches, or about one-third of the average for the Mississippi valley. Deep cultivation or "dry farming" may accomplish something, but in general farming means irrigation, and that means that the farmer must get within reach of one of the permanent streams. As there are not a great many of them, and most of them are small, this at once restricts the possibilities of farming by irrigation until reservoirs are built to take care of the precious water which is now wasted in the rainy season. But there is room for a vast amount more of irrigation than has yet been undertaken. Every valley, from the Rio Grande on down, has miles of bottom land now unutilized which could be farmed to advantage.

But I am not trying to write a treatise on agriculture, of which I know little, or to boom New Mexican farming land, of which I have none to sell. I am thinking about it as a place of resort. The valley of Tesuque (three syllables, please), begins about six miles from Santa Fe, and is reached by a road which leads over the divide, with wonderful views of yellow foothills in the foreground and blue mountains in the background, and does not pass a human habitation or a foot of cultivated land in that distance. But the valley itself is irrigated and contains a row of prosperous little fruit farms which the natives dignify with the name of ranches. Here, in an adobe house, is my abiding place. There are Indian pueblos a few miles down the valley, and I may later have something to say of these. There are Mexican families here and there on all sides. The prevailing speech is Spanish, and if one addresses a question in English to a chance passer by on the road, it is ten to one that it will not be understood. Within twenty or thirty miles there are cliff-dwellings and ruined pueblos of great archeological interest, which I mean to explore. Always ready at my call is a sure-footed mountain pony, Buckskin, the first syllable of whose name, I am glad to state, gives no indication of his disposition. Peach and apricot trees, loaded with early ripe fruit, nod and beckon at my very window. And over all and everywhere is air—such air, such sunshine. Who shall say that New Mexico is not an ideal summer resort?

"Fossilization Means Death."

In a remarkable speech delivered by the President at Chautauqua a few days ago, in discussing the Monroe doctrine he said:

> The reason why it is meeting with this recognition is because we have not allowed it to become fossilized, but have adapted our construction of it to meet the growing, changing needs of this hemisphere. Fossilization, of course, means death, whether to an individual, a government or a doctrine.

In his direct, characteristic way, the President has stated a fundamental truth, not for the government alone but for the church as well. Fossilization is death everywhere. It is death in the physical world and death in the intellectual and spiritual realm. It has been and is yet a strange conceit with some that religion is the one exception to this otherwise universal law. But it is no exception. Religion has undergone changes in different dispensations in order to adapt it to the changing needs of man. Otherwise it would have been fossilized long ago.

What the President means by fossilization of any doctrine is illustrated by what he says concerning the Monroe doctrine:

> It is out of the question to claim a right and yet shirk the responsibility for exercising that right. When we announce a policy such as the Monroe doctrine we thereby commit ourselves to accepting the consequences of the policy, and these consequences from time to time alter.

To have undertaken to champion the Monroe doctrine without adapting it to the changed condition of things would have meant its fossilization and death. If we say to the European nations, "You cannot interfere with the territorial integrity or the form of government of any of the small republics on the western continent," we must also say to these western republics, in the light of recent historical events, "Since we guarantee you against European aggression, you must see to it that you maintain order and stability, protecting life and property of the citizens of these European governments and meeting your just obligations to them." This is the new setting which President Roosevelt gives to the Monroe doctrine, and in doing so he has given it new vitality and universal acceptance. This is what we mean by applying a true doctrine to changing conditions to prevent its fossilization. It is easy to see how this is just as true of religious truths as it is of any other class of truths.

Take for instance the doctrine of Christian unity which our fathers enunciated. The sentiments and attitude of the religious world toward the subject of union have undergone great change. Now suppose we who champion Christian union should fail to recognize this fact, and should fail to adapt our preaching and practice to this changed condition of things, as a few apparently would be in favor of doing, the doctrine would soon undergo fossilization and death. Many of the religious bodies are zealously advocating closer union and co-operation among Christians. If we should be so blind to this providential fact as to refuse to recognize it and adapt ourselves to it by entering into united efforts with them to further the kingdom so far as practicable, our plea for unity would not only fossilize but become a reproach and a by-word. Adaptation of living truth to existing conditions and needs is a law of life in politics and in religion.

Bible Colleges and State Universities.

The Columbia (Mo.) Herald, of which Mr. Walter Williams is president and editor, has published an editorial under the title, "The Opportunity of the Churches," which, coming from such a source, is worthy of the attention of our brethren in Missouri. Mr. Williams is not only a prominent newspaper man, with a probable political future, but he is the chairman of the board of curators of the Missouri State University. What he has to say on the subject of Bible college work is therefore doubly interesting, even though there may be in it something of the personal element of one who writes to popularize and strengthen his university as a factor in the case.

We quote the editorial:

> The Missouri Bible college, founded and supported by the Disciples of Christ, is first to occupy a field which should appeal to every religious denomination. This college is located in Columbia because of the existence here of the State University. There is of course no connection between Bible college and university. The college, however, can maintain Bible chairs and instruction from the standpoint of the church, without the expense of maintaining the equipment and teaching staff of a university. That which the college does not supply can be had at the institution which the state supports. The Bible college reaches the leaders of the future, the young men and young women who are to be powerful in the Missouri of to-morrow. In Columbia is the strategic point for religious influence. The Disciples have been first to realize and occupy it.
> The other churches of Missouri cannot afford to lag behind in this good work. The Presbyterians have established a Bible chair in Lawrence, the seat of the Kansas university. They could find a more important field in Columbia, the seat of the University of Missouri. The Baptists are discussing the establishment of a summer assembly. It could well be maintained in Columbia in connection with a permanent Bible chair. The Methodists and Episcopalians would find it to their advantage to erect Bible colleges or establish professorships of Bible instruction in Columbia.
> No other point in Missouri is so important for the future of the churches of the state as is Columbia. For the sake of the churches of to-morrow the churches of to-day should bestir themselves to occupy the field.

There is one point Mr. Williams touches lightly, but it is one which the university must face and settle in favor of the Bible chairs or colleges, and there is no reasonable ground for opposition. The university must allow credit for certain work done in the Bible college classes. Of course this work must be up to the university's standard, but there is no valid reason why a student attending a good course of lectures on Biblical history in Hebrew or some of the other subjects taken up in the Bible colleges shall not receive credits just the same as if he took the courses in philosophy or French history in the university, provided the work is equally thorough. It would not in any sense be a question of the state teaching religion. If the University of Missouri can be large-minded enough to give this kind of credit to work done under the shadow of its own buildings, it will encourage the denomination to send their young people to Columbia and it would be more fair to a student who is often barred from taking courses he would prefer to take because there are no credits now given, and he cannot afford to put in his time on subjects that do not count for a degree. It is "up to" the University of Missouri to do a wise and just thing.

Questions and Answers.

In a commentary known as "The Expositor's Bible," I find reference made to a work called "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," which is produced as an authority for pouring as baptism. It seems to be quoted as of equal authority with the Bible. Can you tell me anything about the work? Kindly reply through the query column, and oblige. C. J. BULFIN.

Pickering, Mo.

The document known as "The Teaching of the Twelve," discovered in 1873, belongs to the early part of the second century, and lays no claim to inspiration. It is generally regarded by scholars as genuine, and to be a true reflection of the teaching and practice of the church at the period from which it dates. As regards its teaching on baptism, it clearly teaches that immersion was the practice, except in cases and under conditions where that was impossible, where pouring water on the head was said to be permissible.

1. Where and at what time were attempts made to secure uniformity among us as to the name we should wear as individuals or as churches?

2. What is the origin of the term, "New Light"?

3. At the union in 1832 between the Christians and the Disciples of Christ what was the numerical strength of each and how many of the former refused to unite?

Indianapolis, Ind. C. C. REDGRAVE.

1. At divers times, and in divers manners, but chiefly through newspaper contributions and discussions, has the effort been made to fix upon a definite name for our churches, as anyone familiar with our history will remember.

2. It seems to have been used first in connection with the Free Baptist movement in the east, and later in connection with the followers of Barton W. Stone, in Kentucky. Because these movements claimed to have obtained new light from the scriptures they were dubbed "New Lights."

3. No very serious effort was made at statistics, among us until 1849, but it has been estimated that our numbers in 1832 were only twelve or fifteen thousand, and the probabilities are that the members in the Stone movement, known as "Christians" or "New Lights," were considerably less in number. We are not prepared to say how many of the latter refused to enter into the union. We think most of those in Kentucky accepted the basis of union at that time, and others in that state and in Missouri later came into the reformation.

Is there any scriptural authority for the election or appointment of deaconesses in the church of Christ? If so, please cite scripture. If not, why do some of our churches have deaconesses?

Please define the duties of deaconesses and give number in each local congregation.

The above at the request of our official board. H. C. Gillihan, Clerk.

There evidently existed in the early church a class of women who were set apart to special duties in the church. In Romans 16:1,2, Paul commends "Phoebe, our sister, who is a servant [deaconess] of the church that is at Cenchreæ, that ye receive her in the Lord, worthily of the saints, and that ye assist her in whatever matter she may have need of you; for she herself hath also been a helper of many, and of mine own self." The exhortation of Paul to his "true yokefellow" in the church at Philippi to "help these women [Euodia and Syntiche] for they labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and the rest of my fellow-workers, whose names are in the book of life" (Phil. 4:2,3), points to the same fact. In his letters to Timothy and Titus directions are given concerning the qualifications of women as well as of men, and in Titus 2:3,4 a special duty is laid upon "the aged women" in reference to teaching the younger women, which would seem to imply some special work in the church. But, after all, it is not so much a specific command or example concerning deaconesses that has led many churches to appoint them, as the manifest need for their services in the church. The majority in nearly all our churches are women. Why should they not have a voice in the management of its affairs, and why should not the church avail itself of the benefit of their devotion, tact and ability to serve its interests? We feel ourselves free to appoint superintendents and Sunday-school teachers for special duties in the church, without specific scriptural authority; why should we hesitate to appoint Christian women of character and ability, to serve the church in an official way? Their services are invaluable in connection with preparation for the Lord's supper, assisting in the baptism of women, aiding in certain cases of discipline, teaching, visiting and caring for the sick, and in giving their advice in scores of matters that come up in connection with the activities of the church. If "in Christ Jesus, there is neither male or female," the church ought to avail itself of the assistance of its Christian women in its official board, and in whatever capacity woman may demonstrate her fitness to serve.

Notes and Comments.

The organ in the church controversy is not the greatest "back-number" after all. The Lutheran church is choosing sides on the question of predestination.

Editor's Easy Chair.

A convention on wheels! That is what the Christian-Evangelist Special has been. In our last we closed as the train was hurrying over the divide between Denver and Colorado Springs, where we arrived a little after the noon hour. Special trains awaited us to carry the delegates to Pike's Peak and Cripple Creek. The larger part chose the famous Short Line to Cripple Creek—a ride of forty-five miles through scenery which in grandeur and sublimity is unexcelled, in its kind, by anything in the Alps. Several of the party said to us, "We shall expect to see all this described in the Easy Chair." Described! What pen—much less an itinerant pencil—can describe such scenes as one passes through on this trip? There is a continuous panorama of sky-kissing peaks, deep mountain gorges, through which are leaping crystal streams, foaming and fretting their way down to the valleys where they become less conspicuous but more useful. The train climbs round the mountain sides, through tunnels, over deep chasms, and at each turn a new scene of beauty or splendor is revealed. Colorado Springs now lies far beneath us in the valley, looking like a garden plat in the vast plain. High up yonder on a towering crag there is seen, floating against the blue sky, what seems a small flag. It is "Old Glory," 14x32 feet, waving from the summit of St. Peter's dome, round which the train winds in its ascent towards the summit. At the summit we had a good lunch and hastened on through bewildering scenes of cloud capped mountains, deep canons, granite cathedrals and glimpses of far-away towns and cities in the plain until the famous mining town of Cripple Creek lay spread out before us at the foot of a mountain, down to which our train dropped 800 feet in four miles. Here what fortunes have been made and lost, and what tragedies are represented by the vacant holes which dot these mountain sides!

Returning from the expeditions to Cripple Creek and Pike's Peak our delegates had barely time for a good dinner at Phelps' restaurant before the rally at the Christian church, which was a most pleasant affair. Bro. C. S. Brooks presided and called on a number of brethren present who responded in brief, impromptu speeches, which the audience seemed to enjoy. The music, too, was a pleasant feature of the occasion. The building is a very creditable one, and Brother Brooks is meeting with popular favor in his new field. At six thirty the next morning our Special pulled out of Colorado Springs on the Colorado Midland Road, going by the Garden of the Gods, Manitou, Ute Pass, Cascade

Canon, Granite Canon, and on through a succession of scenes of marvelous beauty and grandeur which kept our party in a high state of excitement and delight. We passed through the famous South Park, along by giant mountains, like Pike's Peak, Massive Mountain, Mount Nast and others, and ran into a snowstorm at one place, and our delegates left the train to snowball one another at one of the stations. A two-mile tunnel at the summit brought us across the continental divide between the Atlantic and the Pacific, after which our train descended rapidly on the western slope through scenes of indescribable grandeur. On the east slope we saw the source of the Arkansas river, and at the western mouth of the tunnel we saw Lake Ivanhoe, the source of Frying Pan River, a fine trout stream. By 6 P.M. we ran into Glenwood Springs, where a three hours' rest with a hot bath and dinner prepared us for the night's ride.

Sunday morning, Aug. 13, at 9:30 our Special rolled into the capital of Utah, which is also the capital of Mormondom, and was greeted by the retiring pastor, Bro. T. W. Pinkerton, who escorted us to the "Wilson," where we were breakfasted. At ten minutes before eleven, special cars were lined up in front of the hotel to convey the delegates to the Christian church. Everybody went and the church was packed full, many having to stand in the vestibule and in the rear of the church. There was a fine song service with prayer and reading of the scriptures. The Lord's supper was then observed, the pastor being assisted by two of the visiting brethren. It was a sweetly solemn service, bringing the representatives of many states into sweetest and holiest fellowship in remembering Christ. The sermon was preached by A. W. Kokendoffer, of Mexico, on "Christ Our Only Hope"—a deeply spiritual sermon. Brother Shibley, of Arkansas, described the difference between the service at the Christian church in the morning and that at the Mormon Tabernacle in the afternoon, which most of our delegation attended, as follows: "The service at the Christian church had Christ and personal allegiance to him as its keynote from start to finish; while that at the Tabernacle had for its key-note an institution." Mr. Roberts, whom the women of the United States prevented from taking a seat in the national congress, was the preacher on the occasion, and his sermon was the specious pleading of a politician. Mormonism is not a past issue. Polygamy is not dead. The Mormon priesthood has its hand on the politics of Utah and has recently gained control of the state militia, and it proposes to run the state, and as many other states and territories as possible, in the interest of Mormonism—a purely earthly system founded on lust and ambition, and feeding on ignorance and superstition.

The valley in which the city of Salt Lake is located, seen from the mountains which sentinel it round about, is a fertile plain, and with the aid of irrigation is very productive. One can but admire the shrewdness which led Brigham Young to select this spot as the seat and center of Mormonism. And yet the blight of this modern plague rests upon this otherwise beautiful valley and city. Here is located the State University, and the United States maintains a military post there at Fort Douglas. As one looks down, as we did, from the heights of Fort Douglas on the city of the plain below, with its temple, its tabernacle, its endowment house, and beyond the dead sea of Salt Lake, glistening in the evening sunlight, he can but wonder what is to be the future of a system so foreign to our American ideas, and what the future of a state and city which seem to be so completely under the influence of this politico-religious power. And yet faith in God and in the omnipotence of truth will not allow us to doubt that Mormonism, like every system built on falsehood or distorted and perverted truth, must pass away. After a full day of church-going and sight-seeing on the part of our 250 delegates, at nine o'clock, when the full moon hung over the Wasatch mountains, about 200 of our delegates, following the line of our Special, left the Mormon capital on the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake railway, for Los Angeles, 780 miles away. After a busy day for most and of quiet rest for some, we all lay down to pleasant dreams.

To-day, Monday, Aug. 14, has been one of the pleasantest thus far, though the Mohave desert had been dreaded. Recent rains had laid the dust, and a pleasant breeze relieved the temperature from any oppressiveness. The desert has an interest of its own. Our good-natured passengers enjoyed it very much. At a place near the line between Nevada and California, there is a broad plain, smooth and bare as a carpetless floor, as if it had been the bottom of a lake. Here the train paused several minutes, and our two hundred delegates were soon on this natural athletic ground, running foot races, forming whips, jumping and playing leapfrog, like so many boys and girls. The Editor won in a race or two, but had to decline numerous challenges in order to hold the record. At last all joined hands, forming a wide circle marching around and singing "Auld Lang Syne," and "Blest be the tie that binds." It was a most remarkable scene in a still more remarkable setting. The evening sun was just descending behind the mountains, on the west, while the full moon in partial eclipse was just rising above the mountains on the east. A speech was called for from the "Easy Chair," while the train still waited for us. The Editor predicted that this journey across the continent in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special would remain a bright spot in their memory during life, and that they would tell of it to their children and children's children. He complimented the delegates on their good behavior and good humor, and paid a special compliment to the manager, G. A. Hoffmann, for his courtesy and care, and called for three cheers for him, which were given with a will. He then called for three cheers for the officers connected with the Special, from conductor to porters, which was heartily responded to. This with a previous episode earlier in the day, when the passengers all scrambled up the side of a historic mountain to be photographed by our special artist, made pleasant changes in the routine of the journey.

At five o'clock our Special reached San Bernardino, a thriving city of 15,000 population. Bro. H. E. Wilhite, pastor of the church, soon met us, and with him came the representatives of the Board of Trade, and offered us a free ride in street cars through the city, and a free bath in a splendid swimming pool formed from the water of their warm springs. Both these offers were accepted, and a vote of thanks extended to the city for its hospitality. Brother Wilhite, a Cotner boy, got hold of our hearts at once by the energetic way in which he gave himself to the delegates. That bath and swim after the long journey is a thing to be remembered. Our church here numbers 500, and is the largest in the city. It was 9 o'clock when we left there, and while there, we had a pressing invitation to go to Redlands, but were compelled to deny ourselves this pleasure. At Riverside, Brother Ringo, our pastor there, had arranged street cars and tallyhos to carry the delegates over the city. But first of all we went to the splendid new Christian church, and after words of welcome by Brother Ringo, and a brief response by one of our number, we had a glorious ride over that beautiful city of homes and groves. Bro. J. O. Cutts, who came there twelve years ago to die, but failed, together with his wife, took the Editor and his wife in their private carriage, and gave us a fine view of the city and its adjacent groves, showing wonderful improvements since our last visit, seven years ago. We reached Los Angeles at 2 p. m., where our Special, which had brought us all the way from St. Louis, ended its journey. These events deserve much larger mention than we can possibly give them in this hurried sketch. It was a day of great delight to our delegation. What we did and saw at the City of the Angels, and of our further journey, must be told in later issues.

L. L. Carpenter: A Record Holder

With the dedication of the Christian church at Alexandria, Ind., on Lord's day last, L. L. Carpenter has established a record which we believe has never been achieved by any other man. This was the six hundred and fiftieth church that Brother Carpenter has dedicated, and that wonderful record is made the more interesting to members of the Christian church when we say that the subject of this sketch has, in the course of his career, baptized over nine thousand people.

Leewell L. Carpenter was born in Norton, Summit county, O., Dec. 10, 1832. He is the seventh son, the youngest in the family being a girl. His parents, Richard and Sarah Carpenter, were poor but eminently respectable people, so that while reared in poverty he had the advantage of good home influences. Attending the common district school during the winter months, he worked from early morning till late at night on the farm in the season.

On Aug. 14, 1853, at regular service on the Lord's day he confessed his faith in Christ and was baptized by the beloved Alman B. Green, whose memory he still retains as a most precious heritage. In 1855 he entered Bethany college while Alexander Campbell was still its honored president. He thought then and is of the same opinion yet, that Mr. Campbell was the greatest man that has lived since the death of Paul, the apostle. Among Brother Carpenter's classmates at Bethany were W. T. Moore, B. W. Johnson, John A. Brooks, Robert Moffett, H. W. Everest and others who have been prominent in the work of the restoration movement. He began preaching in Fulton county, O., in 1857, and during the first four years of his ministry baptized more than one thousand converts in that one county and organized several churches that are to-day among the influential ones of the state. In 1861 he was married to Mary E. Funk, who from every possible standpoint has been a model wife for a preacher. To her he owes very much of whatever success has come to him in his work as a minister of the gospel. He was the first president of the Ohio state Sunday-school association and later of the Indiana state Sunday-school association. He was the first man employed by the Christian church to spend his entire time in conducting Sunday-school institutes and normals, which he did for several years. Brother Carpenter helped organize the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and was the first person to become a life member. He has a certificate of life membership in the American Christian Missionary Society, signed by Alexander Campbell, president, and D. S. Burnett, secretary, which he prizes very highly. For years Brother Carpenter was the state evangelist of the Indiana Sunday-school association and then of the Indiana state missionary society. One peculiar feature of his work was the grouping of weak churches and locating ministers for each group. He was for one year president of the American Christian Missionary Society and presided at the national convention at Cleveland, O., in 1882. He has done both pastoral and evangelistic work, and has organized a large number of churches. He is familiarly known as "The Father of Bethany Assembly," for he was one of the founders of that association, the national Chautauqua of the Christian church. He considers his work at Bethany as among the most important and far reaching of his life. He is now, and has been for many years, its president.

L. L. CARPENTER,
The Tall Sycamore of the Wabash.

"Some years ago they said I would soon be laid on the shelf, but there is no shelf in Indiana long enough to lay me on. L. L. Carpenter."

But it is as a dedicator of churches that L. L. Carpenter stands out in a peculiar way. He has dedicated houses of worship in more than half of the states and territories of the union and many in the king's dominions. The one dedicated last Lord's day at Alexandria is, as we have already intimated, the six hundred and fiftieth where he has been the chief participant in the exercises. At these dedications he has raised about two millions of dollars for the payment of the indebtedness that was upon the buildings. Every kind of a church he has thus helped, from the smallest mission house to magnificent buildings in large cities. Brother Carpenter declares that if he can induce a congregation to do what he advises them to do on the dedication day he will guarantee that he will raise the money that may be needed to clear any obligations.

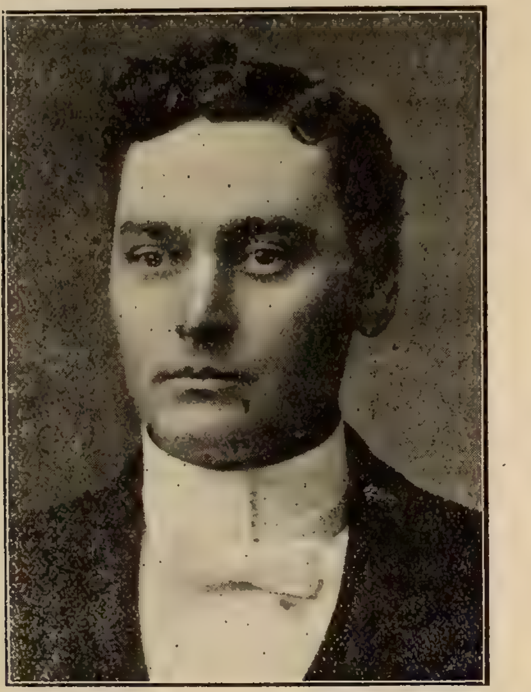
Brother Carpenter has a pleasant home in Wabash, Ind., where he has lived for the past 37 years and where he says he expects to live until he goes to heaven. Seven children have been born in his family, four boys and three girls, and all are living except the youngest, a baby girl. His six children are all members of and workers in the Christian church and are as devoted to their parents as it is possible for children to be. Although 72 years of age the subject of this sketch is the picture of health and is doing as much and as hard work to-day and standing it just as well as at any period of his life. Although a preacher for 46 years he has had but one vacation, and he says that was when he had typhoid fever. He is careful in obeying the laws of nature and health, and he does not use spectacles when reading. He is the friend of young people and of young preachers. When he is about to get old enough to be out of sympathy with these, he declares he wants to die just the day before he gets to be that old. His reason for not being a "non-progressive old fogy" is that when a boy he learned the old gospel from the New Testament, and the preaching of such men as Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Walter Scott, the Greens, Haydens, and a host of other of the "fathers" had taught him that in all matters of faith we must have a "thus saith the Lord," while in matters of opinion we must allow liberty.

It will be welcome news to a great many of the friends of this veteran to know that there is a movement on foot to send him on an extended trip to the Holy Land next year. The amount of money necessary to cover the expenses of this trip is not great and we feel sure that many of the churches which he has helped would like to have some part in making it possible for a veteran who has worked so long and so faithfully to have a real rest and to see with his own eyes the land of our Lord, whom he has served so well.

Another Reason

By R. H. Lampkin

Great concern is and should be given to the question of the failing supply of young men for the ministry, and amid the many reasons advanced as causes of this condition we wish to enumerate a few.



H. A. WINGARD,
Pastor of the Christian Church at Alexandria, Ind.

The day is drawing near when a closer relationship shall be shown to exist between the spiritual and the material, and when that day comes the need of young men for the ministry will be supplied. But as long as an unjust stewardship will withhold its meet from the ministerial calling, and add its other negation to the call of missionary efforts, a self-respecting, God-fearing set of men will be reluctant to enter so uninviting a field of prospect.

Dr. Davis' article in the Christian-Evangelist of July 27 presses hard against the real issues involved. And there is more in this than the mere lack of permanency of home life for the minister. Back of it lies other vital questions, questions which the ministry as yet has found no way of answering. It will not do for the distinction to be drawn between the spiritual and material for the pulpit and not be also applicable to the pew. But how is the ministry to "seek its own" and yet withstand the criticism from the membership who seek their own, that love is not the motive that actuates them in their labors? Aside from the questions of shift, ship, and settle, again and again, involved in the growing itinerant and peripatetic state of the present ministry, and the future reasonable certainty of being thrown aside as useless when most useful, the thoughtful men of to-day are seeing things that are holden to the eyes of a great and prosperous people.

The wise man has said that "in all labor there is profit, but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury." But in presenting the present-day problem of the church, which is now coming slowly to be realized is the evangelization of the world, the labor of the ministry seems to resolve itself into "the talk of the lips" and end in penurious giving.

The problem to some of us presents itself thus: Here it is possible for a man to give himself to ministering to a congregation of five hundred or more (and the average ability in such cases is not inconsiderable) and while we might say nothing of what the compensation ought to be, yet if he or his people have any realization of the purpose of their calling, equipment and ability, and still withhold the profits belonging to such an investment of influence, money, and brains, what is the undeniable situation of affairs?

To make it practical, we would say that a minimum estimate of such a congregation, usually involving a standing investment of from twenty to thirty thousand dollars in property and equipment, should, aside from the interest on the investment, yield at least five thousand per annum. This would give an available and reasonable salary of two thousand dollars, another thousand for the care and maintenance of the property, and the sum of three thousand dollars for missionary efforts. But in how many cases is this true? And this estimate is not ideal at all, and is really minimum for decency in the profession we make personally, to say nothing of the purpose and intentions of him who created us anew in himself for good works. And what is the man is who called to the leadership of such a host to think when he is allotted but a thousand, or fifteen hundred at most, and yet, with all his labors sees but a net gain of only from three to eight hundred go into the Lord's treasury? And if one says this is not the way to look at it, that the spiritual development of the people is the important thing, admit it; what follows? For what is spiritual development? Where is the spirituality of men and women who will neglect what Christ most wants done, and when they are able to do it? The man who has eyes sees these things, for the Savior said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." People are to be judged as much by what they have as by what they give. It is "according as a man hath" that makes his gift acceptable, and the church is not doing its duty here.

Now when a minister sees the relation of the spiritual to the material and finds no adequacy from either to the amount of labor expended, can you ask him to invest his time and talent among five hundred people when from what is called the secular in life he could do as well or better for himself and family, and more than equal the results he is enabled to call forth from five hundred? Even the amount which he receives as salary is of less service to him than from three to five hundred dollars per annum less would be if he were permanently settled. And if we were to make no more than these reasons apparent the wonder should not be that there is a falling off, but that there are as many men who are willing to make the sacrifice as do. The problem is upon us, and this one of a falling off in available young men is but one of the "signs of the times."

The Christian church at Alexandria, Ind., whose building was dedicated by L. L. Carpenter on Lord's day last, was re-organized in 1878 by William McKinzie, now of Marion, Ind. He was followed by Brother Blackman. The membership being small for two years a hall was used as a house of worship and the building which was rededicated on Lord's day was built in 1880 and originally dedicated by Robert Blount, son of Brazilla Blount, of Indianapolis. The first pastor was Brother Ackman. The preaching was only once a month until the membership grew and Brother Vincent, of Union City, became pastor for full time. He won many to the faith. Among others who have labored for the Alexandria church are Brothers Blount, Perkins, Courter, Watts, More, Hummel, Willis Cunningham, A. B. Cunningham, Grant K. Lewis and J. S. Grant. The present pastor is H. A. Wingard, who took up the work on June 25 in the Sunday-school room. It soon became too small and a part of the unfinished auditorium in connection with the Sunday-school room had to be made use of. There have been nineteen additions since Brother Wingard took charge—eight by letter and eleven by baptism. Every department of the church has increased and the present interest promises a happy and prosperous condition of things for the brethren at Alexandria. The architect of the new building, of which we present a picture in this issue, is D. H. Wright.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

While the convention of our highly favored brethren sits beside the Golden Gate, we less privileged ones are mingling our voices in prayer and praise for you here on the shores of the stormy Atlantic. Bethany Beach, our summer resort on the coast of Delaware, has been having its fifth and most successful season. Several hundred visitors representing Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Detroit, Lexington, Pittsburg, Johnstown, Wheeling, Cincinnati, and those blessed centers of our intellectual and religious life, Bethany and Hiram, have been resting here beside the sea, and rejoicing in the wholesome and happy fellowship for which our place is rapidly becoming famous. Jutaro Komura and Kogoro Takahira, and their associates in the great international chess game, Sergius de Witte and Roman Romanovitch Rosen, missed it when they selected Portsmouth, N. H., instead of Bethany Beach for their peace negotiations. If they fail to make a treaty "in the name of Almighty God" and of the Prince of Peace, who knows but this will be the cause of it!

There are many improvements at the beach. "Saltaire," the beautiful summer home of Hon. W. H. Graham, "The Oriole," President Dinker's new cottage, "Pinerest," where Miss Weightman lives, moves, and has her happy being, Mr. Lewis Drexler's handsome beach residence, and "Weneeda Rest" are among the new buildings and the pavilion ornaments the center of the board walk. Then "The Dunes" and the "Bethany House" are new places with something to eat. The beach has been full of the happiest kind of souls, everybody happy, and no culicid dipterous insects singing their war song. Never was the ocean more majestic, the sunrises and sunsets more beautiful, the meadow larks and Bethany frogs in better voice, the rose mallows and Bethany pinks prettier and more plentiful, the trout and tints and fat backs readier to bite, peaches and melons finer, the bathing more refreshing, or the people kindlier and happier. It has been a great summer at Bethany-beside-the-sea.

The program has been an excellent one. The assembly is the great feature of the summer and began Sunday, July 16, with sermons by T. E. Cramblet, of Bethany, and his illustrated lectures on the Holy Land. The service rendered by President Cramblet was of a high order and gave eminent satisfaction. J. N. Johnston, of Coshocton, O., was one of the chief helpers during the first week. Mrs. Princess Long came on July 21-26 with her splendid concerts and solos. Her evenings were largely attended and she received the unstinted praise which everywhere and always comes to this sweet singer in Israel. Wallace Tharp was with us the second week and that sermon on "The Withered Hand," and lecture on "Babylon" will long linger in the memories of our visitors and of the people of the countryside. The Doctor is not only a skillful fisher of men, but knows how to throw a line in the briny deep and play an ocean trout, or write a sonnet with equal dexterity and beauty. C. W. B. M. day, with Mrs. J. E. France in charge, was a red-letter day in the history of the assembly. A. E. Zeigler, of Wheeling, made his debut at the beach as a stereopticon entertainer, and his pictures and descriptions were full of interest. Nothing takes quite so well with our rural patronage and with the youngsters as the moving pictures. Miss Florence Boyd, reader and impersonator, was one of our very best. She is an artist in her specialty and rendered us fine service in her elocutionary entertainments with such helpers in vocal and instrumental music as Miss Armstrong, of Philadelphia, Miss Elizabeth Boyd, of Pittsburg, and Mrs. E. D. Bevitt, of Cincinnati. J. A. Hopkins was on hand to do the work of chorister and all-around helper which he does so well.

Patriotic day was observed heartily with W. H. Graham to tell us of "Our Country." Congressman Graham also gave his strong lecture on "The Old Soldier" in which he does such justice to both sides in the struggle of the sixties. W. A. Dinker, president of the company, engineered the fireworks which were the finest by all odds ever seen at the Beach. Mr. Dinker is everybody's friend and only one sizes up to him in universal kindness and helpfulness and that the genial Christian Irishman from County Derry, Uncle Robert Latimer, President of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society. President C. C. Rowlison of Hiram was a new man on our platform and we have not had one of greater force. The sermon on "The Sealed Book" and lectures on "Religion in Nature" and "Religion in Christianity" were among the truly great things. O. H. Phillips, of Braddock, and W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, crowned the program for 1905 with sermons and lectures of the highest standard. These Pittsburg preachers get superlative good at the beach. Out of the dust and grime they come, and lend themselves to the waves for a thorough washing, and off comes the soot and the soil from the bodies and down come the cobwebs from the brains and we send them back born again. There were others who greatly aided: W. F. Smith, J. E. Stuart and W. H. Schell from Washington, H. F. Lutz, of Harrisburg, W. R. Walker, of Killbuck, O., J. A. Walters, the faithful and devoted pastor of the local church, and other brethren and friends who gladly contributed their talents to make the assembly meetings a genuine success. The religious services were specially helpful and spiritual. Who will forget the Sunday sermons and communion seasons and the vespers at the beach pavilion! How sweet and holy the prayers and hymns and messages with the accompaniment of the great organ of the mighty deep! What rest of soul as well as body with the Master in the spots which he loved beside the sea! How reverent the people are and how the little children love to share in the worship, and what inspirations come with breath from the sea and the stars and the Book! How we feel here as never before the force of the prayer we so often sing:

"Jesus, Savior, pilot me
Over life's tempestuous sea;
Unknown waves before me roll,
Hiding rock and treach'rous shoal;
Chart and compass came from thee;
Jesus, Savior, pilot me.

"As a mother stills her child,
Thou canst hush the ocean wild;
Boist'rous waves obey thy will
When thou say'st to them 'Be still!'
Wondrous Sov'reign of the sea,
Jesus, Savior, pilot me.

"When at last I near the shore,
And the fearful breakers roar
'Twixt me and the peaceful rest,
Then, while leaning on thy breast,
May I hear thee say to me,
'Fear not, I will pilot thee!' "

They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters; these see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep. For he commandeth, and raiseth the stormy wind which lifteth up the waves thereof. They mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths, their soul is melted because of trouble. They reel to and fro and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits' end. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses. He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still. Then are they glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them to their desired haven. Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

John McDonald Horne, of Brocton, Mass., is filling the pulpit of the Vermont avenue church during the month of August and doing it well. J. Murray Taylor was married, August 8, to Miss Daisy Taylor, of Washington, J. J. Taylor officiating. Look out for the young people in San Francisco and see that they have a happy honeymoon. E. B. Bagby is in the protracted meeting work in Tidewater, Virginia. Herbert Yeuell is now in a great meeting at Petersburg, Va. He established a church of 100 members in Portsmouth by his work there. His headquarters are at the capital, which is now the center of the universe. Two of our Washington preachers, Taylor and Jones, are in San Francisco. They will worthily represent us. Greetings to the brethren from sea to sea.

The New Passion

By M. A. Hart

Whatever man puts himself to he either makes of it a play, a profession, a business or a passion. The first is childish, the second and third unworthy, if not ignoble, but the fourth is sublime, Christlike, Godlike. This holds true whether he gives himself to the labor of the farm, the workshop, the studio, or the study. It is not so much what one does but how one does it. The man is the personal equation.

But what has this to do with Christianity and the Christian? Much in every way. There are many plains upon which we may pitch the spiritual tent. But there is only one high enough, holy enough. And without being either unjust or hypercritical, the few and not the many live, labor, and love upon this high plateau, this Himalaya peak of Christian service.

When Christianity is a Play, a Profession or a Business.

Many have not yet reached beyond the play stage. The church is only a big play house and the church services have only a pleasure value. It is a kind of a spiritual dilettanteism. It has no more of the benevolent, altruistic spirit than that we see in the play of children. If there be any difference it is in degree and not in kind. It is a vision reaching not beyond the pleasurable preoccupation; perfectly delightful, but essentially selfish. For children it is perfectly natural and normal to make of life a play, but for Christians to make the saving of souls a play, when it should be a passion, is not only sad but shameful.

It is the voice of the past and the witness of the present that religion may be considered merely a profession. This is little if any higher in the scale than the play stage. Perhaps the danger here is greater to the man in the pulpit than the man in the pew, but yet it is not limited solely to him. Being compelled by the sheer force of economic conditions and social relations to do something, he hits upon the ministry. It is not strange he becomes simply a sounding brass and a clanging cymbal. But the people are soon able to distinguish between the voice of the prophet preacher and the echo of the professional.

But surely it is honorable to make the saving of man a business! Did not the lad of twelve say, "I must be about my Father's business"? True, but he did not say his motive was a business motive. His words breathed a passion high, holy, heavenly. Perugino made of his art a business, and sold his artistic birthright for a mess of commercial pottage, and as a result put mud in the eyes of his madonnas, while Raphael made of his art a passion and put on canvas madonnas and angels that breathe, smile, speak, and are the marvel and wonder of the world. The difference was not so much in the men as in the motives.

When Christianity is a Passion.

Students of philosophy know that the search for reality is the modern passion in the world of philosophy. Perhaps the future will show we arrive at the highest reality through the medium of personality. But reality is not the end. It is merely the means toward the end. A higher conception is to have a passion for persons, using reality as a great and good help. We do not hear too little said of our love for Christ, but often too little is said of our passion for men.

The worst kind of heterodoxy is that which spends all its time, expends all its energy, and consumes all its vitality, saying, God! God! Lord! Lord! and yet does the will of neither. It seems almost a sacrilege to hear some men speak the name of God or Christ. It seems to smack so much of dogmatism and so little of love. Do not misunderstand me. We cannot be too loyal to Christ. We must make him preeminent. We must place upon his brow the crown of immortelles. We must feel as did the beloved Tholuck, one of Germany's greatest teachers, who, when asked the secret of his life, exclaimed with tears in his heart, tears in his voice, tears in his eyes, "I have but one passion, and that is Christ!" That Christ is supreme and pre-eminent in the realm of greatness is the voice of history, the testimony of angels, the witness of God. Around this majestic figure priest and prophet, preacher and poet, prince and peasant, patrician and plebeian, gladly and gracefully drape the seamless robe of history.

The only way to know for ourselves and convince a critical world that we have this passion for Christ is to have a consuming love for Christ's men. "Until he was forty years of age the princely and scholarly Ruskin gave nearly all his time to art; after he was forty, it was given almost entirely to men." And this is what makes John Ruskin a name among the immortals. He had passed from the world of art for art's sake to the world of art for man's sake, for society's sake. And this was a wonderful gain.

If it be honorable for a German professor to give all his days to the study of a Greek preposition, make it a passion; if it be honorable for a scientist to give body and soul to the study of an atom, which according to Lord Kelvin, is only one hundred and fifty millionths of an inch in diameter, what language is able to tell the greatness of Saul of Tarsus, Tholuck, John Ruskin, Lord Shaftesbury, David Livingstone and William Carey, who left all to follow Jesus Christ and serve Jesus Christ's men? What honor is meet for our own A. McLean, who lights a thousand fires on the hilltops of China and India, and our own G. L. Wharton and Dr. Macklin, who exclaim, "And by God's grace they shall never be put out"?

The slogan with which Luther awoke a sleeping, self-satisfied world was justification by faith; the message with which Calvin sought to combat the papal bull of excommunication was divine sovereignty; the appeal with which Wesley stirred the English heart, the hammer with which he shattered the manacles and shackles of a Christless formalism and a heartless ceremonialism, was, strange to say, the tear of Christianity—the religion of the heart; Christian union was the rallying call of the Campbells, Scott and Stone to unite the disorganized forces of Christendom; the God that

FALSE HUNGER

A Symptom of Stomach Trouble Corrected by Good Food.

There is, with some forms of stomach disease, an abnormal craving for food which is frequently mistaken for a "good appetite." A lady teacher writes from Carthage, Mo., to explain how with good food she dealt with this sort of hurtful hunger.

"I have taught school for fifteen years," she writes, "and up to nine years ago had good average health. My diet was always generous, comprising whatever I took a fancy to. I ate freely. Nine years ago, however, my health began to fail, and continued to grow worse, steadily, in spite of doctor's prescriptions, frequent changes of residence and everything I could do. During all this time my appetite continued good, only the more I ate the more I wanted to eat—I was always hungry. The first symptoms of my breakdown were a distressing nervousness and a loss of flesh. The nervousness grew so bad that finally it amounted to actual prostration. Then came stomach troubles, which were very painful, constipation which brought on piles, dyspepsia and severe nervous headaches. The doctors seemed powerless to help me, said I was overworked, and at last urged me to give up teaching, if I wished to save my life.

"But this I could not do. I kept on at it as well as I could, each day growing more wretched, my will power alone keeping me up, till at last a good angel suggested that I try a diet of Grape-Nuts food, and from that day to this I have eaten it, finding it delicious, always appetizing and satisfying. I owe my complete restoration to health to Grape-Nuts, and my persistence in using it. My weight has returned, and for more than two years I have been free from the nervousness, constipation, piles, headaches, and all the ailments that used to punish me so, and have been able to work freely and easily." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Horace Bushnell and Moody set over against Jonathan Edwards' God of consuming fire, was a God of love. And yet we must look beneath the surface if we would find the secret of their power and the inspiration for their work. They had a consuming passion for Christ, and for Christ's men.

The New Passion and the World's Problems.

The only way to know the value of an invention is to set it in motion. The only way to know the value of an idea is to put it to work. Now, will this new passion as a working force help to solve some of the world's great problems? If not, it is worth no more than a smokeless, wheelless engine in the roundhouse. I shall make but two applications of this principle. They will only be suggestive; one is financial and material, the other is religious and spiritual.

With our vast increase in material wealth we are in great danger of losing our spiritual vision, if indeed some have not already lost it. The passion for money and what money will buy is felt not only by the business man in the marts of trade, but also by the Christian in the pew and the preacher in the pulpit. And as a result many of our ablest teachers and preachers have sold their divine, kingly birthright for less than Esau's portion. Afraid lest at life's eventide, life's argosy be dashed to pieces on the Scylla of poverty, they set sail in the opposite direction and ere the sun has reached the zenith, find their frail bark a wreck on the Charybdis of speculation. And the latter is more to be dreaded than the former. In one money is lost, while in the other manhood is a wreck.

Our captains of industry are not making of their work a play, a profession, or even a business. It has come to be an all-consuming passion. And this is the secret of their marvelous success. For whether the thing be right or wrong, legitimate or illegitimate, whatever we make a passion succeeds.

What is the solution? It is not by the way of complaint, nor censure, nor condemnation, nor even the calling down of fire from heaven. With all my soul I believe the passion for men is the only real, permanent cure for the unholy passion for money. We need to emphasize the strategic value of Chalmers' thought, the expulsive power of a great affection. We can change man's vision only by changing his love. Then we shall have fewer ships going to Ophir for gold and more argosies setting sail to Palestine for men.

This is where we must save man from his money and through his money for his own sake. But there is another problem just as vital, we must save man from his money and through his money for his brother's sake, for society's sake. There is not a more vital question before us as individuals and churches than the proper spending of our money. Man's affection determines the place and amount of his spending.

And this leads me to make this statement: The passion for people is the only open sesame for plethoric purses. We do not need to speak less of stewardship, less of duty, which Robert E. Lee calls the greatest word. But we do need to fill men with divine love, the greatest spiritual dynamic in earth or heaven, with men or angels. Too often we begin at the wrong place to solve problems. If we are to have these gold and silver streams as tributaries of the River of Life we must not stop man's work but simply change the current of his affection.

The second problem is a religious one. We are spending much valuable time discussing the relative merits of the two theologies—the so-called old and the so-called new. The odium theologicum with some is the old, while with others it is the new. Now how are we to produce harmony in the midst of discord? It is not so much whether a theology is old or whether new, but, Is it true? Whether the theology of the future be old or new, or a combination of the two, it will be a failure unless we care more for truth than for prejudice, more for man than for theology. The solution of this problem is not in discussion, not in heated arguments, not in wireless messages and bulletins from Harnack or Sayce.

The Solution.

Not until we have a passion for our Lord and for our Lord's men will we have the proper and permanent solution. Then the lamb of conservatism and the lion of progressivism, or the lion of conservatism and the lamb of progressivism, will lie down at night together, sleep together, and arise on the morrow with renewed strength and lofty vision, and march forward with the light, life, love of a Sir Galahad to the accomplishment of the divine purpose—disciple all nations and save all souls. And unless we are willing to make mutual concessions and walk together in friendly fellowship, perhaps God must write over the doorway of many a church—Ichabod, thy glory has departed.

Too long we have talked only of the passion of our Lord. It is time we speak of the passion of the Lord's men, and when we are willing to find our Olivet, as Christ found his, by the way of Gethsemane and Calvary, this will be a fact, not a fancy. This new passion will be the solution of all problems. For ultra dogmatism, for ultra conservatism, it is the only solution. It will make the old theology properly progressive and the new properly conservative.

This is a new passion, for it makes every day new, beautiful, glorious: New because it gives new and true motives for sacrificing and service; new, because it inspires a new hope, gives a new happiness, a new love, a new life for universal humanity; new, because it will create a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness—a new city that hath no need of sun or moon to lighten it, for the Lord God doth lighten it and the lamp thereof is the Lamb. It will be our new gospel heroic. For in the language of Victor Hugo: "The heart becomes heroic through passion."

Somebody has said there are three kinds of preachers: The preachers you can't hear, the preachers you can hear, the preachers you can't help but hear. This new passion will be the means of promotion for many, for it will clarify the intellect, purify the heart, warm the soul, give wings to the imagination, and enlarge the spiritual horizon. Then in the language of Edward Rowland Sill, we will make:

"This forenoon sublime,
This afternoon a psalm, this night a prayer,
And time is conquered, and the crown is won."

HEART RIGHT

When He Quit Coffee.

Life Insurance Companies will not insure a man suffering from heart trouble. The reason is obvious.

This is a serious matter to the husband or father who is solicitous for the future of his dear ones. Often the heart trouble is caused by an unexpected thing and can be corrected if taken in time and properly treated. A man in Colorado writes:

"I was a great coffee drinker for many years, and was not aware of the injurious effects of the habit till I became a practical invalid, suffering from heart trouble, indigestion and nervousness to an extent that made me wretchedly miserable myself and a nuisance to those who witnessed my sufferings.

"I continued to drink Coffee, however, not suspecting that it was the cause of my ill-health, till, on applying for life insurance I was rejected on account of the trouble with my heart. Then I became alarmed. I found that leaving off coffee helped me quickly, so I quit it altogether and having been attracted by the advertisements of Postum Food Coffee I began its use.

"The change in my condition was remarkable, and it was not long till I was completely cured. All my ailments vanished. My digestion was completely restored, my nervousness disappeared, and, most important of all, my heart steadied down and became normal, and on a second examination I was accepted by the life insurance Co. Quitting Coffee and using Postum worked the cure." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason, and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

Our Budget

—Union revival services in Ellwood City, Pa., will begin Aug. 28.

—O. W. Dannold preached for the church at Burgin, Ky., on Aug. 14.

—R. C. Harding will take up the work at Clay Center, Kan., as pastor October 1.

—Simpson Ely is to begin a meeting with the church at Laddonia, Mo., Dec. 1.

—F. M. McHale, of Hoisington, preached at the union service in Great Bend, Kan., Aug. 13.

—The annual convention of the Christian church of Oklahoma will be held at Guthrie, Sept. 11-14.

—E. J. Ganz filled the pulpit of the Hammett Place Christian church, St. Louis, on the evening of August 13.

—J. M. Monroe, of Oklahoma City, will, on successive Sundays, dedicate church buildings at Macomb, Hinton, and Blackburn, O. T.

—Churches desiring the services of Rinaldo E. Hill in meetings during this fall and winter, will please address him at Claflin, Kan.

—P. P. Hasselvander has taken charge of the church at Fair View, W. Va., to begin September 1. He will attend Bethany college during the winter.

—On June 28, Jas. W. Hall and Miss Edna Smith were united in marriage by J. D. Greer at her father's beautiful country home near Laddonia, Mo.

—Chas. J. Haviland, a member of the congregation, preached for the church at Chillicothe, Mo., Aug. 13. Brother Haviland is preparing for the ministry.

—J. W. Coggins has organized a Christian Endeavor Society at Grain Valley, Mo., with twenty-seven members. He preaches for the church every second Sunday.

—Our readers will find the want column of this paper to be an excellent medium for securing what they desire to purchase or of disposing of what they have to sell.

—Dexter (Mo.) Christian college has employed Jas. H. Brooks as financial agent and general solicitor. The outlook of the college seems particularly bright at present.

—J. C. Lappin, of Canton, Ill., and S. S. Lappin, of Atlanta, Ill., are spending part of their vacation in Hoisington, Kan. Each of them preached in the church there Aug. 13.

—Home department and cradle roll supplies, buttons, cards, booklets and everything else that is helpful in the Sunday-school can be secured from the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

—The Norwood avenue church, Toledo, Ohio, will entertain the northwest Ohio ministerial association which meets Sept. 11. W. H. Willison is president, and W. K. Van Winkle secretary of the association.

—The church at South Ottumwa, Ia., is in need of a pastor. The town has a population of 7,000 and is growing. The church can pay a salary of $700 per year. Those interested please address A. J. Stice, South Ottumwa, Ia.

—The brethren of North Carolina have a new church paper with an old name, The Watch Tower. It is published by Henry T. King at Greenville, N. C. We trust that the new paper may be of great assistance to the cause in that state.

—Protracted meetings can be more successfully carried on if the matter of song books is given proper attention. The Christian Publishing Company has a great variety of song books and will take pleasure in sending list and prices upon receipt of request.

—Those who desire to receive the issues of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST containing the news of the San Francisco convention should subscribe at once. The list is growing so rapidly that we will be unable to furnish back numbers. Mention this to your neighbors.

Special Dispatch

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 20.—Our Special arrived on time without accident.

Glorious trip, splendid delegation.

Great welcome meeting Thursday evening.

C. W. B. M. has just closed an enthusiastic convention.

Many pulpits filled by our ministers on Sunday. Great communion service in the afternoon at Woodward's Pavilion.

City papers are giving large space to the convention.

Prospects for great convention of both Foreign and Home Societies, many states have large delegations and the attendance is splendid for a coast convention.

Full reports later.

J. H. Garrison.

—R. W. Abberley has resigned the pastorate of the Portland avenue church, Minneapolis, to accept a call to the Walnut Hills church, Cincinnati. The church at the former point profoundly regrets his decision. He will probably begin his new work Oct. 1.

—Clark Braden, whose experience of twenty-five years in church work is well known to the brotherhood, desires to "preach for and instruct a congregation and to aid officials and congregations in church work." He may be addressed at Ravenna, Ohio.

—We are indebted to Bro. R. E. L. Prunty, of Brookfield, Mo., for a very creditable volume concerning that enterprising town, entitled "Brookfield—Past and Present." The book is bound in paper and contains 276 pages of reading and illustrations.

—Please remember that we are prepared to fill all your needs, whatever they may be, in church and Sunday-school supplies of every description. Just let us know your wants and we will show you as great variety and quote you as low prices as can be obtained anywhere.

—The Christian Endeavorers from the First church at Quincy, Ill., visited the Christian Endeavor society at Camp Point, Ill., and entertained them with music and reports from the Baltimore Christian Endeavor convention. The local societies united for the occasion.

—The official board of the Christian church, Farmington, Mo., has issued a call to the Christian churches of St. Francois county for an all-day meeting on Friday, September 1, to organize the county for more efficient and aggressive work. Edward Owers is pastor.

—The many friends of Bro. O. A. Bartholomew of this city will be glad to know that his health has been enough improved to permit him to occupy the pulpit of the Hammett Place church, St. Louis, three times during the absence of the pastor, S. B. Moore, on his vacation.

—H. J. Reynolds, minister, reports the work at Camp Point, Ill., as taking on new life. There was one baptism Aug. 10. W. F. Shearer has been engaged for a meeting to begin Jan. 6, 1906. The church has decided to send five delegates to the state convention at Decatur.

—R. S. Smedley writes from Golty, O. T., that the new church building which was commenced there May 8, was dedicated on Lord's day, Aug. 13. The building cost $1,908.28, all of which has been raised, rendering it unnecessary to make use of the $400 loan offered by the Church Extension board.

—The church at La Monte, Mo., I. H. Fuller pastor, will begin a meeting Oct. 1. A good singer to assist in the work is needed. Brother Fuller also asks us to say that the church at La Monte, O. T., is in need of a pastor, and can pay about $800 salary. Write to Brother Fuller in regard to either of these matters.

—C. C. Redgrave writes us from Port Arthur, Ont., that he has baptized Cecil Hastings, a native of Jamaica, W. I., in Lake Superior. Brother Hastings is a young man, a college graduate and is anxious to take a course in one of our Bible colleges, that he may be prepared to preach the gospel to his own people.

—T. R. Hodkinson, who has been preparing a book for publication and preaching at Sloan, Ia., will be ready for full work in a larger field (settled or evangelistic) Oct. 1, or earlier if desired. He has had large experience and requires only a moderate salary. Address 1720 S. Seventh St., Des Moines, Ia.

—Claude E. Hill, pastor at Mobile, Ala., writes that he is recovering from his recent illness and will soon be ready for work. He says there is no yellow fever in Mobile. The Christian church will dedicate its new building there Oct. 15. T. P. Shontz, chairman of the Panama Canal commission, contributed $200 toward the new building.

—N. Ferd Engle has just closed his year's work with the church at Lincoln, Kan. During the year there were nineteen baptisms and nine additions to the church otherwise. The Bible-school has reached an enrollment of 160 and has a cradle roll of twenty-five and home department of fifteen members. The work in all respects seems prospering.

—The Pacific coast churches are ordering our new church hymnal, "Gloria in Excelsis," in hundred lots. The coast brethren think they are entitled to the very best; and when they buy the book mentioned they are getting that very thing. We have it in a variety of bindings and with an equal variety of prices. Write to the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

—No book recently issued by the religious press has met with as much interested reading and discussion as "The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison. Every reader of this paper ought to have a copy. The subject indicated by the title of the book is treated in a thoughtful, simple and convincing manner. The popular price of $1.00, postpaid, has been made so as to place the book within reach of all. The prospects are that a second edition will soon be necessary.

—W. J. Lhamon will conduct a Bible institute at Aurora, Mo., August 18-21.

—The Hamilton avenue Christian church, St. Louis, will lay the corner stone of the new edifice Sunday afternoon, August 27.

—The church building at Alexandria, Ind., was dedicated August 20. Four thousand dollars were raised on that day and all debts paid.

—Chas. B. Newcomer, who is at present in Europe, writes from Rome that he will return in September and resume his work in the University of Michigan.

—The church at Rensselaer, Ind., is making good progress in the erection of its new building, which it hopes to occupy in November or December next. The services of the church are at present being held in the court house.

—A. N. Simpson will return to Drake university with the beginning of the fall session and would like to correspond with some competent young man to take up the work in which he is at present engaged. His address is Box 194, Toronto Junction, Canada.

—On account of the ill health of Mrs. Cory, A. E. Cory has given up the work in China for the present. His present address is Augusta, Ill. Brother Cory asks our prayers that Mrs. Cory's health may soon improve so as to enable them to return to their field of labor.

—We are earnestly striving to make the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST an absolute necessity to the church as a whole and to the individual families. Its list is growing rapidly in evidence of our success in this direction. Will readers of this item take a personal interest in the matter and mention the paper to those in their community who are not subscribers? One dollar and fifty cents buys 52 copies.

—The eighteenth annual convention of the Ralls county (Mo.) churches will be held at Center, September 4-6. There are 16 congregations in the county, 15 of which are in the co-operation. Champ Clark, congressman from the district, will be one of the speakers, and will deliver his noted lecture, "Richer than Golconda." The work in Ralls county is reported to be in a highly prosperous condition.

—We are ready to fill orders for our new book, "The Victory of Faith." This is a handsome volume of 268 pages, printed on the best of material and bound in an attractive and substantial manner. It contains twenty of the very best sermons and addresses of Bro. E. L. Powell, pastor of the First Christian church, Louisville, Ky. It is worth twice the price aksed for it. For $1 we will send a copy of it postpaid.

—In response to a considerable demand we have now ready for delivery an abridged edition of our splendid hymnal, "Gloria in Excelsis." The abridged edition is intended for churches which do not feel that they need or can afford as large and costly a book as the complete edition. The complete edition has 612 pages, the abridged 400 pages. The prices on the former are $75 and $90 per hundred; on the latter $40, $50 and $65 per hundred, according to style of binding. We will be glad to tell you more about this excellent hymnal. Write to us.

—R. H. Fife, of Kansas City, with Edward McKinney, of Dorsey, Ill., as singer and helper, will begin an eight weeks' campaign with the First and Second church of Little Rock, Ark., on Wednesday, Aug. 30. J. N. Jessup and David T. Stanley, the pastors, are planning for a great meeting. Brother Fife has an open date for a three or four weeks' meeting immediately following the Pittsburg campaign, which will close the latter part of November. He is making his dates for 1906. Churches desiring his services should apply early for choice dates. His permanent address is Kansas City, Mo.

—The Disciples of Christ visiting at Chautauqua, N. Y., were treated to a delightful excursion on the steamer Mayville, August 4. The party was composed of more than 50 persons under the direction of Mrs. J. C. B. Stivers, of Cleveland, O., assisted by several other sisters and brethren. The occasion was so delightful that it was decided that an annual excursion should hereafter be a permanent feature. Mrs. Stivers, and W. J. Ford, of Hiram, O., were appointed a permanent committee. Sister Stivers is one of the Sunday-school teachers in the Chautauqua assembly, and says that among the periodicals found in the school is the best of all young people's papers—Our Young Folks.

—The report of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions for the ten months beginning with Oct. 1, 1904, and ending July 31, 1905, is at hand, and is a model of what such a report should be. We give the summary herewith:

—The Benevolent Association has purchased seventy-one and one-half acres of land situated a few miles west of St. Louis, on the St. Charles rock road, at the intersection of the Hanley road, at a cost of $32,500.00. A small amount has been paid on the purchase price. It is the intention to remove the orphans' home to this tract of land as soon as suitable buildings, which will be on the cottage plan, can be erected. The building at present occupied by the orphans' home will be devoted to the uses of the babies' home and the Christian hospital. From the very beginning the Benevolent Association has undertaken large things, depending on the generosity of the brotherhood, with a full assurance that this work, which is "pure religion and undefiled," will not be permitted to fail.

—In a personal letter to the Editor of this paper a few days since, Ex.-Governor T. T. Crittenden, of Kansas City, referred to some of our great Missourians in a way that we think would be gratifying to their numerous friends, and we are sure the Governor will not censure us for making public this part of his personal letter. He writes: "I have known many of the strong and good men of your church, commencing with some of the older ones in Kentucky; then my old friend, Thomas B. Haley, who was residing at Lexington, Mo., when I commenced my Missouri life in that place. Then my old friend, George W. Longan, whose mind was a laboratory of great thoughts beyond those of the ordinary class of people; in fact too deep to be popular in the pulpit. Then that noblest of all men, that gentlest of all men, Alexander Procter, who never knew the depths of his own mind, nor the amiable sweetness of his own nature. These were great men, and will ever stand out as prominent persons in the history of your great church. My old friend Haley will stand in the foremost ranks as one of the greatest theologians of the west, with as much, if not more, common sense and thorough knowledge of the common people than any man I ever knew. Before closing permit me to recall one other name, Henry Haley, long since gone to his reward in heaven, who if he had lived would have been one of the brightest ornaments, not only of his church but of our great state. I speak of the above named gentlemen because several of them were my intimate friends, socially and politically, they belonging to what we old Presbyterians would call the new faith or creed, and I an old blue-stocking Presbyterian who never changes believing that 'what is writ is writ.'" We thank Governor Crittenden for these generous words of praise, which while they are worthily bestowed, indicate something of his breadth of vision and sympathy. To appreciate greatness in others is itself a mark of greatness.

A Prosperous Church.

In our endeavor for 100 new subscriptions to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we were led to the Bluefield church. Here 43 gave us their names. The credit is due to W. G. Walters, their capable, accomplished minister, who accompanied me to the homes of his people, and always spoke a fit word in behalf of our religious journals. He was tireless in his assistance, and the great love of his church expressed itself in their cordial response. Brother Walters is editor of Our Work, the comeliest and most helpful congregational paper it has been our pleasure to read. Under his tuition the culture of the church conscience has been enhanced as respects its attitude toward Christian papers. They are giving "attention to reading" our religious press, and this is a mark of spiritual prosperity. The Bluefield church is one of God's best, and their pastor is leading them ever to the more abundant life. Recently he conducted a month's meeting, without the assistance of a singing evangelist, himself doing all the preaching, resulting in more than 50 accessions.

It was our privilege to visit another church, the second wealthiest in the state. Here, with all kinds of persuasion, we allured three subscriptions—this in spite of the fact that there were not ten families in the church that received regularly any of our papers.

Our hundred names is about completed. We commend the Christian-Evangelist to all the brethren. Among periodicals. to us it is the richest and best.

Tazewell, Va. R. E. Elmore.

Help This Sister in Her Good Work.

Editor, Christian-Evangelist: For many years I have been a reader of the Christian-Enangelist, and I write to ask if you will kindly assist me, through your paper, to help pay the expenses of a young man who desires to preach the gospel, and has no money to go to college. Less than two years ago we took this young man into our home to work for his board and to go to the high school. In a few days after he entered our home, I learned that he neither attended Sunday-school nor church. In fact, he was an unbeliever. I went to work to save him, and after hard work and earnest prayer, in six months he accepted Christ, and since that time has been a very consecrated Christian. He graduated from the high school last June at the head of his class, having worked his way for three years. He also won the gold medal in the southern Illinois high school contest for oratory. He desires to enter college September 1, and I ask a free will offering from any who are interested in the Lord's work, to enable me to send him, that he may prepare for the Christian ministry. I trust that you will kindly ask your readers to assist me, and I shall ever be grateful both to you and them.

Your sister in Christ,
Marion, Ill. Mrs. John H. Duncan,

[Sister Duncan is known to the Editor of this paper as a consecrated Christian woman. The work she has in hand, of putting a most promising young man in a condition to preach the gospel, is a noble one, and one that will appeal to many who will be glad in that way to help preach the gospel. Any contributions sent to Mrs. J. H. Duncan, Marion, Ill., will be sacredly used for the above purpose.—Editor].

Help for Young Preachers.

The readers of the Christian-Evangelist already know that by an agreement with Sister Claud L. Garth, a large portion of her husband's bequest for the assistance of indigent young preachers to obtain an education is now available, and that the assistance is offered for the coming session of the college of the Bible. The plan is not to support young men, but to supplement their resources by adding what they cannot otherwise obtain. The rule will be to require the student to prove himself by one year in college at his own charges, after which, if his record is satisfactory, he will be furnished all needed help till he graduates in the full classical course. Exceptions are made for men already well proved and highly recommended. We invite correspondence with all young brethren whose hearts are steadfastly set on giving their lives to the work of preaching, and who believe themselves possessed of talents necessary for usefulness, but who are deficient in means to pay for an education. Money will be loaned without interest and without pressure as to time of payment. Address,

J. W. McGarvey, or

His Last Contribution.

There is probably no field in the world more needy or more inviting than the new south land.

Scattered all over the southern states are congregations numbering from a little handful up to good, strong churches, and yet there are scores of counties in which a herald of the old Jerusalem gospel has practically yet never set foot.

All the south, indeed, all the world, is a Macedonia. The weakness of the cause, numerically, has proven its strength in the Christian character of its few adherents, both male and female. I mention an instance. When I was state evangelist of South Carolina, in 1883, Dr. John W. Oglivie was struggling out of the darkness of sectarianism into the full light of God's grace. Since that time he has become a strong, intelligent and persistent advocate of the ancient faith.

Recently, in our effort to raise the balance, $3,500, toward our labor fund, his heart was deeply touched by our appeal, as the following letter from him will show:

I will be eighty-four years old in ten days (July 20) and though it is with difficulty I get up my doorsteps and can't walk one hundred yards without resting, and though possessed of but little of this world's pelf—I am constrained by knowledge of your work and personal acquaintance and repute of the poor young men you have sent into this destitute low country—such as Albt. T. Fitts, Victor Bowers and many others—to make you, at this critical period of my life, and your institution, my last Christian contribution. I enclose check for $10.

Allendale, S. C. John W. Ogilvie.

Brethren, this aged saint is only a type of many who have long waited for the kingdom of God. We believe that the School of the Evangelists was raised up of God to meet this great need.

When the fire swept away our main building Dec. 1, 1904, it seemed that the loss was irreparable, but now everything points to great enlargement.

Surely there are many readers of this paper to whom Dr. Ogilvie's example will be a strong appeal. We have raised within $3,500 of enough to complete the building, and we appeal to you, brother, sister, for something toward this fund.

Ashley S. Johnson.

Literature Tells.

I commenced a meeting at Uniontown, Ark., July 7, and closed last night with sixty-six additions all told. Four were prevented from obeying, leaving the actual number sixty-two.

Quite a number of fathers and mothers, and a great company of young men obeyed the gospel. Two years ago this congregation read the Gospel Advocate and were "Anti," but they then made a change in their paper, and since then the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and Standard are taken, and they have learned the wholesomeness of missions and are supporters of the organized work. They used the organ during this meeting for the first time in the church services. It was the property of the Bible-school. Brethren, literature tells. This is a small country town fourteen miles northwest of Van Buren and genuine Arkansas hospitality reigns. I greatly enjoyed the fellowship of this country people.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

The St. Louis Letter.

The St. Louis Letter has been taking a vacation; but the good work in St. Louis has gone steadily on. All of our churches have been opened regularly all the summer. A unique and interesting feature in some of the St. Louis churches this summer may be suggestive to others.

Several of the pulpits have been acceptably filled by the elders of the congregations while the pastors were taking their vacations. In the Compton Heights church, Brothers Allen, Gibson, Bonner and Hodgdon saw that the pulpit was supplied at every regular service. During Brother Allen's ministry, two additions were received, one by statement, and one by confession and baptism, Brother Allen baptizing him. We learn that a similar plan was worked at the Hammett Place church.

The Christian Endeavor society of Compton Heights rendered very efficient and faithful service at the evening meetings. Our Endeavorers have been quite active throughout the summer, from twenty to thirty of them attended the Wednesday evening prayer-meeting.

Sister O. C. Shedd, known to many of the Christian-Evangelist readers as the teacher of the Junior Bible class of the Compton Heights church (a class that enrolls about 150 young ladies and gentlemen), also for her active interest in the Christian orphans' home, this city, and many other benevolent enterprises, was married by the writer to Dr. Treston Ayars of this city, Aug. 16, high noon. Mr. and Mrs. Ayars will take an extended trip through the west and as far north as Canada. They have the very best wishes of their many friends in the Compton Heights church, and indeed throughout the whole city. They will return to St. Louis about Oct. 1.

Nearly all of the St. Louis pastors are away or have been away for a rest this summer. None of them went out of the city for vacation last year. Our preachers' meeting will be re-opened in September, when all of the preachers are expected to be at home ready for the fall opening of the work.

A host of the St. Louis workers have gone to the national convention which is opened to-day (Aug. 17) in San Francisco. We who are staying by the stuff expect to share with those who have gone into the battle through their reports which we are anxiously awaiting.

F. N. Calvin.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Only a few words to call the attention of every auxiliary member to the condition of our state in regard to our year's work. All will remember that at the national convention in St. Louis, October, 1904, the states were apportioned the amount they were asked to raise. Missouri was asked to raise $11,000—including all money sent to Indianapolis. Now at the end of July only $8,804.53 has been sent. This means that if we want to have old Missouri among the states that meet their apportionments, we must send to Indianapolis $2,195.47 before Sept. 15. We can easily do this, if all our auxiliaries and members will pull together and pull hard. Will you not do it, my sisters? Will you not lend your prayers, your voice and your money, to bring us to the point of having reached our aim, and help us to rejoice and cry hallelujah to him? I feel sure of my sisters' loyalty and devotion, and trust them to meet all the needs. All auxiliaries not having met their apportionments or pledges on the special work of last year are urged to send it in full, as soon as possible. All auxiliaries, having paid these, will you not help us by sending from your abundance, an additional offering of whatever you can? Send it gladly and prayerfully. Remember, only $2,195.47 including all funds except state. Let us win and come up rejoicing.

Let us start a dollar brigade and every woman who can possibly spare it send one dollar to help on this amount. All have a part. Send smaller helps, if the dollar is more than you can spare.

Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Colorado.

My oriental cruise is developing nicely. It promises to be a great trip. F. D. Power and wife, of Washington, will be in the party. Chas. S. Medbury, of Des Moines, Iowa, has decided to go. The friends of L. L. Carpenter, of Indiana, are arranging to send Brother Carpenter. It is probable that M. M. Davis and wife, of Dallas, Texas, will go. The company will be limited to 20 persons. Those who want to get into it would better "step lively."

All goes well with us. The old $22,000 debt on the South Broadway church is down to $2,500. We want to begin 1906 without a dollar of debt. It begins to look as if we will be able to do so.

The Colorado assembly of the Christian church is in session at Gato, a place thirty-seven miles from Denver, on the line of "the Moffatt road." The situation is described as ideal. B. B. Tyler.

Young People's Missionary Conference.

It was my privilege to attend the fourth annual conference of the young people's missionary movement held at Silver Bay, Lake George, N. Y., July 21-30. The young people's missionary movement was organized at Silver Bay three years ago. Its object is to promote interest in missions among the young people. This conference is the largest one held—over 600 delegates being present. Sixteen denominations were represented, the largest denominational groups being the Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist and Protestant Episcopal, in the order named. Delegates came from as far west as Missouri and as far south as Maryland. There were only nine delegates from the Disciples of Christ; six more than last year. Our people ought to be more largely represented.

This movement is not an independent one. That is, it does not interfere with or antagonize the boards of the different denominations. Instead, it co-operates and aids to the full extent of its ability.

I have not time to give a full account of the conference, and what I am writing is largely from memory. The first hour in the morning was devoted to the consideration of ways and means for organizing and developing mission study classes—in churches, in districts, in cities.

The second hour was devoted to the study of foreign and home missions. The delegates were divided into different groups, each group being led by a capable leader.

The last hour was given to popular subjects; an address usually being made by some noted leader in Christian work—preacher, missionary, or board secretary.

The afternoon was devoted entirely to recreation, and in the evening considerable time was spent by the different denominational groups discussing plans for the development of the missionary spirit in their respective denominations.

An interesting feature of the conference was the missionary exhibit, which consisted of tracts, pamphlets and books from the different missionary boards, giving facts, figures and incidents concerning their missionary work in home and foreign fields. Our two boards were represented in this exhibit.

The spirit of the entire conference was excellent. What impressed me most was the deep consecration of the delegates.

In the four conferences held, over 100 young people have pledged themselves to go to the foreign field, and the remarkable thing about it all is that there has never been a direct appeal for volunteers.

The little church at Bement is moving forward quietly in its work.

Atwood has a good little church of one hundred members and half as many in Sunday-school. J. C. Ashley, of Indianapolis, visits them twice a month.

Arthur has an excellent little church of more than usual enterprise and public spirit. It has met some discouragements, and is now without a minister, but will not stay so long.

In few cities of our state has the cause prospered as at Danville. Much of this has been due to the long, successful pastorate of S. S. Jones. Brother Smart has been in the church about one year, and 117 have been added to the church. Brother Scott has been in the Second church only a few months and seems to be getting the work well in hand and has frequent additions.

The church at Cheneyville supports preaching part of the time, has a good Sunday-school and is the only church in the place.

One of the splendid old churches of eastern Illinois is at Antioch, some six miles east of Rossville. It was organized by Father James Conner some forty years ago. Brother Martin, of Wabash, Ind., preaches for the church half the time.

At Rossville H. H. Peters, who graduated at Eureka in June, is getting a fine start in the work. Twenty-five have already been added to the church, which now numbers 160, with a Sunday-school enrollment of nearly as many. The church was organized by S. H. Creighton eleven years ago and has an elegant $7,000 building. This was the home of our excellent young preacher, Ira Ingle, who left college this spring to take up the work in Milton.

I neglected to mention that 200 acres of beautiful land given Eureka college by Sister Debora Bauda lies about seven miles east of Rossville and one mile from Antioch church. With proper improvements this could be made one of the best farms in this fertile section of our state. It can be bought for a reasonable price.

M. G. O'Brien, late of Columbus, Ind., has just entered upon his work at Kankakee. He is a comparatively new man among us, but is entering into his Illinois field with the spirit of a native.

At Donovan we have about one hundred good members, with a good Sunday-school and other useful departments. Brother Howe, a Eureka student, is preaching for them and is much loved.

The churches at Martinton, Iroquois, Pittwood and Prairie Dell have good houses, but at present no preaching. This is a fertile field.

Brother Baker is hard at work at Milford. He seems to be loved by everybody and is leading the church into true spiritual power and larger usefulness.

Western Canada Missionary Convention.

The fifth annual convention of the western Canada Christian missionary association met July 24 and 25 with the church in Winnipeg, one of the missions of the association.

Three years ago there were only two churches in our territory; at Rat Portage (now called Kenora) and Portage La Prairie. At this convention eleven churches were reported. We are now represented by five churches in every province in the Dominion, including those which have just graduated from the territorial to the provincial status.

Our association covers probably the largest territory of all of our missionary organizations except those whose work is international. Our most easterly church is in the Whitefish colony, at the western end of Lake Superior, and our most westerly at Vancouver, B. C.

The secretary's report showed that during the year assistance had been given to the churches in Winnipeg and Swan River, both in Manitoba.

During the convention $500 was pledged by individuals for the year's work. It was resolved to enter upon evangelistic work as soon as a man could be secured. If possible, a church will be planted in Regina, the capital of the new province of Laskatchewan, and the next convention held there.

Miss Mattie Burgess, C. W. B. M. organizer, was present throughout the convention, and on the last evening delivered an address on the work of the C. W. B. M.

Officers elected for the coming year are as follows: President, Alex McMillan, Winnipeg; vice-president, Henry Ogletree, Portage La Prairie; corresponding secretary and treasurer, J. A. L. Romig, Portage La Prairie; members of the board, Jno. A. Vitson, Portage La Prairie and S. W. Axtel and S. H. Shank, Winnipeg.

India Notes.

I write especially to apprise the readers of the Christian-Evangelist of the death of one of our workers in India, Miss Jane Adam, of Deoghur. Her death took place on May 24, in the station where she had worked for perhaps seventeen years. Her age was about eighty, and she had been gradually failing for some years, so that her departure was no great surprise to those acquainted with her.

Miss Adam came to India from Scotland about 30 years ago. She had some resources of her own, and was assisted by friends in Scotland, her home. She was a woman of culture and refinement, versed in music and painting, and speaking several of the languages of Europe.

For some years she worked in connection with Pastor Haeggert, a well known independent German missionary, who was laboring among the Santals, a primitive tribe in western Bengal. Leaving him, she went to Deoghur.

After some years, Miss Adam, like many other Christians, became convinced of the all-sufficiency of the New Testament scriptures in matters pertaining to God, and decided to unite with those who call themselves Christians only. Accordingly, it was decided that the Christian Woman's Board of Missions should locate some workers in the station to work in connection with her. Miss Graybiel was perhaps the first of the missionaries to be associated with her. Under Miss Graybiel, who has always been a pioneer missionary in some station or other, a bungalow was built. Then the famine came, an orphanage was opened, and with it a school. Miss Adam was managing a small leper asylum. Books were sold. Meetings were held for both men and women; as far as practicable, when the hospital was opened, mission work was carried on in almost all its lines. Miss Adam, though affiliated with the C. W. B. M. workers, and attending the annual conventions, nevertheless kept up a great deal of independent work. The people, though heathen, all speak kindly of her, and she had a great influence over them.

By the terms of her will, all her immovable property is given to the C. W. B. M. to be used for mission purposes. It is perhaps worth $2,000, apart from the land, the value of which is difficult to estimate. By a codicil to her will, one house is to be reserved as a rest house for Indian Christians who may wish to go to Deoghur for a vacation, but who cannot afford to rent a house.

Deoghur is a great mission station. The name means, "House of God." But to the Hindu it is rather "Baidynath," the Lord of Physicians. The locality is undoubtedly a healthy one, but the Hindus all over India know of it as a place where miracles of healing are performed. Especially is it supposed to benefit lepers, many of whom flock there. In consequence of this, the government has opened a large leper asylum there to accommodate those whom the gods are unable to cure. There are also about a dozen lepers in the mission asylum. A great "mela," or religious fair, is held in Deoghur in the month of February, and one hundred thousand or more pilgrims attend this. There are pilgrims also at other times. It is considered one of the twelve most sacred places in India.

At present the station is manned (or womaned?) by four lady missionaries. Miss Lackey has charge of the orphanage. There are at present about 80 girls in the institution. Miss Maddock has charge of the zenana work. This is something that men never know much about. But I do know that a number of homes, both among Bengali and Hindu speaking people, are visited by Miss Maddock and her assistants, and that the word of God is taught in all of them. Dr. Longdon has a large medical work, it takes about all of her waking hours. But she does find time to speak many a word to her patients and those whom she meets about the blessings of the gospel of Christ. Miss Vance, the newest of the Deoghur workers, began with the orphanage school, which one would think was a sufficiently large field, but has since opened two or three other schools, and is full of plans for the future. A capable and competent staff of workers? It is indeed. But there is one thing lacking: They need a man.

Except for a short time, when Bro. F. E. Stubbin, of Australia, was in the station, superintending the building and preaching incidentally, there has never been a male missionary located at Deoghur. But this is soon to be remedied. Bro. Wilmer Munro, who came out to India last November, will go to Deoghur this fall. He will find a great field ready for him.

The need of a man was what caused the writer's last visit to the stations. When Miss Adam was at the point of death, the ladies telegraphed for some one to come and conduct the funeral ceremonies. The telegram did not arrive in time for that but we had a memorial service on Sunday. Brother Grainger had come to Jubbulpore for a day, and yielding to my persuasions, which he pronounced irresistible, he accompanied me to Deoghur. Brother Grainger conducted a Hindi service in the morning and the writer an English service in the afternoon. Monday morning we visited the lepers and spoke to them, and saw the grave of Miss Adam, and in the afternoon spoke to a number of people in the bazar.

There have been two baptisms in Bilaspur lately; also five in Harda. Our Bible college closed for the hot season with 18 students. Two of them graduated from the school. The work is moving steadily onward, and we hope for a glorious harvest the coming cold season. Geo. W. Brown.

Things in Ohio.

Chas. Darsie and wife, of Uhrichsville, have been spending a vacation in New York and Connecticut.

A. C. Gray, who has ministered for several years at Mt. Healthy, has offered his resignation. Brother Gray is one of our solidest men, and will serve any community well.

A. M. Hurd, of Cuyahoga Falls, has been given a call to Byesville and Harmony churches. The state board will help Byesville. The town is growing rapidly, and new Disciples are constantly moving in.

The churches of Columbus are moving along after the usual fashion. They keep at things down there, and while there is no boom, yet they are constantly building. A new mission has been started among the colored people on Frambes avenue. The corner stone of the new Linden Heights church was laid in July. Then best of all the Central church has sold the old property down town for $30,000, and will go out into the residence community and build a new plant.

Ohio has a new preacher from Kentucky and one from Indiana. J. J. Cole has been called from Butler, Ky., to Millersburg, and Grant A. Waller, of Indiana, to the new church at Utica. We extend a hearty welcome to our fellowship.

W. T. Groom has resigned at Bellefontaine, where he has ministered for some four years. He has accepted a call to Butte City, Montana, and has gone to his new field of activity. The Bellefontaine church now has a splendid plant, no debt, and about 350 members, and will be a good field for some good preacher.

Geo. F. Crites is spending his vacation in holding a tent meeting at Lucas, in Richland county, where he hopes to organize a church.

H. M. Garn will move his furniture from Antioch to Lakewood, and minister to the saints in that community. This is the home church of Secretary Bartlett, and Brother Garn will therefore become spiritual adviser to the state secretary.

J. M. Van Horn, of Worcester, Mass., has been spending his vacation on Ohio soil, and preached for his old parishioners at Warren, where he was given a cordial welcome.

L. J. McConnell and wife, for Mrs. McConnell is a preacher too, have been called to minister at Shreve. They will find a good church and people who are ready to work. May this union last for a decade.

Have you read J. H. Garrison's book on the "Holy Spirit"? If not, put a one dollar bill in an envelope and send it to the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo., and you will get a book that every preacher ought to read. We need to re-study and preach more on the work of the Holy Spirit.

By the time this letter is in print, the vacation season will have closed. It will be time to take the Church Extension offering and get down to business for the fall and winter campaign. What are you going to preach about this fall and winter? Have you any program, or are you going on the old hit-and-miss method? This scribe will, "as his custom is," preach expositorily from two books of the scripture. For the morning, Ephesians will be gone over for the second time, and the sermons put in permanent form. For the night, an exposition of the letter to the Hebrews will be given. Whatever you do, preach the Word. There is nothing that comes from the public rostrum that people like so well as good, solid preaching of the Word of God.

News from North Carolina.

In order that the brotherhood may not forget that a few things are going on in the Old North State, we are pleased to send a few more items of interest.

Dennis W. Davis is in a splendid meeting at Athens chapel. In six days there were thirty additions. The meeting continues.

W. O. Winfield began a meeting at Albemarle church, August 1. Prospects for the meeting were very good.

The church at Belhaven has grown in numbers and power to such an extent that it has asked J. R. Tingle, its devoted pastor, to spend his entire time with this church instead of half time as heretofore.

John Thomas Brown, one of the young preachers from Atlantic Christian college, greatly stirred the Roanoke union meeting with one of his splendid sermons during its recent session at Pantego.

J. Boyd Jones, our hustling corresponding secretary, is in the midst of a rousing meeting at Wilson's Mills. There are 22 additions to date.

A. J. Manning, of Jamesville, is the evangelistic manager of Roanoke union district and is locating preachers for the weaker groups of churches.

D. W. Arnold has recently held good meetings at Williamston and Jamesville.

R. L. Philpott, of Reelsboro, has been asked to take charge of the work at Plymouth and Dardens.

Pres. J. J. Harper reports that prospects for a large number of students at Atlantic Christian college are bright. President Harper and R. A. Smith have been working hard to increase interest in the college. The college offers free tuition to ministerial students.

New churches are in process of construction at Columbia and Macclesfield. These, with the church at Rocky Mount, are the newly organized churches in this convention year.

G. A. Moore and R. A. Smith preached respectively on July 23 and 28 at Scuppernong church.

The union meeting at Pantego the fifth Saturday and Sunday was a splendid success.

H. H. Moore, the energetic pastor of the Greenville church, began a meeting with the Pantego church July 30 at the night session with two additions.

About a dozen young men are expected to enter Atlantic Christian college this fall to study for the Christian ministry.

John B. Respass, now 72 years of age, is still preaching each Lord's day. His ministry began before the civil war and has been greatly blessed. He recently held a good meeting for one of his churches and expects to continue his good work. He is as vigorous as a man of 50.

We understand that Bro. A. B. Cunningnam, of Tiffin, Ohio, has been called to the pastorate of the church at Washington, N. C.

The brethren who may think of North Carolina as a field of labor need not fear the heat nor the malaria. They can have "bigger chills" on the banks of the Wabash, Ohio or Mississippi.

A Trip in China.

I have made a "Cycle of Cathay"—having just returned to Nanking from a two weeks' trip toward the north of China. Perhaps you would like to hear about it. You understand, of course, that next fall the Cory and Layton families are to go to Bo Cheo (or Po), in the extreme north of Anwhei Province, to open a new station for the F. C. M. S. This trip was made merely for the purpose of renting and repairing Chinese houses for our occupancy at that time.

You will want to know how one travels in the celestial country. We walked, tried a bicycle, rode in jinrikshas, rode donkeys, boarded a house-boat—which was pushed with poles, pulled by a rope, rowed, sailed and finally didn't go at all—then we tried wheelbarrows and got there; returning, three days in a Ben Hur chariot, drawn by a tandem team of mules, brought us to the Pekin-Hankow Ry.; from Hankow I came on a German steamer. Leaving Nanking, we first attended a native convention at the Hot Sulphur Springs, north of the Yangste; a day farther is our station at Chu Cheo with Messrs. Hunt and Osgood; two days more and we left donkeys for a boat at Ling Hwai Gwan, on the Hwai river, which we ascended as far as Hwai Yuen, thence up the Go river to Bo Cheo. These small rivers connect with the Grand Canal on the east and thus there is a water route from Shanghai to our new station. Our goods will probably be sent that way.

Such a trip is most interesting and enables one to see the Chinese as they really are. Uppermost in one's memory is the dirt! A Chinese inn can be appreciated by the five senses—thatched roof, mud walls, mud floor, mud everywhere. And the "sights and smells and sounds"! Donkeys, pigs, dogs and "foreign devils" muchee samee. There are no windows in Chinese houses so, fortunately, there are some things one needn't see. On the way, we passed numerous caravans from the north. They brought hides and tallow, oil and grain to the southern markets. Some used donkeys and mules but there were scores of wheelbarrows each with 300 to 500 pounds burden and rough roads and mountains and unbridged streams.

In the north the land and the people are somewhat different; the country is much like Iowa and Illinois. There they grow wheat extensively and eat bread; in the south it is always rice. Up there, horses, mules and oxen—not men—are the beasts of burden. They use carts and wagons and have good roads and bridges. Their plows and harrows and grain drills are much like ours. But passing by and seeing the numerous altars to the god of agriculture, one feels that they "are altogether too superstitious." That section was the seat of the Boxer uprising in 1900. The people now are friendly enough. Bo Cheo itself is no mean city, of upward of 100,000 population and the center of that great farming country. The Lord willing, work will be begun there this year and that will be our future home.

Report of American Christian Missionary Society

The annual report of the acting board of managers of the American Christian Missionary Society presented at the San Francisco convention, was the best in years. The corresponding secretary thinks it the best year the society has ever enjoyed. Growth has been the keynote of the year. Every part of the work has been vibrant with the pulse of progress. The missionaries have grown in numbers and efficiency; the missions have grown in strength and influence, and the results in the field have been greater than in any previous year.

It is gratifying, also to learn that the treasury has received more money than in the same period of any previous year, and if the ratio continues for the remaining months, this will be the crowning year in all the history of the work.

Three hundred and sixty-two missionaries have been employed during the year at 783 points. These men have organized 87 churches, preached 25,840 gospel sermons, received by confession and baptism 5,954, and gathered otherwise 6,170; the total number of additions reported for the nine months of the year closing June 30, being 12,124.

Among the examples of the work of home missions, the report cited Oklahoma. "From the very day when the reservation was opened to settlement, this fair territory has been a ward of the Home Society. No money was ever better spent, no field has ever yielded such constant fruit of weighted sheaves so thickly strewn upon its golden acres as this great commonwealth of culture, wealth, refinement, and unceasing enterprise." Last year the territorial board agreed that if the Home Board would assist them for two years more, they would become self-supporting, that the bounty of the board might be turned to other fields at once. The report of Jas. M. Monroe, the corresponding secretary for Oklahoma, gave a remarkable array of facts and figures. It showed that we have now a membership in that territory of 22,000 with 376 church organizations. During the ten months from September 15, 1904, to July 15, 1905, the nine evangelists directed by the board organized 22 churches, superintended the erection of 38 buildings, assisted 86 congregations, preached 1,073 sermons in 1,613 days' labor, baptized 224, received otherwise 768. This is a splendid report. We have organizations in all of the 26 county seats in Oklahoma, and church buildings in all but two of these. During the two years that Jas. M. Monroe has been corresponding secretary, 83 church buildings have been erected as against 73 the preceding fourteen years.

In speaking of the work of W. J. Wright, superintendent of evangelism, the report said: "Brother Wright has shown himself to be especially adapted to this work. With an energy and zeal that knows no rest, he gives himself wholly to it." Attention was called to the fact that the department of evangelism is a special work placed under the supervision of the Home Board, and requires a special fund from the treasury; $5,000 is to be appropriated year by year from the treasury of the American Christian Missionary Society for this work.

Regret was expressed that larger appropriations have not been possible for the fields in New England and for the cities. "All of these places have been helped," said the report, "as we could, and our help has been worth far more than the measure of the very limited amount of money we had to expend in these cities. It should be ever borne in mind that this work, by reason of the increased demands in mission territory and the usual size of the appropriations required for city missionary purposes, must halt upon an altogether inadequate treasury."

The list of living link churches was given in full, and the report spoke in the highest terms of the value of this plan of support. Churches that have adopted the plan are enthusiastic in their commendation of it, and many of the churches are working toward the desired end. Three hundred dollars will secure the support of a missionary in a given field for one year. The church which adopts a given field and a particular missionary, can keep in personal touch with the work being done, and so "concrete" the generally vague work of home missions.

The field secretary reported his work as having been discharged under the immediate direction of the board, attending state, district, and county conventions, canvassing in preparation for the May offering, and for boys' and girls' rally day, making particular addresses on missionary occasions in various churches, and in every way trying to educate and inspire to a larger service for home missions. We quote one paragraph: "Convention programs should not be considered worthy or in any sense adequate, unless provision be made therein for an address upon home missions. No church should consider itself abreast of the times unless it has an address from a personal representative of the home mission cause at least once every two years. The work of the field secretary is the work of personal contact. It can not, under the present plan, be reduced to reportable proportions. Its province is educative, looking to the future; its chief value is inspirational, seeking to arouse latent possibilities; in these elements it has been well worth its cost hitherto, but in the years to come will be seen and realized its true value and fruitage. For in the cause of missions as in the preaching of the gospel, Paul's logic holds: 'How shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?' "

Another gratifying feature of the report is the growth of interest suggested in the matter of "individual support for individual missionaries." Thomas W. Phillips has for many years had his own representative in the home field in the person of Wm. F. Cowden, superintendent in the northwest. Recently John A. Joyce has been his representative in western Pennsylvania. Howard Rash was represented by Frank L. Van Voorhis at Weatherford, Okla., for a year. J. M. Monroe and wife maintained their own representative, R. S. Smedley, of Oklahoma. Mrs. Mary S. Holbrook has for several years maintained her own representative, but did the work through her home church at Onawa, Iowa.

The report showed that the American Home Missionary, the monthly magazine of the society, is meeting with greater favor year by year, and is rapidly increasing its subscription list. Our Home Field, the quarterly which is sold at the low price of ten cents a year, is also increasing in circulation; and ministers and friends are urged to keep up the good work and place the Home Field in every family represented in the Sunday-school and churches.

J. W. Carpenter, of Virginia, Ill., has prepared for the society an excellent exercise for boys' and girls' rally day for 1905, entitled, "Seed Time and Harvest." This day is being pushed with all energy, and place is being sought for it in the program of every school of the brotherhood. If the future church is to be truly missionary, boys' and girls' rally day must be made the greatest day in the year. As this appeal to the young life of the church covers state missions as well as the national field, it should occupy no secondary place; $15,000 is the mark set for the schools this year.

Records show that in the last ten years we have gained fifteen named memorial funds of $5,000 each. In the name of each of these the board agrees to keep a missionary preaching the gospel through all the years. In addition to this we have received over $60,000 on annuity funds.

Bequests have been smaller than usual this year, only $164.34 having been received from this source.

Under the subject of the "open doors," the places pressing for immediate help are Honolulu, Idaho and Montana, the work among the Scandinavians under the supervision of Julius Stone, and the work among mountain whites.

An interesting comparison was made in the report showing that in 1895 our brotherhood gave to home missions $21,641.83. In 1905, for nine months only, the receipts were $87,384.53. Twice within that period the receipts have passed the $100,000 mark: Once in 1899 at the jubilee convention, when special jubilee offerings were made, and again in 1903, when special annuity gifts and bequests were received. The total gift for the last ten years to the treasury was $716,514.04.

During the ten years past missionaries under the Home Board have organized 800 churches, baptized 47,611 persons, received otherwise 39,763, making a total of 93,402 additions to the church.

Dedications of Church Houses

The following accounts of dedications of church houses have necessarily been much abbreviated from the original reports. Events of this kind are exceedingly interesting and we would like to publish reports in full but it is absolutely impossible, with the space at our command. We are glad to note the prosperity of the churches in all parts of the country.

KOKOMO, INDIANA.

When, on the morning of Feb. 27, 1904, the members of the Main street Christian church, Kokomo, Ind., gazed upon the ruins of their former house of worship, there was discouragement and heaviness of heart. But this feeling was not permitted to remain. The pastor, J. H. MacNeill, took up the matter bravely and inspired his congregation with courage. Immediate steps were taken to replace the burned structure with a much better one, and on Aug. 6 the city rejoiced with the congregation in the dedication of its magnificent new house of worship. The new edifice is an ideal church home, both beautiful and substantial. It is built of Bedford stone, with a limestone foundation. The main auditorium includes the church proper, the Sunday-school room and the gallery. The church proper is separated from the Sunday-school room by an arch equipped with a door that can be raised and concealed in the wall above. The main auditorium will seat 1,300 people, while there is a seating capacity for 576 in the church proper. The church furniture and fittings are of the very best and the building is embellished with several memorial windows. The congregation, thus housed, is prepared to eclipse its own good record in the matter of energetic work for the Master.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

California is noted for the rapidity and greatness with which things grow in her wondrous climate. The growth of the Disciples of Christ is not an exception in this particular, for within the last five years this religious body has grown wonderfully. One of the most noted instances of quick and sturdy growth is the Magnolia avenue Christian church, which dedicated its beautiful new house of worship, June 25.

In January, 1904, the First Christian church planted a mission in the southwest part of the city, thinking that in a few years it would grow into another church, but in three weeks' time it had developed such strength that the workers in the school thought that a pastor might be called. Jesse P. McKnight was invited to become pastor, and on the second Lord's day in February he formally instituted a church with eighty-seven members. Sixty of this number came from the First church. Under Brother McKnight's able direction this work at once bounded into popularity and grew rapidly. The members of the First church about a year before had purchased a lot for church purposes. This was made over to the Magnolia avenue church. They added frontage to this lot and began the matter of a building. A very modest building was planned at first, but the rapidly growing work demanded enlargement, and, as a result, there has been erected one of the handsomest and most complete churches in the city. It is, perhaps, the best building, in many respects, in our southern California brotherhood.

The membership has grown from 87 to 280 members without any protracted meeting, and this handsome $20,000 building has been erected. The building is English gothic in style, 65x108 on its foundation. The building is cement covered with ornamentation of staff work. The auditorium and Sunday-school room are circular in form, separated by very high doors, which, when dropped, throw the two rooms into one immense room capable of seating one thousand people. Wide galleries encircle both auditorium and Sunday-school room. The pulpit and choir platform are lighted with invisible incandescent lights. Above the platform and choir is a very large organ loft, permitting the finishing of the pipe organ with pipes for both rooms. The Sunday-school room is built with all modern conveniences for Sunday-school work, with individual class rooms, primary room, officers' rooms. In the basement there are commodious dining room, kitchen, pantry, furnace room and all the necessary facilities for caring for the social side of the work of the church.

Chas. C. Chapman, president of the southern California missionary society, dedicated the new house to the worship of God. The whole service was made one sacred act of worship. Something over $9,000 was raised during the day. Bro. B. F. Coulter preached at the afternoon communion service and Bro. A. C. Smither at the evening service. L. M. Anderson.

PERRY, MO.

A cut of the handsome new building of the Christian church at Perry, Mo., adorns the first page of this issue of the Christian-Evangelist. The structure was dedicated free of debt on Lord's day, July 30, Bro. F. M. Rains conducting the services.

The building is one of the very best in that entire section of the state, and, including the lot on which it stands, cost about $13,000. The last $3,000 of this amount was raised just before the building was dedicated. The new church home is 74x56 feet, built of pressed brick with stone trimmings, has all the latest arrangements for light and heat and is supplied with all the necessary rooms for the work of an up-to-date congregation. The Perry Christian church is a child of the Lick Creek church, and was organized March 1, 1891, by Henry F. Davis (at that time state Sunday-school evangelist, now manager of the book department of Christian Publishing Co.) with a membership of ninety-four. It now has a membership of 300. J. M. Bailey is pastor.

SENDAI, JAPAN.

The Sendai church was dedicated Sunday, May 21. At the regular morning service Brother Hagin, of Tokyo, preached a good sermon on the "Lord's Prayer." Brethren Kawamura and Hasegawa, the evangelists from Akoyu and Fukushima, presided at the Lord's table, the individual communion service being used.

The public dedication service was held in the afternoon, the pastor, Mr. Takagi, presiding. The scripture was read by Mr. Sawaki, the young evangelist from Sanuma, who is a member of the Sendai congregation. A special English song was sung by the young men and women of the church. The sermon was preached by Brother Guy of the Drake Bible college on the subject "Christianity as a Universal Religion." A statement of the building fund and the purpose of the building was made by M. B. Madden. Congratulatory addresses were made by the mayor of Sendai, Mr. Hayakawa; Rev. A. K. Faust, representative of the Sendai missionaries; Rev. Mr. Katagiri, pastor of the Congregational church, representative of Sendai churches, and Rev. Mr. Kawamura, representative of visiting brethren. The audience numbered over two hundred.

The new chapel is in a good location. The land is part of the highest point in Sendai at the junction of three streets. The capacity of the building is a little over two hundred and the cost, including land, was about $1,500. The membership is now over one hundred, but twelve are in Manchuria at the seat of war, five are in the barracks, one is preaching near Sendai, and many are in school in different parts of the Empire.

M. B. Madden.

SENECA, MO.

On Sunday afternoon, June 11, the church at Seneca, Mo., dedicated its new house of worship.

As a result of a two weeks' meeting in the summer of 1891, conducted by D. W. Moore, now pastor of the South street Christian church, Springfield, Mo., a congregation of 30 members was organized. With no house of worship and with irregular preaching the congregation continued a rather precarious existence until May, 1896, when, as a result of a meeting conducted by Morgan Morgans and S. P. Hart, the membership was increased to 50. But in the storm of May 30, 1896, a large part of the town of Seneca, including the Methodist church building (in which the congregation met) was destroyed. This misfortune greatly discouraged the Disciples and not until the beginning of 1903 did the church manifest any life. In a meeting held by Joseph Gaylor, May 21, 1905, and a second meeting by Brother Gaylor assisted by F. M. O'Neal, the membership was increased to 85. The new house cost $3,008, is 32x48 feet in dimensions, built of brick, furnished with comfortable oak pews, heated with a furnace and has a seating capacity of 300. T. A. Abbott, secretary of the Missouri state missionary society, conducted the dedication service.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Sunday, Aug. 6, was a big day at the Central Park Christian church at Topeka. In the morning the sermon was preached by C. A. Polson, the new pastor. At the close of the service an entire family of six took membership with the congregation. In the afternoon the building was formally dedicated to the Lord, W. S. Lowe conducting the service. After a sermon appropriate to the occasion the sum of $1,500 was called for; this was subsequently raised. This provides for all indebtedness, save a small loan from the Board of Church Extension. The dedicatory prayer was offered by D. Y. Donaldson, who, assisted by Singing Evangelist Bert I. Bentley, follows with a series of meetings to continue throughout the month of August.

This new house of worship is one of the finest in the city and is thoroughly modern and complete in every respect. It will seat about four hundred persons.

THE HOUSE OF GOD.—Psalm 84.

The Divine Presence. The omnipresence of God has ever been difficult for man to realize. Compelled by his habitation in a material body to occupy but one point in space at a time, he can scarcely comprehend the laws of pure spirit according to which the living God may inhabit the universe. When this consciousness does come to him, man bows humbly before his Maker and feels his own impotence. Such scriptures as Gen. 28:16, 17; Psalm 139, and John 4:20-24, elevate our minds above their material ideals of the divine nature, and help us to understand that the whole universe is but a vast temple of Jehovah. Yet so long as man is confined within the limits of this material world, he will feel the need of local sanctuaries, where he may meet with those of like spiritual aspirations, for worship and communion. And thus the house of God becomes to him a place sacred above all others.

1. Its Blessed Privileges: Communion with God. Psa. 27:4; 42:1,2; 84:1-4. The human soul needs the divine companionship, and worship is as native thereto as are hunger and thirst to the body. The certainty with which man calls upon the name of God in the hour of sudden distress and terror proves that this is the normal refuge for him. Barren is the life that enjoys no daily communion with the heavenly Father. It is like the desert with its waste of sand, glistening beneath the burning sun, but bringing forth no beauty or fragrance, producing neither flower nor fruit. But he who enjoys daily fellowship with God is like a garden, planted with the tree of righteousness, refreshed by the rivers of waters, and bringing forth its fruit in its season. Psalm 1. The meetings of the sanctuary help to cultivate and enlarge this communion.

2. Its Blessed Opportunity: Ministry to Man. Psa. 42:4; 122:1-7; Hebrews 10:19-25. "As iron sharpeneth iron, so doth a man the countenance of his friend," says the wise man. There is in the worship of the congregation that power of mutual faith and devotion that intensifies the emotions and deepens the convictions of the soul. As the electrician will construct his dynamo by combining the power of many coils of wire, so the gathering together of a multitude of believers increases the spiritual power of the separate units, and makes the whole more than a mere sum of the parts. If Disciples of Christ only realized the power for good that simple fidelity to the public services of the church would accomplish for themselves and others, our houses of worship would be crowded on the Lord's day, our midweek prayer-meetings would not be a laughing stock to the world because of the criminal indifference with which they are treated by the church members, and the number of conversions would be many times multiplied.

3. Its Blessed Security: A Shelter from Temptation and Trouble. Psa. 84:10, 11; 27: 5, 6. No Christian ever went from a reverent hour of worship at the church into an evil way. Thousands have been seduced to follow the wrong because neglect of the house of God had weakened their will and seared their conscience. We need a revival of faithful church attendance, so that the Lord's day, the Lord's house, the Lord's supper and the Lord's word may have their rightful influence upon our lives.

THE CAPTIVITY OF JUDAH.—2 Chron. 36:11-21.

Memory verses, 19-21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be sure your sin will find you out.—Num. 32:23.

The failing of the Hebrew people, which brought them to their low estate, brought upon them the displeasure of Jehovah and finally plunged them in the abyss of national ruin, was a curious mixture of faith and unfaith. At times their religious leaders must rebuke them for their lack of faith in the power and mercy of their God, and at other times the chief work of the prophets was to disturb the false serenity of the people and assure them that their expectation of sudden and miraculous deliverance was vain and futile.

There were many occasions when the deliverance of the nation from imminent peril at the hands of its more powerful enemies gave assurance of Jehovah's special care for Israel and his transcendent power. Through centuries of history, this lesson was driven home to the people until they learned it well. They learned it too well, for in their decadent days, their faith took the form of a superstitious belief that, in any emergency, God would deliver them because his own glory and honor were so bound up with the fate of Israel that he could not afford to see them too severely treated, no matter how much they might deserve it.

When it came to the final crisis in the reign of Zedekiah, Jeremiah saw, with the wisdom of inspiration, that it was no longer possible to hope for deliverance from the enemies which were overwhelming the nation. Such a deliverance would not have been a vindication of Jehovah, but a vindication of the wickedness and idolatry which had marked the history of the nation for generations. But now, when the case was most desperate, the old popular faith flamed up, and Jeremiah, whose counsel was good sense as well as good religion, was despised as disloyal and even as lacking in proper faith in Jehovah's delivering power.

Read the colloquy between Jeremiah and the popular and "patriotic" prophet Hananiah on this subject, when the latter declared confidently that within two years the power of Babylon would be broken (Jer. 28).

But the counsels of the anti-prophetic party prevailed. Zedekiah, weak and flexible, was easily led into doing the mock-heroic thing, the foolish and fatally dangerous thing, as weak people often are. He revolted against Nebuchadrezzar, contrary to his oath, and the crash was not long delayed. The king of Babylon came upon Jerusalem not simply to conquer it—he had conquered it before and found that it would not be quiet even under oath—but to make his conquest permanently effective by the most terrible measures. The siege lasted a year and a half. There were horrors of famine and pestilence within the city. For some hint of the awful conditions, which the chronicler does not pause to describe, see Lamentations 2:19-52.

The deportation of the survivors of the siege was in keeping with the oriental customs of conquest. It was the fate which the northern kingdom of Israel had suffered at the hand of Assyria a century and a quarter before. Indeed, the policy had already been partially applied to Judah in the deportation of the successive kings following Josiah, each doubtless accompanied by a more or less numerous company of his nobles.

In the destruction of the city was fulfilled not only the immediate prediction of Jeremiah who had been declaring that it was useless to resist the power of Babylonia, but the whole course and tenor of the prophetic teaching which had been that God would bless his people only so long as they were faithful to him and that he would overthrow and destroy them if they persisted in their evil ways.

THE ABUNDANT LIFE: HOW GET IT; HOW USE IT.—John 10:7-10; Rom. 5:19-21.

(Consecration.)

For the Leader.

We have come to the first meeting of the month once more. This means that it is a consecration. That should mean much more to us than it ever has. One can remember the time when some of our societies looked upon the monthly consecration meeting with a degree of suspicion. It was feared that this might be a type of the old time mourner's bench religion. We soon came to see that it was far from this. However, none the less earnest and sincere, but founded upon a more intelligent and, let us say, gospel conception of the service Jesus desires us to render to him. But the worst attitude of all to the consecration meeting is the one that gives it neither the attention of opposition nor the attention of adoption. Indifference is the term that expresses the modern and dangerous turn things have taken with too many young people. Can we not to-night awaken a desire for a closer walk with God in all our hearts? Let us try.

For the Members.

1. The subject of consecration to-night is taken up under the caption of The Abundant Life. What life is that? Have we ever stopped to look into it in this way? The abundant life—what does that mean of the other life? May it not, does it not, mean that there is a life of skimping, of leanness, of scarcity, of want? Yes, this is just what it implies. Which life, would you think, is the abundant life, the one we live at a hit-and-miss gait, or the one we live under the direction of God? Certainly the one under God. Then the abundant life is the life God gives. Then the abundant life is the natural life. Then the abundant life is the life that is richest, cheapest, and the one that brings greatest happiness. Let no one say any more that it is not natural to us to do the right.

2. How are we to get the abundant life? One more correctly answers that it is not a thing to get, but a thing to accept, to choose, to do. The old idea of getting religion was all right from its own standpoint, but it is very misleading, to say the least. It leads to an external conception of things religious. It makes what we get through Jesus something from without. It makes it an external thing. Such is a great mistake. It is from within. Jesus stirs up my heart and makes me under his help do all that is justly called a part of the abundant life. The basis of all I am here, and all I am to be hereafter is in me. Like the great feast of the five thousand, the basis of all the feast being the few loaves and fishes, so all God is to make of me, he is to do by working upon me. I am the raw material. We get, or better, do, the abundant life through yielding to the direction of Cod. In other words, we find it in obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

3. How are we to use the abundant life? Well, this is a question that probably should never have been asked, for the abundant life is itself a use of things when we get right down to the facts in the case. But there are many who have accepted Jesus who have not lived up to the full extent of their obligations or opportunities. The best of us need to learn new lessons of further obedience and duty to God. Our abundant lives can be intensified many times over. The Christian life as it is presented to one who has named the name of Jesus, how to live it, how to use one's ability, influence—these questions make up the composite question, How use the abundant life? In matter of time we give to the Lord's work, one is safe in saying the use of the Christian life will give more time to work of the church than any of us have given. Is not that true? In matter of money, is it not true that we will give more of our money, of God's money, into his work? The selfishness, respectable selfishness, of this day is a dreadfully sinful thing. In matter of talent, shall we not give more to God? Shall we not expect, yes, even long, to see the brightest and most promising young persons give themselves to the ministry and to missions?

Quiet Hour Thought.

Is my use of the abundant life such as gives me confidence when I think of the time when I shall see him face to face?

The Holy Spirit.

I welcome the work as a timely contribution and a much needed resetting of the views of our brethren concerning his important doctrine of Christian faith.

I have so far failed to discover any position out of harmony with "our" teaching —or at least with any conception of our plea. On the contrary, there is such a strength of statement, and our main positions have been so thoroughly and clearly set forth, that the work must remove the misconceptions and misapprehensions of us, under which so many of our religious neighbors labor.

It is true that Brother Garrison has subjected himself to some verbal criticism by his departure from our hackneyed way of treating this subject. I am not sure that the first chapter on "The Tri-Personality" is agreeable to our method of statement; but I am sure that the position taken is my own. It seems to me that he is speaking to those not of our own household, and meeting the charge of unitarianism which used to be hurled against us, in a language which they can understand—a way of their own. In speaking of our hackneyed way, I do not intend any reflection upon the safe and sound rule of "speaking of Bible things in Bible terms." But we can speak in Bible terms in a very unbiblical way. In the emphasis of one truth, we may sometimes become culpably silent as to other essential truths. It is refreshing, therefore, to find a treatment so true and yet so unbiased, so free from the restrictions we have thrown around this subject. We are far more obligated to preach the truth of the Holy Spirit's operation through the gospel, than the converse, that this operation is not by magical means or without means. The book is affirmative throughout, concerned in exhibiting the truth, and encouraging the reader to the realization of his personal relationship to the Holy Spirit.

The arrangement is logical, and aids the reader to a clear understanding of the subject. I have written against the first five chapters this order: I. The Holy Spirit—Who is he? II. Where do we learn of him? III. How do we become related to him? IV. What is that relationship? V. What are the blessed consequences? In answering these questions I not only am led to understand the Spirit better, but myself as a Christian also. Then there follows the larger view of the relationship of the Spirit to the church. The Head, the inauguration of his reign, the manifestation, the means, the purpose, the necessity, the assurance—no simpler or more logical arrangement can be desired, in my judgment. Roger L. Clark.

A Helpful Statement.

The Editor, Christian-Evangelist: I want to tell you that I am greatly pleased with the helpful way in which you state the relation of baptism to forgiveness. I also want to thank you for a clear statement of my own convictions on the subject. I have two extracts from the Christian-Evangelist that express what I mean. In issue of June 15, in answering F. M. Cummings' question, this sentence occurs: "This can mean no less than that God has linked baptism along with a penitent faith as a condition of remission of sins, and this, as we believe, in order to help men to reach an assurance of such forgiveness."

The other, which I copied some time ago, expresses the same thought. It is this: "Baptism is not a penalty inflicted on men for being wicked, but a gracious help offered men who are seeking God and the assurance of pardon."

I fear the subject is too rarely so presented. Might it not be worth while to call special attention to these two statements? L. E. Murray.

Indianapolis, Ind.

[We know of no better way of calling "special attention to these two statements" than by printing the foregoing letter from Brother Murray. It is the way we have conceived the relation of baptism to remission of sins for many years, and it relieves our position on that subject from any suspicion of sacramentarianism, and brings it into thorough harmony with God's gracious character and the spiritual nature of Christianity.—Editor.]

"Cut Out the Truck Grower."

Dr. Lhamon's "Pertaining to the Ministry" was full of things vitally important and of vital interest. However, Brother Lewellen suggests "cut out the truck grower" that more young men enter the ministry. I fail to see the consistency of the statement. How can truck growing spiritually unfit a man for the ministry? One and all recognize finance must be a consideration when considering the ministry. Very many ministers are largely responsible for their meager finance. They are fearful that calloused palms would not look well in the pulpit. It is against their make-up to take an occasional sweat through manual exertion. After a few hours in their library they prefer to stroll down town rather than toward the truck patch. An old doctor once told me a man never needed rest so much as change. I have made this a strict rule of activity. Instead of pacing the library floor, outlining a sermon, fathoming a personality, meditating the needs, likes and dislikes of my congregation, I do these while wielding the hoe or driving the cultivator. Is not six hours a day for five days enough for all reasonable sermonizing and research? Now, steward, what are you doing with the rest of your time? This is pretty much my modus operandi, and I have never had board nor layman say (or I dare say think) they were any the worse for my being a trucker. The Lord's work is given preeminence in all things, yet my gardens replenish the table and reduce the store bill. Again, on an $800 salary, even though trucking be held in contempt, who cannot "lay up" $100 a year, at the end of forty years, $4,000—$2,000 for a home, $2,000 for sustenance. I am alarmed at the scarcity of young men preparing for the ministry. What shall we do? Preach for young men. Pray for them for the ministry. Talk it personally while in pastoral rounds. Magnify the graciousness, the happiness, the comforts, the blessedness, of the ministry, and he who doeth all things well will give the merited reward. J. D. Pontius.

"Do you keep 'The Christian Worker'?" inquires a friend from Brooklyn. No, we do not, it is too good a book to keep, but we are sending them out at 75 cents each and no one has ever complained of not getting the worth of his or her money. It is good for young ministers, or older ones, it is good for elders and deacons to have with them, and it is good for any one wishing information on the church and its organization, equipment, service and work. Any consecrated Christian is helped by it.

ANDREWS.

Mrs. Elizabeth E. Andrews, of Kansas City, Mo., was married June 29 to Leonard D. Andrews, of Leavenworth, Kan., and she died July 3 from apoplexy, after an illness of only 10 hours, while on their trip to Excelsior Springs, Mo.

BAILEY.

L. Y. Bailey was born in Springfield, Tenn., Jan. 9, 1838. He grew to manhood in southern Missouri, attended college at Columbia, Mo., and graduated in law at Cincinnati, O. Giving much time to teaching in his earlier and middle life, he served in the Union army for three years during the civil war, making an honorable record as a soldier. Although brought up in a Presbyterian home, Brother Bailey's own study convinced him that the people who would be Christians only occupied the correct position and he became an enthusiastic advocate of the restoration movement. Preferring the work of the ministry, he led many souls to life through his earnest preaching of the word. Brother Bailey was twice married and was the father of nine children, five of whom, with Sister Bailey, survive him. He died in Portland, Ore., July 10, 1905, aged 67 years, six months and one day. The funeral service was conducted by the writer, assisted by J. F. Ghormley. Thus ends a life whose ministerial labors will be remembered in parts of Minnesota, Kansas and Oregon, and all who knew him will unite in saying that a good man has gone to his reward.

ALBYN ESSON.

Portland, Oregon.

BOBBITT.

P. A. Bobbitt was born March 28, 1832, and married J. H. Bobbitt, Aug. 1, 1848. She joined the Christian church soon after and lived a devoted life until her death, at Sprague, Mo., July 14, 1905.

BOOKER.

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Booker died in Upper Alton, Ill., on July 2, 1905, at the age of 60 years, eight months and 10 days. Her early life was at Scottville, Ill., where she married Dr. R. B. Booker, who with one son survives her. Sister Booker was very active in the Lord's work and assisted in the establishment of the cause at Carlinville, and in the recent effort to plant a congregation at Alton where her loss is sorely felt. She was a noble Christian woman of spiritual culture. Funeral services were at the Alton home by the writer and the body was interred at Jerseyville.

EDWARD O. SHARPE.

BROWN.

Frank Brown, born in Bourbon county, Ky., Aug. 22, 1835, died at his home in Cherokee, Kan., July 10, 1905, aged 79 years, 10 months and 18 days. He was married first to Elizabeth Browning and again to Miss Elizabeth Smither, of Rushville, Ill., who survives him. Eight children were the fruits of his second marriage, five of whom are living. He early in life accepted the Savior and was faithful in the discharge of his religious duties. He was for many years an official of the Christian church. Consistent in all things his was a model life. The funeral service was conducted at the Christian church by W. C. Willey, assisted by Rev. W. T. Freeland.

CAMPBELL.

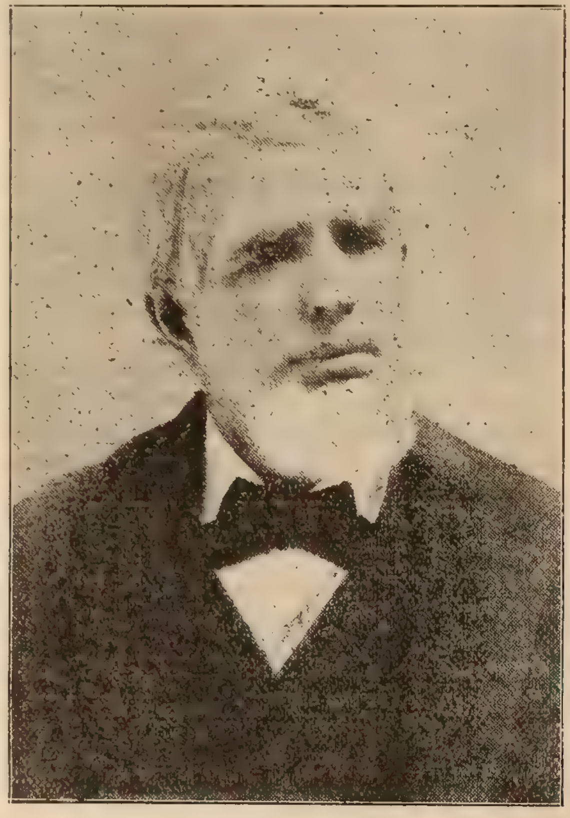
David Campbell, stung by bees, died in six hours. Brother Campbell was born in Pike county, Ill., Aug. 9, 1844. When a small child his parents removed to Adams county where they resided until the spring of 1852, whence they removed across the plains to the Willamette valley, arriving at Scholls in September of the same year. He has made Washington county his home during all these intervening years. On Dec. 25, 1873, he was married to Miss Agnes Flemming, to which union were born two children—Sylvia Estella and Pearly Claude—the latter having preceded the father by some months to the spirit land. Early in life deceased became a Christian at Farmington, serving acceptably as elder of that church for a long time. Thenceforward until death he served as trustee of the Hillsboro church. The funeral took place from the Christian church.

A. H. MULKEY.

Hillsboro, Oregon.

GARVEY.

Samuel Garvey was born Aug. 27, 1825, died at his home in Buffalo, Ill., July 25, 1905, aged 79 years, 10 months and 28 days. Brother Garvey was born in Owen county, Ky., and came with his parents to Sangamon county, Ill., when he was about six years old. His father settled on a farm near the Mechanicsburg and Buffalo assembly grounds. Here young Samuel, together with the other children of the family, grew to the years of manhood by sturdy toil in those pioneer days of Illinois, while yet the Indian wigwams were to be seen along the banks of Clear Creek. Brother Garvey was of Scotch extraction. His grandfather Garvey fought in the revolutionary war and his father in the war of 1812.



SAMUEL GARVEY.

On July 31, 1849, Samuel Garvey was united in marriage to Sarah A. Gideon. To this union were born the following children: Mary A. (deceased), the wife of David Fletcher, of Buffalo, Ill.; Annie M., the wife of Geo. Ellington, of Buffalo; Katherine J., the wife of Jacob Rogers, of Mechanicsburg, Ill.; Henry C., of Buffalo; and Scott, who died in 1871 at four years of age. Besides these he leaves the following brothers and sisters: William Garvey, Mrs. Nancy Hampton and Mrs. Jane Peden, of Illiopolis, and John Garvey and Mrs. Mary Hampton, of Mechanicsburg.

Brother Garvey obeyed the gospel at Mechanicsburg in the year 1850 under the ministry of Elder Kane. Together with his wife, who entered into life Aug. 3, 1894, he was for many years connected with the Mechanicsburg church, having served as one of the elders. He was very active in those early days in building up the work both at Mechanicsburg and Buffalo, having baptized scores of men and women with his own hands. He was chiefly instrumental in founding the church at Buffalo and served as one of its efficient elders to the time of his death. It is also due Brother Garvey to say that his family was reared in the fear of God, all of his children, as well as his brothers and sisters, being active and prominent members of the Christian church.

He was a diligent student of our literature, having been an enthusiastic reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from the time of its first issue. On the evening before his departure, like the patriarch Jacob of old, he gathered his children and grandchildren around his bed and admonished them to be faithful Christians. He was very methodical in all of his plans and he carried them out to the end. Having chosen Eccl. 12, the writer was sent for soon after to read and pray with him. After the lesson was read and the prayer offered, he turned to one of his daughters and said, "Now, I am ready to go," and immediately lapsed into unconsciousness, from which he never rallied. Earlier in the evening when one of his townsmen came to ask him how he felt, he replied,

> "On Jordan's stormy bank I stand,
> And cast a wishful eye
> To Canaan's fair and happy land,
> Where my possessions lie."

The funeral service was attended by a large concourse of people from the surrounding country, Illiopolis and Springfield. The writer was assisted by Elder Best, of the M. E. church at Buffalo, and Elders John Lemmon and Thos. Underwood, of the Christian church at Springfield. Interment took place in the Mechanicsburg cemetery on July 27. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit." And also he saith, "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching."

L. A. CHAPMAN.

WILSON.

Mrs. Lucinda E. Wilson died at her home in Carlinville, Ill., on June 19, 1905, at the age of 55 years and 22 days. She was married to Bro. John Wilson at Shaw's Point in Macoupin county, Ill., in 1877, and they have since lived there and in Carlinville. Three children were given, two, a son and a daughter, now living with their father and mourning the loss of a true Christian wife and mother. Sister Wilson was a charter member of Carlinville church and always an earnest supporter of the cause and an inspiration to her pastor. Funeral services by the writer and Pastor Applegate at Carlinville.

The Rose of Old St. Louis. By Mary Dillon, with Illustrations by Andre Castaigne and C. M. Relyea. (Century Co., New York. Price $1.50. 460 pages.)

Though this review appears rather belated, it is none the less appreciative. The story is one that was peculiarly appropriate to make its appearance at the time of the St. Louis World's Fair, for, though it is primarily a love story of the conventional kind, there is embodied in it all the essential history of the Louisiana Purchase and many excellent descriptions of life in St. Louis a century ago are given. Further than this the book presents pictures of life in Washington and Paris and many of the men who figured in the Louisiana Purchase. It is of the romantic style of fiction without very much of the swashbuckling element, and will beguile pleasantly the odd moments that one gives to light reading.

Doctor Luke of the Labrador, by Norman Duncan. (Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Toronto, London and Edinburgh. 331 pages. Price $1.50 net.)

Norman Duncan has made his name with his first novel. It is not a book of a day but one that can be taken up and read again and again. It is a sincere, simple story, but it is a story by an inspired poet. The life of the Labrador fisherman is made to stand out with all the brilliancy and strength of a great picture. This is Mr. Duncan's first effort in sustained writing, but there is in it all the charm and subtlety which has made his short stories so acceptable, while there is nothing lacking in the interest of this more ambitious effort. It is a story that touches the heart, a story of mother love, a story of heroic qualities, a story of the winning of a great fight. For its picturesque presentation of the life not familiar to us the book is in itself worth reading. It is really literature.

A Yankee on the Yangtze. By William Edward Geil. (Cloth crown, 8 vo. Price $1.50 net. A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York.)

Some extracts from this book have already appeared in the pages of the Christian-Evangelist. It is one of the most readable books on missionary life that we have come across, being a narrative of a journey from Shanghai through the central kingdom of China and Burmah, under the special protection of the imperial government. The author took this long trip across the entire breadth of China in order that he might see and report on, in an unbiased way, the work that Christian missions are doing in the celestial kingdom. It was soon after the Boxer movement that he made the journey, and he had everywhere opportunities that are not accorded to the usual traveler. While assisted by officialdom, Mr. Geil relied more on his own personal eyes and ears to make himself acquainted with the situation in the flowery kingdom. His book is the animated record of travel that is as interesting as a novel, but it is at the same time a fine defense of Christian mission work by an unbiased observer. We wish we had space to quote many of the good things in which the book abounds.

The King and His Kingdom. By J. Carroll Stark, Verbi Dei Minister. Published by the author, Hamilton, Ill., 1902.

This work consists of 528 pages, and is divided into two parts; the first treating of theology and the last and second of church organization. Although published first three years ago this book has just fallen under our notice, the author having kindly sent us a copy with a request that we review the same. We learn from the preface that the author's chief motive in writing the book is to give an "outline of the scriptural system of church organization" which the author believes to be far superior to "our Bethany Republican system." The first part of his work, however, as already indicated, deals with theological problems and under this head the author treats of the "Work of the Holy Spirit." On this subject we regret to say there is much that we cannot approve and much that seems to us a belittling of the New Testament teaching on this sublime topic. Space forbids us to give an adequate statement of the author's position but it will suffice to say that he believes the personal work of the Holy Spirit was finished in the days of the apostles, and that the word which he inspired and which was placed on record by the apostles is the only Holy Spirit accessible to the people of to-day. The radical misconception of the work, as it seems to us throughout, is an over-emphasis of the intellectual side of Christianity and an under-emphasis of its heart side or the affections out of which are the issues of life. "The Holy Spirit," he tells us, "in sanctification and justification must act upon the world to whom it cannot go only through the words he speaks," page 174. "Jesus is the light of the world, only because of the words he spoke," page 208. "As I have shown, the Holy Spirit gives no light except through the word," page 209. The gift of the Holy Spirit promised in Acts 2:38 is not the Holy Spirit, but salvation, page 213. These quotations sufficiently indicate, perhaps, the position of the author on the subject of the Holy Spirit.

The closing chapters of the book on "Finance" and "New Testament Praise," in the first of which the author advocates the tithing system, and in the latter justifies the use of instrumental music, are strong and convincing.

On the subject of church government the author does not believe in congregationalism. "It was never the business of the church to appoint its own officials. The disciples testify of his qualifications, and if he is found qualified the evangelist appoints," page 319. He would not limit this method, we judge, to the original founding of churches by evangelists, but apply it to all churches. His emphasis on the necessity of selecting officials with proper qualifications is well placed, though we doubt if his theory of casting lots to choose between those possessing proper qualifications would commend itself to our time.

The author is a man of decided convictions and expresses himself forcibly if not elegantly, and there is a great deal in the book that is commendable. It is about twice the size that it would be but for its repetitions, and is sadly blemished by typographical errors. For information concerning price of book, etc., address the author as above.

Family Circle

When Buckwheat Bloomed.

By Margaret E. Sangster.

A woman with a worn face and a look of drooping weariness came to the farmhouse door in the lingering summer dusk. A golden after-glow lit the sky. The lilies in the round garden bed perfumed the air. Crickets chirped. Now and then a bird slowly uttered a single note. From a thicket near by floated the plaintive cry of the whippoorwill.

The woman shaded her eyes with her hand, and gazed across the nearer meadows to a field skirting a brook, where a glimmering of green and white shone in the half light, almost as if it were snow under the moon. She could just descry two figures walking slowly beside the brook beyond the buckwheat.

"Doris and John Holmes!" she said to herself. "Doris Deane and John Holmes! And the buckwheat is in bloom!"

"Mrs. Deane."

A querulous voice summoned the watcher from the door. With a stifled sigh, she turned, went in, and made comfortable for the night her crippled neighbor, whom she and her husband had taken in, because no one else in the township would consent to be bothered with a person at once so helpless and so disagreeable.

"Do you know, Mrs. Deane," said the neighbor, "that your Doris is over by the buckwheat field, talking with that miserable, no-account Johnny Holmes? I'm surprised that Doris, with her education, will waste her time on a trifling body like John."

"I know all about it, Mrs. Arch," said the mother.

"Does Rufus know about it, too?"

"Yes."

"And you don't interfere?"

"No, Mrs. Arch, we don't interfere. Doris is of age. She must choose for herself. We both like John Holmes."

Mrs. Deane gently closed the door of the invalid's room, and went out on her little back porch. The work of the day was done at last. It had been a long, hot August day, and there was a good deal to get through between five o'clock in the morning and bed-time. Rufus Deane joined his wife. He was a short man, thick-set, with kindly eyes and a firm chin. His eyes were blue; his wife's, beautiful yet, were a soft liquid brown, the brown of a pool that slumbers for the most part, but sometimes breaks into sudden light. The two, hard-working, quiet people had in common many things: a simple faith in God, and answering loyalty to each other, an indifference to money, and a great love for their daughter Doris.

She was their only surviving child. Three others, who had died in their infancy, lay in the churchyard. Doris had been the inheritor of the affection that, had the others lived, would have been divided among the four. Or, perhaps, that is not the best way to state it, since every child brings and keeps its own share of love. But Doris seemed to her parents to possess the sweetness of the little ones they had lost, and an added exquisite charm and loveliness that were her own. She was a dear daughter, unspoiled by their fondness. Love does not spoil. Ambition does, and injustice may, but true love never injures its object.

"Mother!" said Rufus after a while.

"Yes, father."

"Our little girl is a woman. She's a woman! John and she will be marrying one of these days."

"Do you think, Rufus," Mrs. Deane leaned forward and spoke with energy, "that he is worthy of our Doris?"

"I've never seen the fellow that is, but I know no harm of John."

"Well, but he's a Holmes, and you know how his father behaved to my sister Emily. He courted her, as John is courting Doris, in the same season of the year, Rufus, when the buckwheat was in flower, and then—then he went to town and forgot her, and married John's mother. And poor Emily died."

"Aleck Holmes was a poor stick—not one to tie to. But John may be different. We must not judge him by his father. I wouldn't like to thwart Doris, would you?"

"No, I couldn't. But I certainly distrust the family."

Silence fell between them. It was broken by Doris, who came running up breathless, with John close behind her.

The young people were laughing. Doris was tall and slender like her mother, with her mother's eyes. But there was a look of firmness that came to her from her father. John Holmes was a fine, well-knit, clean-limbed man, his face somewhat aggressive, his bearing resolute. Mrs. Deane looking at him owned to herself that he was not of the same type as his father. He had derived some strength from his mother, whom, for Emily's sake, Mrs. Deane had never liked.

"Give us your blessing," the young fellow said. "Doris has promised to be my wife."

"Father, mother," cried Doris, "what do you think? Can we be married to-morrow?"

Her parents rose to their feet. Mr. Deane put up a hand as if to push John Holmes away. Mrs. Deane caught Doris in her arms.

"My child, are you crazy?"

"Not I, dearest. Never less so. John is to start for South America in two days. He has a railroad to cut through a pass of the Andes. He may be gone a twelvemonth. We wish to be married before he goes. But I will stay with you till he returns, or sends for me. At present he cannot take a wife into the rough country, and I'd rather my husband went into all that danger than my—sweetheart. If anything happened to John I could go to him, you know."

"Doris," her father asked sternly, "whose plan is this? Yours or John's?"

She blushed like a rose, but met his gaze without flinching.

"It's both our plans, dear father. But down by the buckwheat I thought I'd rather stay here as John's wife than as the girl he was engaged to."

"If you will consent, sir," put in John Holmes, "I will step up to the parsonage and speak to Mr. Ives. I shall have to leave Doris very soon after the wedding, but you'll take care of her for me. I'll be back again, please God, in a year or in two years."

So it was arranged. Jonn was an engineer; his career was marked out before him, young as he was, he had already achieved distinction. To Mrs. Deane the hurry seemed unusual and indiscreet. But, on the morrow, when the minister pronounced the solemn and fateful words that pledged two lives to enduring fidelity, and the village people and neighbors, hastily summoned, stood by with sympathy and admiration blended in their kind faces, John's mother came to Mrs. Deane, and spoke to her gently apart.

"My dear," she said, "I am so glad. Doris is the girl of all the world I'd choose for my son's wife. And now, now, won't you forgive me at last? I never knew about Emily until I was married. I've always known you blamed me, but in deed and in truth I did not know. And John Holmes is like Gibraltar. You may safely trust Doris in his care."

John's father, one of the men who never grow old, a man with a boyishness that would last till old age, came smiling up. As for him, in twenty-six years he had hardly given Emily a thought. His love for her had been a transient fancy. The fetters of his brief betrothal he had snapped like cobwebs. Emily's early death had not touched him, except to cause a short regret.

He was talking with Rufus Deane. "Your daughter, sir, reminds me of your wife's sister, who died of a decline the summer after we were married. But she looks stronger. Emily had no stamina. She was fragile, sir, fragile. You know she and I were friends."

"Aleck," his wife interrupted him sharply, "don't keep Mr. Deane talking. John wants us all to go to town to-morrow."

"Is that necessary, Louise?"

"Well, maybe not, but I'm going, and Mr. and Mrs. Deane and Doris. You needn't go unless you like."

"I'll just say good-by here," replied Aleck Holmes, who was averse to needless trouble.

Doris saw John off without a tear, though the red flag in her cheek showed that the heart was beating strongly.

"God keep you, little wife!" he whispered, as he bade her good-by.

Busy days came to the farmhouse after John had gone. The invalid was, if possible, more fretful and exacting than ever, taxing the patience of every one; so unreasonable that only one so invincibly gentle as Mrs. Deane could have borne with her. Doris had her wedding clothes to make, and her outfit, though not elaborate, was very dainty. She insisted on having a good supply of warm clothing, for, "you know, mother," she pleaded, "any day John may send for me!"

Letters came at first by every steamer. Then followed an interval of silence and waiting. Of this John had warned her. The days seemed endless as they crept at a snail's pace, but she made no sign of distress.

"Mother," she said one morning, "having one you love out of sight, where you can't see, and can't hear, and can't touch, one who is wholly yours, but away out of your reach, makes you cling more closely to God. I never seem near to John now except when I pray. Then I often feel as if he had hold of my hand."

"It's meeting at Jesus' feet, Doris, daughter, isn't it?" said the mother, for she knew all about it. Who does not that has lived long?

At last a message came. John wanted his wife. He was at the coast and ill, but Doris need not worry. Only she must come without delay.

Her father and mother demurred. They could not bear to let her go. But she was Doris Holmes, John's wife, as well as their daughter, and she, a country girl, untraveled, never a hundred miles from home before in her life, set off for South America without a tremor. Her courage was boundless. But indeed there was nothing to fear. Every one is ready to serve a young woman setting forth to meet her husband in a strange land.

"I'm afraid she'll not find John," said John's mother, with a shaking voice. "I'm afraid John won't live to see her."

"Nonsense!" cried John's father. "The boy is in no danger. But he was afraid Doris would be kept here if he sent word he was well."

"Not at all. Not at all, man," answered old Rufus Deane. "Some of us have a conscience. A wife's place is with her husband."

Doris found John tired and gaunt, showing the effects of hard service and fever, but by no means discouraged or daunted. He had managed to do what his road required. He had not finished his task. But he wanted his wife near him, where he could sometimes see her, and constantly hear from her.

"I might have pulled through without you, my darling," he said, "but I needed my wife. Yet I feel as if it's hard on the old folk at home."

"They have one another, John."

"Yes, they have one another."

"And Mrs. Arch has left the farm and gone to a sanitarium, so that mother will be less busy and careworn. When people live as my father and mother do, John, things come out right for them in time."

"When people live as we do, Doris," he said, kissing her, "everything is bound to come out right."

His faith was justified. No two lovers have been happier than John and Doris, though they married without wedding pomp and vanities, and had the trials of absence and distance before they met again. They are at home with the old people this summer. There is a rosy baby that looks like them both. And the buckwheat is again in bloom.—The American Messenger. Copyright American Tract Society.

Regimental Reunions and Forty-Second Anniversary Battle Chickamauga,

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 17-21, 1905.

On September 18, 1905, will occur the forty-second anniversary of the battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle, and, in addition, to hold at the same time, a grand reunion of all the regiments that participated in the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notable gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first time since they marched from its blood stained fields, forty-two years ago.

Grand and glorious will be the meeting and all who attend will have cause to rejoice. The lowest rate ever secured has been given the entire public for this occasion, one cent per mile, short line distance.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long before none will be left to do this noble work; take this opportunity and don't let it escape you, it is worth six months in the school room to any student.

It may be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The "Sunset Limited."

Oh, Hush-a-By Land is a beautiful place
For sleepy small people to go,
And the Rock-a-Bye Route is the favorite one
With a certain wee laddie I know.

The track lies on sleepers of feathers and down,
No accidents ever take place;
Though there's only one track, and there's only one train,
But it runs at a wonderful pace.

There are beautiful things to be seen on this route,
If you're good you may take just a peep;
But strange as it seems, they are seen best in dreams;
Be sure that you soon go to sleep.

Say good-night to the Sun, for he 's off to bed too—
He can't hear you, so just wave your hand;
The Moon and the Stars they will light up the cars
As you travel to Hush-a-By Land.

So, quick, jump aboard, it is time to be off,
You have nothing to pay, you young elf;
Just think of the luxury, laddie, you'll have—
A whole sleeping-car to yourself!

A Week with the Woodneys.

THE FIFTH DAY—CONTINUED.

When Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney came in to her invited guests, she seemed to think it a natural thing that she had not been present on their arrival. She explained in an easy manner that some complication had arisen over the arrangements about the new maid; she was expected to morrow; word had come that she had about changed her mind; it had been necessary for Mrs. Woodney to drive out to see her. "Of course," said the hostess, "when it is a question of losing your maid, everything else must be put aside for the time."

"Yes, indeed," said old Mrs. Woodney, "I know just how you feel. You may have relations invited to supper, and they may expect to find you when they come; but a maid is a maid for a' that!"

"Now, aunt Macie," said Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, who did not exactly approve of the old lady's words, "you know without a maid, there can be no suppers or anything else—one cannot live."

"I hope," said Mr. Woodney, "that you prevailed on her to come."

"Oh, yes," said the hostess carelessly, "I raised her wages—that brings all of them to their senses. You know, Cousin Benjamin, you can do anything with plenty of money."

"I do not know from actual experience," rejoined her cousin, "but I am often surprised at what we have been able to accomplish without it."

"Without money?" exclaimed Jennie Woodney, whom a shock of surprise had pushed out into the current of the conversation.

"Yes," said Mr. Woodney, turning his bright face in her direction, "it's surprising!"

"But," said Jennie, drifting aimlessly in the current, "how are you going to do it without money, you know? How can you go off to college, or be—or be anybody, you know? Look at the people in the village without it. There are the Enderthorpes, and Tumbletons—what are they?"

Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, always charmed when her daughter took part in discussions, beamed till the very last word had been said, waited to hear if any more were coming, and then spoke: "Those ridiculous Enderthorpes! Now, Cousin Benjamin, let me tell you. Mrs. Enderthorpe has been an invalid fifteen years and unable to leave her couch except when carried. Yet what does she do? She adopts a crippled orphan on one crutch; yet she has four children of her own! Mr. Enderthorpe has twenty acres rented, and they try to make a living off of it with small fruit. Imagine! Twenty acres!"

"Why doesn't the man rent more land?" demanded old Mrs. Woodney.

"Too poor!" cried her niece, nodding emphatically. "Actually too poor! And yet, with that orphan! And to hear Mrs. Enderthorpe! There she lies on her couch planning for her boys. One is to be a lawyer—that's Bob. A boy absolutely without style. One is to be a doctor—another a civil engineer. And in the meantime they are grubbing among their raspberry and blackberry bushes. They are always discussing the future. Actually, Mrs, Enderthorpe looks at that red-headed Bob of hers, and sees him pleading great cases before the court. And they all look at each other and see each other as each expects to be ten years from now. They don't know they're poor! They actually exist in the future tense."

"What a happy faculty!" cried Mr. Woodney, glowing. "Those are brave ambitions that keep the heart warm."

"Happy?" repeated his cousin. "Oh, I suppose they are. But I don't call that brave; I call it reckless. To themselves, they seem very fine, no doubt, but to others they are just the poor Enderthorpes."

"Well, we are the poor Woodneys," remarked the other cheerfully."

"And the happy Woodneys, too," cried Mace, determined to stand by her colors. "And we have our orphan."

"Your orphan!" echoed Jennie, amazed.

"Why, yes," said Mrs. Geraldine, "a little musician came to our house the other night—"

"Oh, yes, I know," Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney interrupted. "He was here, but we couldn't encourage tramps. Do you mean to say you've taken in that waif? How long do you intend to keep him?"

"I don't know," said Mr. Woodney, "really, I haven't thought about it. As long as he wants to stay, I suppose. He sleeps at Worth Acre's."

"Cousin Benjamin," said his rich cousin coldly, "I think you very unwise, in your circumstances."

"Lucy," enquired old Mrs. Woodney, "how many orphans have you adopted?"

"It has been enough for me," returned her niece stiffly, "to guard my own son and daughter."

"Well, Lucy," rejoined her aunt, "when rich people like you and G. C. D. Woodney can't help the orphans, the Enderthorpes and the poor Woodneys must come to the rescue."

"Speaking of Worth Acre," said Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney somewhat hastily, "have you heard his story, cousin? I mean about him and that insane old man he keeps?"

"Please tell us," cried Mace, who liked the blacksmith more from day to day.

"It will show you what I mean—it will illustrate how those who are down, are kept down. This old Mr. Acre was rich, with a stylish wife and a son and two daughters, all educated to the most finished degree. His children married and he and his wife went to live with one of the daughters in New York. They were great society people, but unfortunately the father, who was many years older than his wife, began to wander in his mind.

They sent him to the other daughter, who lived in Missouri. She was poor, but she kept him till she died. Then they sent him to an asylum. Really, you know, he could not be kept in New York or anywhere else—you can't blame his wife. She's only about seventy-one now, while he is ninety-eight. She's still fond of society, but she couldn't go to receptions and balls and the like with a King Louis of France, you know. The old man is really out of his head, and people would always be asking questions. They say he didn't begin to think himself King Louis till he found himself in the asylum. He imagined the asylum a royal prison, you understand, for it never occurred to him that he had lost his mind. Sometimes he used to have doubts in regard to his wife's sanity, but he never suspected his own. Well, when this Worth Acre grew up, this son of the poor daughter, without any property of his own worth mentioning—now what do you suppose he did?"

"I suppose," said Mr. Woodney, "that he went to that asylum and took him out of it."

"Why, yes," returned Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, "that is just what he did. Imagine! When his own wife, and his own son and daughter thought him unfit to be at large, although they had plenty of property, if they had deemed it wise to keep him out of the asylum, this poor young blacksmith takes that old man home with him and keeps him and all his crazy notions in his very house! He keeps him there till he can build this ridiculous horseshoe house in the village; then he moves here, and they tell me the old man is simply wild with delight at being shut up in his royal prison where he can barricade himself at both ends from morning till night.

"Do his wife and children ever come to see him?" asked Mrs. Geraldine.

"Of course not. By the way, I am expecting a visit from the New York daughter next month; but be sure she won't go near her father; she'd be afraid of him! And it would be very unpleasant, besides. I understand none of the family will have a thing to do with Worth Acre, for meddling in the affair."

"Perhaps," suggested Mr. Woodney, "he did not like the idea of his grandfather's staying in the asylum."

"He was in love with Lizzie Day," continued Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, "and while her sisters wouldn't hear to the marriage on account of his being a blacksmith, still I think it could have been arranged if it were not for this old man. Miss Polly and Miss Susie won't hear to it, and of course Lizzie will do nothing against their wishes. Besides, I think the old man proved a last straw to her as well as to her sisters. You often hear of American ladies marrying for a title; but they are not seeking kings of France for their fathers-in-law."

"I think," cried Mace suddenly, while her eyes flashed, "that Mr. Worth Acre is simply—grand!"

Ed Woodney re-entered, and presently the young people were talking together at one end of the room and their elders at the other. Ed Woodney was more and more pleased to find his relations such as he need not be ashamed of, and in his relief, he was almost enthusiastic in his attentions. He beamed upon the old lady in spite of her sternness, and glanced with open approval at Mrs. Geraldine. But he was most attentive to his cousin Mace. Her vivacity and pretty ways charmed him, and drew forth the best stores of his own entertaining graces. He soon learned that she could play on the piano, not only by note but by ear, and immediately he proposed a musical club. To this club should belong the orphan Arthur Lowell, in whom he was greatly interested, Worth Acre, Bob Enderthorpe, Mace and himself.

"Oh, yes, Worth Acre can play," he assured her; "he has a horn and he'd rather blow it than eat. Besides, he's such a jolly old chap, and it will do him so much good to be with us young folks—I hope you won't object,"

"I am so glad you appreciate him!" cried Mace, smiling into his eyes gratefully. "I think him a hero. But Arthur Lowell will have nothing to do with any music but the strictly classical."

"We'll manage him," said Ed, throwing back his handsome head. "I'll have him scraping ragtime before our second meeting! Do you know Bob Enderthorpe?"

Mace flushed slightly and laughed. "Yes—" and she told about throwing the chickens over his fence. Ed laughed heartily. Jennie smiled vaguely, taking no part in this conversation. The eager enthusiasm of her brother and cousin bewildered her. "Well, Bob plays the guitar. And I play the mandolin. It'll be great! But Mace, I have to go off to college in three weeks. I'm awfully sorry since you've moved here. The club will have to meet three times a week at least to do any good. What do you say? And from house ro house, won't that be fun? Variety, you know, and all that!"

"I will talk to mamma about it," said Mace. "I should like it, oh, very much! Does Marcia Winterfield play?"

"No, indeed, she can't do anything; neither can Sis. But we'll let them come and look on when they want to."

"I couldn't go to Bob Enderthorpe's, you knew," Jennie objected, "or to the blacksmith's."

"Of course you couldn't," her brother agreed. "But the band will play, just the same." They discussed the club from all points of view. When dinner was announced, Mace was all in a glow of happy excitement and anticipation. Her future seemed suddenly to have opened out in broad, generous lines of warmth and color, and not the least attractive of the bright prospect was her cousin Ed, with his handsome face, his merry eyes, his musical laugh, the proud yet graceful way in which he held himself, and the unmistakable feeling of comradeship which he showed for her and for her family.

ANOTHER sound my spirit hears—
A deeper sound that drowns them all:
A voice of pleading choked with tears,
The call of human hopes and fears,

ANNUAL.

Christian Lesson Commentary. The most complete and satisfactory commentary on the lessons for the entire year published by any people. The only commentary on the lessons for 1905 published in the Christian brotherhood.

QUARTERLY.

1. The Beginner's Quarterly, containing a series of lessons for the very little people, arranged along Kindergarten lines.
2. The Primary Quarterly, containing a preparation of the International Lessons for the Primary Department.
3. The Youth's Quarterly, designed for the Intermediate and younger Junior Classes.
4. The Scholar's Quarterly, prepared for the older Juniors and younger Seniors and members of the Home Department.
5. The Bible Student, designed for Advanced Students, Teachers, Superintendents and Ministers.
6. Bible Lesson Picture Roll, printed in eight colors. Each leaf, 26 by 37 inches, contains a picture illustrating one lesson. Thirteen leaves in a set.
7. Christian Picture Lesson Cards. A reduced fac-simile of the large Bible Lesson Picture Roll. Put up in sets, containing one card for each Sunday in quarter.

MONTHLY.

Christian Bible Lesson Leaves.

These Lessons Leaves are especially for the use of Sunday-schools that may not be able to fully supply themselves with Lesson Books or Quarterlies.

WEEKLY.

1. The Little Ones, for the Little Folks, with Beautiful Colored Pictures in every number.
2. The Young Evangelist, for the pupils of the Intermediate Department, with bright Pictures, Lessons and Entertaining Stories.
3. The Round Table, for Boys and Girls who are a little too old for The Young Evangelist, and who have a taste for bright, entertaining stories and practical information.
4. Our Young Folks, a large 16-page Illustrated Weekly, nearly four times as large as the ordinary Sunday-school paper, for Sunday-school Teachers, Advanced Pupils, Christian Endeavorers, and in fact for all Working Members of the Christian Church, with a well-sustained department also for the Home Circle, adapted to the wants of the whole family.
